The funds are appropriated, and we have a say-so as to how we operate the Navy, but the technical concepts by the experts I think should not even be debated by we, the political arm, the Congress; we the representatives of the people. Main Street, Mission, TX—we cannot discuss the technical aspects of how we are going to disburse the Navy. We cannot be selfish to the extent that we will impose, forgive me, our political needs of where we are going to place the Navy's ships.

Somehow the basic interest and the national security have to supersede what we do here, from the technical, concise expertise of those who know that area. Yes, we have the ultimate yea or nay, but we really do not have the expertise.

I would take my expertise from two sons.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DE LA GARZA was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I take my expertise not from the Pentagon, not from the Navy, but from two sailors who are telling me what is best for the Navy. When they ask, what is best for the Navy they are asking what is best for this country.

One of them is out there in the Mediterranean, and he tells me "We need to be dispersed."

We need the Iowa in Corpus Christi. He does not care about what the economic impact in Corpus Christi is, how many jobs, how much housing we need, how we displace people from housing. He is thinking maybe, he is thinking United States of America. That is what he is thinking about. Now forgive me for being personal and deviating to this point, but that is where I think we should take our cues from, the fellow sitting out there in the Mediterranean challenging Mr. Qadhafi's line of death. Now will this take money from the farmers? No. It will not take money from the farmers. Will this take money from housing? No, it is not going to take money from housing. Will this take money from any of the welfare programs? No, it is not going to take money from them.

We are confusing the issue. The issue is the United States of America, the security of the naval forces and my boy's security on a ship in the Mediterranean. That is what I am discussing here today.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DICKS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is absolutely on target. What we are talking about here is a plan carefully crafted with the support of the Chief of Naval Operations, the Secretary of the Navy, and Secretary of Defense, to disperse the fleet, to increase the chances for survivability. We do not want war to come. We hope that our military force will be a deterrent.

But if we spread these ships out, there is a chance that those young men who are serving in the U.S. Navy will have a greater chance to survive. There is absolutely no doubt about that, because if you do not disperse the fleet, if you add over 100 of them into the existing ports, then they are more vulnerable. They nest them four abreast. All these things underline the critical importance, to the young men in that Navy, of survivability.

I think the gentleman has done us a great service to get back to the basics on this issue.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Let me raise one point on this question. I think everybody in this House would agree that New York City, our largest city, is not the No. 1 target, it is right after Washington, for the Soviets.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DE LA GARZA was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman continue to yield?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I continue to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. I thank the gentleman for yielding further.

Mr. Chairman, we would all agree that New York City is the top target in the nuclear age. So we are not talking about past wars, we are talking about current and future situations. To disperse ships to New York makes no sense. That is what the Navy is asking for first, and that is where it is most expensive. That is why I have offered this amendment. New York City is a target, is it not, the No. 1 target?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. If the gentleman would allow me to reclaim my time, there are no targets. Ten bombs will do it. You cannot segregate New York, San Francisco, Corpus Christi, Oklahoma City, Chicago. I mean, I say it with due respect to my friend, this is nonsense. Ten bombs will do us all in.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. We cannot be segregating the areas, we cannot be segregating the areas.

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SISISKY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Then I would ask my friend what the strategic interest is? I respect what the gentleman said and glorify his sons in the Mediterranean, but if that is no problem, tell me what the problem is in the ports? Forget about the economic reasons. Will the gentleman explain to me then if the bombs do not mean anything, tell me the strategic reason why we should have more ports in this time of economic crisis?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. The fact is that you have to disperse. What I am talking about is the entity, that in the nuclear age if a nuclear war is unleashed, forget it. Later we are going to vote on the conventional war in a very localized area. That is where the Navy comes in. That is where the battle wagons come in. I just heard, it was on a talk show, in sort of a ludicrous way that someone said, "I ran into this Lebanese and he was so upset about New Jersey. He says, what is wrong with the Garden State of New Jersey? And he kept saying New Jersey, New Jersey, New Jersey. It was because the New Jersey caused consternation and changed the tone of the war in Lebanon." The battleship he was talking about; that is what we are talking about, the concept of refurbishing the battle wagons, the concept of spreading them out.

I have been to Norfolk, I have been to Salerno, I have been to Florida, I have been to San Diego. In a conventional war, forget it. In Florida they have got 20 ships in a 1-square-mile turnaround basin.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DE LA GARZA was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SISISKY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman said something earlier in his presentation, Mr. Chairman, which is a strategic point, believe it or not. His son sailed from one place and had to wait for ships from another place. That is what this is all about. The Navy has never proven the fact——

Mr. DE LA GARZA. No, no. The gentleman is all wrong. The concept is that you meet en route. You cannot have them all in one place, you have to separate them all in different places.

The tender is here, the carrier is here, the missile cruiser is here, and they combine en route to a strategic point. That is what happened, that is what they were doing, and that is what needs to be done.

Mr. SISISKY. But that is exactly what the Navy tried to prove, that steaming time would be reduced by dividing the fleet. But fleets fight in task forces, not battle groups.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Well, the gentleman is more than expert in that area. But if you are all going to the same place, the steaming time is not that relevant if you are all going the same way to join at a point. What I am trying to say is that the basic integrity of the ability of the U.S. Navy in a conventional operation, in a conventional operation—I make that very clear, the strategic import of the U.S. Navy is that they are dispersed in such a way that conventionally—and we know where the submarines are. We know how far they have come. They have come into the basic basin. That is not important on this issue because that is a fact of life, that is a reality we have to live with.

The important thing is, do we have them in strategic areas?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DE LA GARZA was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I apologize for taking too much time. But my colleagues who are arguing about the concept are dividing into two segments, those who are provincial, which I respect because I would be likewise, and those who are arguing against the concept who would basically have somewhat not enough knowledge about the issue.

Now if I were in San Diego, I would not want to take my ships to Washington or someplace. That is basic. I can agree with that, I can sympathize with this. But I care more about one ensign in the Mediterranean and how he can do his job and how he can protect the security of this Nation than where the hell the ships are docked.

That is the basic thing that I am talking about today, not whether there are going to be enough for Corpus Christi or San Diego or Washington or New York. One ensign means more to me than anything we discuss here. How are we going to protect him? How are we going to give him the ability to protect this Nation? The integrity and the security and the life and the liberty of this Nation, that is what we are going to be discussing later today. That is my issue. We are not taking money from here, from the farmers, from housing, from increased welfare; we are talking about how we can make a sailor in the Navy represent his country to the best of his ability. And that, my dear friend, is where the item lies, that we disperse them all, that we give them the security necessary in conventional war, that we give them the ability to protect us here in this Congress, in this Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] has again expired.

(On request of Mr. CALLAHAN and by unanimous consent, Mr. DE LA GARZA was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CALLAHAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman has so eloquently stated the story of the home porting concept. This debate has been taking place in the bodies of this Hall and across this rotunda for a great number of months. Without a doubt, it has been proven time and time again that the gentleman from Texas is absolutely right, that the concept of home porting is an absolute necessity in meeting the national defense of this great country.

We are not talking about the money, as the gentleman suggested, we are talking about the preservation of peace within this country, and the best national strategy that we can possibly develop. The gentleman is so right in his statement. I join with the gentleman wholeheartedly in opposition to the Hertel amendment.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank the gentleman.

The question, as my colleague says, is, Are we going to vote the best interests of this country, as the experts of the Navy tell us, as the nonexpert lowly ensign in the Navy tells me? Are we going to vote for that, or are we going to make a political decision that we are going to do the political thing at this point in time, or are we going to put the integrity, the security, the welfare, the future of this Nation in jeopardy, as the experts tell us? The question is, Do we vote for ourselves or do we vote for the sailors who tell us this is what we need?

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak in favor of the amendment. Let me say to my colleagues that Mr. DICKS earlier raised a cap that he proposed for military construction. The cost of this program is not just military construction. Let me tell you why. I appreciate the gentleman saying it is so important to protect our sailors because that is precisely what I am proposing to do in going with the Hertel amendment.

Right now we have a total of 21 minesweepers in this country, all of which were built in the 1950's, to protect our home ports, to allow ships to escape to the open sea, which is what they have to do in times of war.

Let me just tell you the Senators from New York stated it very well in testimony before the committee when it was asked of them, "Well, when you get these new ships up in New York, are you going to want some minesweepers to protect them so that if that harbor is mined, they can escape to the open sea before they are destroyed?" And their answer was, "You're darned right, we want some minesweepers." They are going to have to have at least three minesweepers in that particular city. They do not have them right now.

So they are going to want at least three minesweepers in New York City.

So you are going to have to have a bundle of minesweepers up in Everett, WA. I think you are going to have to have between 10 and 20 minesweepers to accommodate these new home ports. Let me tell you how much they cost. The MCM Avenger is $100 million in fiscal year 1987 money. So if you are going to build the minesweepers that you need to allow the ships to escape to the sea in times of national disaster, which is precisely what we are talking about in the new home ports, that is over $1 billion. If you go to 20 minesweepers, new minesweepers that are needed besides replacing the ones in existing home ports, which badly need to be replaced, that is $2 billion. I think the real cost in terms of minesweepers is between $1 billion and $2 billion. It depends on whether or not you take the MCM Avenger at $100 million in fiscal year 1987 dollars or $50 million in the MSH Cardinal minesweeper, which is $50 million in fiscal year 1987 dollars.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman and I were at the same subcommittee hearing, and the Navy in fact asserted that that is an accurate statement in that they have in line or could refurbish minesweepers. That is not the issue. The issue is not $1 million or $2 million or this or that. I know where the Senators from New York State are coming from, and I know where the Senators from North Carolina and Virginia are coming from. That is what I was talking about, separating the political from the real need.

Mr. HUNTER. Let me reclaim my time in order to tell my friend from Texas that the Subcommittee on Sea Power of the House Committee on Armed Services has deleted a Trident submarine from markup because of dollar constraints. One of the most important strategic systems we have for the protection of the United States, the facts are—and I think the gentlewoman from Illinois will explain it better later—we are not going to have dollars. So for the Navy to say we are going to cover up these two naked home ports by buying a bevy of minesweepers that they have not bought, that they have not constructed and they said those minesweepers right now are on paper, they are not constructed and most of the minesweeping program is in trouble, is not to be realistic.

Let me just tell the gentleman, let me just read a few headlines. "Navy Minesweeper Flunks Its First Test," Defense News, March 17, 1986. "Fiberglass Hull Flunks Its First Test," "Design Flaw Endangers Crews Aboard Wooden Hull Ships."

We have enormous problems with the minesweepers. Even if we had the money, we are going to build strategic submarines. We are not going to build minesweepers first. The Navy has never built minesweepers first.

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman talks about minesweepers, and the gentleman knows where the Navy is securing a lot of minesweepers at the present time, they call them opportunity ships, from the DEA and Miami Vice, or whatever they may be.

But there is another issue that the gentleman did not bring up, and I hope the gentleman will not forget, because the gentleman comes from a port that disallows Warsaw Pact ships who may give very good discounts to ports that do not get in there. The gentleman knows very well that the Navy has stated that they will not allow Warsaw Pact ships into three or four Navy ports.

This gentleman, and I think the gentleman was there, directly asked the Navy whether they would ban the entrance of Warsaw Pact ships into the larger ports such as the Port of New York, the Port of San Francisco——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. HUNTER was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SISISKY. The Chief of Naval Operations, who said 5 minutes before this gentleman asked that question that the integrity of the battle groups, they could stay in port and use communications devices between ships, and when I asked him specifically the question, would these Warsaw Pact ships be banned in these ports, he said, "I don't think it's necessary."

I want you gentlemen to understand from these large ports that if it goes by amendment or by the security of these ships, then the maritime interests in these cities ought to know the possibility of the lacking of Warsaw Pact ships in these areas.

I would ask the gentleman if that is not true?

Mr. HUNTER. Let me say the gentleman is precisely right. Let me just share with the gentleman the first embarrassing answer the Navy personnel gave to us was, "When these Warsaw Pact ships come into New York Harbor, what we are going to do is flush all of the Navy ships out of the harbor while they are coming in."

Can you imagine the cost of doing that and the silliness of doing that. After the laughter subsided, they said, "Well, we will come up with another answer later on."

Let me just say precisely that the gentleman is stating the fact. The Navy has banned Warsaw Pact ships from these ports for the simple reason that one nuclear weapon in a Warsaw Pact ship in the harbor can cause a lot of problems.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I can appreciate the gentleman's concern. But my concern is that I think we are deviating. The gentleman does not think that our Navy can sanitize?

I would be worried about Warsaw Pact ships. They are only coming in for grain. I think that at this time it is not really within the realm of reality that they would have nuclear weapons.

Mr. HUNTER. If the gentleman is stating to me that in a time of war the gentleman does not think the Soviet Union would be so dastardly as to put a harbor-blocking bomb inside one of their merchant vessels, I just want to tell the gentleman that the Soviets use their merchant fleet and their fishing fleet for military operations all of the time. Absolutely the state in Russia, the Government and not individual enterprise, is in control of all their ships. Of course, they would use every advantage that they possible have to immobilize an American fleet.

Let me just say to the gentleman that the gentleman has agreed that the New York Senate delegation is correct in saying that they have a right to have some minesweepers if they have a new home port.

Does the gentleman agree with me that it would be only necessary then to send at least three $100 million new minesweepers to that particular port if they become a port? Is that not right?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. No; I do not agree with that.

Mr. HUNTER. How many does the gentleman think they need?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I do not agree with that, because I think you can sanitize a port without the minesweeper. The gentleman is getting into a concept of World War II. We have the ability now to sanitize and to detect and to deter.

We are not talking about them coming in and mining the harbor and that kind of thing?

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman tell me how we are going to sanitize a port without a minesweeper?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I would not want to discuss it here with the gentleman, but it can be done.

Mr. HUNTER. It is a secret.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] has again expired.

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent the gentleman be allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to make sure that I understand this. If I understood the position of the gentleman from California, San Diego, CA, and the gentleman from Virginia, somewhere near Norfolk, VA, they would not oppose the home ports in New York and Everett and other places if the Navy had the minesweeping capacity? Is that a correct understanding on my part?

Mr. SISISKY. This gentleman did not say that, if the gentleman is asking this gentleman.

Mr. HUNTER. Let me answer the gentleman from New York. I think the personnel costs, the transportation costs, the costs of building infrastructure, hospitals, training schools, and everything are going to make this program prohibitive in light of our budget constraints.

But I am telling the gentleman all American taxpayers are going to be paying for this 300 million dollars' worth of minesweepers for New York and the same amount for Everett, WA. And the gentleman can easily see that this $200 million figure that the Navy laid out is just not realistic. We are going to go way over the billion-dollar mark just in minesweepers to protect the new ports.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. If the gentleman is concerned about cost, I join with the gentleman from San Diego who is always very honorable in these matters, but we are going to have to spend money at San Diego and at Norfolk for facilities, for housing, for hospitals, and for all the things. So there is no free lunch here.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, the gentleman is precisely wrong. The present minesweeper deployment already takes care of existing home ports. Ships in existing home ports can escape to the ocean right now. If we want ships in New York to escape to the ocean, we are going to have to buy three $100 million minesweepers.

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SISISKY. That is basically true. There is no sense on dragging this on, but it is absolutely true.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California for yielding to me.

I want to take 1 second out here and discuss, as the chairman was trying to, so we can reach an agreement on the time. Many Members have asked when we are going to vote on the question. I want to be reasonable, but I would agree with the chairman.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I want to tell the gentleman from San Diego [Mr. HUNTER] one of my boys is in San Diego, so my interest is not provincial. And to the others on the Atlantic, one of my boys is at Mayport. He is now out in the Mediterranean, so it is not provincial. I sympathize with the gentleman on the provincial aspect, but I am trying to get to the national security aspect.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's statement.

Mr. Chairman, I want to first of all rise in very strong opposition to the Hertel amendment. I think it is a mistake from a military perspective. I think the gentleman from Texas, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, has brought us back to the important issue. We are talking about the lives of our naval personnel who we are putting at risk by overconcentrating these ships at existing home ports.

I would like to point out to my colleague from Michigan, the author of the amendment [Mr. HERTEL] I would like to read a letter from Senator BARRY GOLDWATER, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee to Secretary John Lehman, dated June 5, 1986.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman may read from the letter.

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKS. This is relevant to the debate and I want to be accurate.

The committee has had an opportunity to review extensively the Secretary of the Navy's strategic home porting initiative. It is the judgment of the committee that the strategic value of this plan has been clearly demonstrated. It is our understanding that the military construction costs of this program, as outlined in the Navy and the military necessity cost effectiveness report dated November 19, 1985, will not exceed $799 million. The committee has no objection to the Secretary of the Navy obligating and expending funds appropriated in fiscal year 1986 for construction of facilities at Everett, WA and Staten Island, NY.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, to clarify, that as the chairman, I am sure Mr. GOLDWATER wrote that letter in regard to what the committee had done. But Mr. GOLDWATER himself not only voted against home porting but also sent a letter to Secretary Weinberger stating that he was totally opposed; that it had no strategic value.

Mr. DICKS. I appreciate the contribution by the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, let me also point out the facts about where this money is going to be spent; the $799 million that Chairman GOLDWATER discussed.

Now, $188 million is at Staten Island; $272 million at Everett; $254 million at the gulf coast bases; and $85 million at San Francisco. So this money is spread out all over the country, there are a large number of States that are affected. I might just say for my friend from Alabama, the distinguished ranking member of this committee, that we are all in this together. Either this concept of strategic home porting is going to go forward or it is going to be defeated. If it is defeated, I must say to my colleagues from other parts of the country that I do not think it will bode well for the future years.

I have looked at this project extensively. I honestly believe that Chairman DE LA GARZA had it right when he said, "What we should be thinking about here is the survivability of the ships." Now, let us face it: We have spent $50 to $60 billion building these ships, so why would we want to add them to existing ports where they would be more vulnerable? That is why all of the Chiefs of Naval Operations except the one that works for the Norfolk Chamber of Commerce have supported the concept of strategic home porting. It makes military sense; that is why they are for it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is eminently correct. It makes no sense to concentrate all of our forces in just a few isolated ports on both sides of the continent instead of spreading them around the whole Outer Continental Shelf and in the coastal regions.

Mr. DICKS. I would say to the gentleman from Louisiana you have oil that is coming in in your area; vital oil links that are coming in. We have oil coming down the west coast from Alaska to California to take care of the requirements of the entire west coast.

A battle group out of Everett could serve to help protect not only the Trident submarine base, but those vital sealanes carrying that oil. From a military perspective it makes sense.

What we are seeing here today are those people who represent existing home ports who think that they can get additional ships added to their home ports. Yes, we have a parochial interest as well.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. DICKS. But what we are trying to do here today is support the policy that has been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, by the Chief of Naval Operations, by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

I will take the credibility of the CNO and the Secretary of the Navy and let us vote down the Hertel amendment.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise as a member of the Armed Services Committee, if the gentleman from Washington would listen briefly, who neither has a home port or is getting one. I would not, in any way, shape or form, either impugn the motives of either group because caring about one's district is an acceptable thing for Members of Congress.

Perhaps for those listening their offices who have wondered about this feeding frenzy that they have seen on the floor, they would like to hear from someone for whom there is never a chance of a home port or of taking 1 penny of ship's money from anybody. The Rock River is quite lovely, but it also is not going to be a port.

I come here also as a member of the Budget Committee and I tell you all this: A number of months ago we voted here, whether Republican or Democrat, on budget numbers. We thought perhaps if we were Democrats that that would go up a bit in conference; if we were Republicans we regretted, perhaps, that it would come down.

In either respect, the numbers not just for this year, but for next year and next year and next year make this whole argument moot. Here is the news, it is not nice, it does not make good press releases: There is not any money. The fact it will only cost $100 million more or San Diego will not need $300 million for minesweepers but Everett and Staten Island Ferry will, that is madness.

There is not even going to be enough to maintain San Diego. We are going to be shutting down bases that others of you voting on home ports with no real interest in it are suddenly going to say "why," not for home ports but just to maintain the numbers we have already voted on.

Members of the House, it is not wonderland here anyone. It is going to be difficult to maintain for the young men and women of the Navy, the Air Force, the Army, the Marines, and the Coast Guard, safety. But new pork, as enhancing as it is, is out of the question this year.

So I tell you as someone who will not get any of it from a State who is 50th in what we get back in defense spending, who would like to help out the Republicans and Democrats in home ports because it is useful to help your colleagues, that you may not have it.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BEDELL. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, first of all, I wish to commend the gentlewoman for her statement. I hesitated to say anything because I am not an expert in this issue. But it should be very clear that the debate we are having is between those who want to get home porting in their area and those who want to keep it in their area.

At least I believe the gentlewoman from Illinois and the people from Iowa and other places should have some voice in this issue if we are going to be spending extra money. I have talked to the chairman of the subcommittee, he tells me that they do not have to spend extra money at this time in order to house the ships that they now have.

If that is the case, and we are voting whether we should spend $140 million extra for something we do not have to have at this time, when my farmers cannot get the loans they need, when we do not have the money to give help to the students to get education, and this sort of thing, I would think that those people who are not involved in this and who may come from those areas that are not going to be involved in this particular parochial issue would give some thought as to whether they want to spend $140 million that at least apparently there is some indication that we do not have to spend at this time.

I again commend the gentlewoman for her statement.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. I yield briefly, understanding the gentleman's strong abilities in this area, but he has talked a lot.

Mr. DICKS. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to make sure that the gentlewoman knew that this committee, the budget request for this committee for military construction was $10.137 billion. This committee has reduced that by over $2 billion.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reclaim my time.

I should be fascinated; we cut almost $1 billion. It is not enough. The only way to cut it is to not do it. I am just saying, and it hurts to say it from both the Armed Services and Budget Committee: There is no cash. C-a-s-h.

I do not care how nice it is, we cannot do it.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments hereto end in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Members standing at the time the unanimous-consent request was agreed to will be recognized for 1 minute each.

□ 1535

(By unanimous consent, Mr. RUSSO yielded his time to Mr. SISISKY.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SISISKY].

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I only have limited time. I have been accused of being an expert around here. I assure this body that I am not an expert, but I do study the matter. I have been accused of representing Norfolk, VA. I do not; represent the area around Norfolk, VA, and I feel that this issue is something of which it can be said, "The gentlewoman from Illinois sized it all up."

She did it in the committee, and I tried to do it in the committee. In 1982 when this thing was set, the defense budget was growing at 10 percent real growth a year. It is not growing anymore. It is amazing to me. The Subcommittee on Seapower reported to the full committee yesterday. It took 5 minutes to say that we discontinued out of the budget a Trident submarine, two Aegis cruisers, and an Aegis destroyer, and the Navy still wants to do business as usual.

We have proven beyond the shadow of a doubt in my opinion in the committee that the strategic value of this mission is not here, the economics are not there.

I am going to say something, and it is not going to be nice, and I am probably going to regret what I am going to say.

It has been charged here today that this is political posturing from Members. Let me tell you something: You have never seen political posturing like what is going on in the Department of Defense over this issue. It is no accident that New York and Texas and California and other States have large delegations. Let us be honest. We called it another name, but I would never say that our Secretary, whom I admire greatly, would do anything like this, but it has been said that it is done.

I come back to the point that we cannot do business as usual. Certainly it will cost more money for the home ports that are there already to build a pier; in fact, in Norfolk they are building a $35 million pier right now. But the point is that we do not have to build the infrastructure.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BEDELL yielded his time to Mr. HERTEL of Michigan.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL].

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, as the author of the amendment, could I be allowed to reserve my time and be recognized near the end of the debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be happy to recognize the gentleman later.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. I thank the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. Miller of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we have appropriated tens of billions of dollars to build a 600-ship Navy. No matter what the House decides on this amendment, those ships will have to be home ported somewhere. Either we put them in expanded existing facilities, or we disperse the ships and adopt the Navy's strategic home port plan. Either way, we will have to come up with money, whether to expand existing facilities or to build new facilities.

The cost difference of $100 million between the two alternatives is relatively small. But the strategic difference is great. It is the difference between dispersal for access and safety—and Pearl Harbor revisited. We should support dispersal and the Navy's strategic home port plan.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MILLER of Washington yielded his time to Mr. HUTTO).

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS].

PREFERENTIAL MOTION OFFERED BY MR. DELLUMS

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his preferential motion.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I will not insist upon my motion that the Committee do now rise. I simply use this extraordinary tactic in order to gain some opportunity to speak on this terribly important matter. I think that we ought to limit debate only on issues that are noncontroversial; clearly this is controversial.

Mr. Chairman, I would like very much to speak to an issue that has not been addressed fully in this debate. This program is not entitled the Home Porting Program. It is referred to as the Strategic Home Porting Program. That term was not used loosely. So the argument here that in some way we need to expand the number of facilities for existing ships does not address this program. This program is called the Strategic Home Porting Program.

The subcommittee which I chair of the Committee on Armed Services has held more hearings on the policy of strategic home porting than any subcommittee or full committee in this entire Congress. So I would dare say that we have some reasonable knowledge about this issue.

Let us talk about "strategic." The Navy's rationale for the Strategic Home Porting Program: Dispersing ships to more ports will improve the U.S. defense posture and the survivability of the fleet. Mr. Chairman, if we were talking in the context of World War II, then this would make sense. This is an era of nuclear technology. This is an era of MIRV missiles. I would suggest to you that even if we dispersed the ships to 13 additional ports, do you think the Soviet Union cannot retarget 39 additional missiles of the 7,000 or 8,000 missiles that they have to render these ports vulnerable? That is bizarre and absurd on its face. So in terms of the first rationale, it is flimsy and without merit, Mr. Chairman.

No. 2, New York is now one of the facilities. New York is one of the high-priority target areas already targeted by the Soviet Union. So we are going to disperse ships into this more dangerous area? A second absurd and bizarre argument that flies in the face of intellect.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELLUMS. Please, not at this time.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. The gentleman——

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon my opportunity to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has the time.

Mr. DELLUMS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Collating ships of the same battle group will enhance war-fighting coordination. We do not fight in battle groups, we fight in task forces. So if you have one ship at another location that has to rendezvous with you in some other place, it is not how fast the quickest ship gets there, it is how fast the slowest ship gets there. So we do not operate out of battle groups, we operate out of task forces. So the second argument goes out the window.

The third important argument: Home porting ships near locations with existing industrial capacity will permit the Navy to take advantage of this capability. Well, the existing ports already have this infrastructure, and already are taking advantage of this capability.

The fourth argument: Home porting ships in more diverse geographical locations will permit the Navy to train in a variety of environments and will reduce the response time to potential conflict areas. Now you tell me, is the harbor in San Francisco and the harbors in Everett, New York, a wide variety of environmental opportunities to train? You tell me what is so significant about a training facility in the middle of California that is more different than a training facility several miles up the coast. That is bizarre on its face. And as I said, you do not get to areas of conflict any faster than the slowest ship with which you have to rendezvous.

Finally: Developing additional logistical support complexes will help support the expanded fleet. That is precisely the point that we are trying to make. Mr. Chairman, we are going to have to expand these facilities; $790 million would not buy this program. If you support the concept, fine. That is what our political process is about, the right to agree and disagree on policy. But I think each of us, Republican, Democrat, liberal, conservative, moderate, man, woman, whatever in this body, if you support a policy, you should be able to rationally and intelligently go home and be able to say to your constituents, "I support this policy, and this is how much it costs." Not one single person on the floor of this entire Congress can tell you to a moral certainty how much this program is going to cost.

Even the person who says, "Let's cap it at 799" has the integrity and the honesty to say that he knows that the figure will go beyond that. We are not only going to build family housing, but we are going to build access roads, we are going to build brigs, we are going to build commissaries, we are going to build morale centers for the troops.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] has expired.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I still have 1 minute on the earlier request.

The CHAIRMAN. The preferential motion takes preference over the 1 minute.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I still have 1 minute after the preferential motion is voted up or down; is that not correct, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. Does the gentleman desire to take that now?

Mr. DELLUMS. That is my request, and then I would logically conclude my discussion, Mr. Chairman, if I may.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman may proceed for 1 additional minute, on the preferential motion, in lieu of his 1 minute allocated on the pending amendment.

There was no objection.

□ 1545

Mr. DELLUMS. So Mr. Chairman, I do not perceive these latter issues that enhance the quality of life of our young men and women who serve in the military as some enhanced program. Do you think where people live and where people work, the recreation and morale, the child care facilities and what you have you, are enhanced programs? This deals with the quality of life of young people.

So in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, this is called the Strategic Homeporting Program. It falls flat on its face in terms of strategic arguments. It is not necessary. It does not deserve integrity. It does not give us survivability. It does not give us a safer situation. It only creates more danger for the people living in those ports.

Second, as the gentlewoman from Illinois pointed out eloquently and powerfully, we just do not have the funds.

Finally, I guarantee, Mr. Chairman, that this program will cost far in excess of $799 million at a time when we need to be educating our children, feeding our people, enhancing the quality of life of our poor, putting human beings back to work and taking the homeless off the streets.

Mr. Chairman, these ought to be our new priorities, not some new programs.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the preferential motion.

Mr. Chairman, I was hoping the gentleman would withdraw his motion. We have worked very hard on this bill, and I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HUTTO].

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the chairman yielding to me.

I ask the Members to support the committee position on this.

This is the third salvo that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL] has fired at the Navy, but I know that my good friend, the gentleman from Michigan, does not want to torpedo the U.S. Navy. I am sure that he is a friend of it, but he just does not understand the fact that this Congress has authorized and we are buying a 600-ship Navy. We have got to put those ships somewhere.

The question is, should we put these ships into ports that are already congested with 100 plus, more than 100 ships in these ports, or should we do what every Navy strategist, with the possible exception of that one, says that we should do and should have done a long time ago, and that is to disperse the fleet?

Sometime ago, a few years ago, the Secretary of the Navy after examining our naval strategy decided, and rightly so, that we should not have all our ships in just two or three ports, but we should disperse the fleet. It was at that time I think called the Ship Dispersal Program, and later to be called the Strategic Home Porting.

A lot of Members of this House do not know about this strategic home porting plan. So I think it is good for us to realize that the Congress has authorized and we are buying a 600-ship Navy and we have 120 or 130 ships to put somewhere.

To assuage the fears of those people who have large numbers of ships in their ports, they are going to get some of these ships even in the strategic home porting plan.

I think all of us would agree that we need some ships along the gulf coast, for example.

The gentleman from Alabama in our committee, and this came through our subcommittee and we endorsed the Subcommittee on Military Construction, the Committee on Armed Services endorsed the concept of home porting. The full committee just yesterday endorsed the concept of home porting.

So we are saying that this is the right thing to do.

I want to tell the Members of this House also one thing that I think has not been addressed properly today and that is the standpoint of readiness and the industrial capability of our Nation. We need to maintain an adequate industrial base by home porting ships near locations with existing private sector industrial capacity in the Northeast part of the country and the Northwest and along the gulf coast that permits us to take advantage of that capacity during peacetime and to surge to wartime production levels more rapidly if needed.

The Navy and the entire maritime industry depends on a healthy and well-developed shipbuilding and repair industry.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] pointed out something that we should also take note of and that is, remember Pearl Harbor. We do not want our ships all in one area.

The gentleman from California is talking about the strategic capability of the Soviet Union and the ICBM's and, of course, sometimes we seem to think that would be the only war that would be fought, just a missile or two on either side and it would all be over with; but tell me why we are planning in a conventional way and we are spending billions and billions of dollars on conventional forces?

The point has been made about the cost of strategic home porting. Let me tell you that the cost of the military construction related to strategic home porting would only be about 7 percent of the entire military construction budget for the next 5 years.

Also, let me say that when you talk about this being too expensive, we are spending many times over this amount of money on many of the weapons systems that we are funding in our defense authorization and defense appropriations bills for this Congress, of this Nation.

So I would ask all the Members to realize that in a number of these ports already we have a great amount of the infrastructure. The ports that we are voting on this year, Staten Island, NY, and Everett, WA, which do not have as much infrastructure as some of the others, but as we move on into home porting we will find that a number of these ports have a lot of the infrastructure, most of it, and also there is great participation on the part of the State and local communities which actually will match or better than match that put up by the Federal Government.

So in closing, Mr. Chairman, I would say that the House Armed Services Committee, the Senate Armed Services Committee, all of the naval strategists, all the past CNO's, with the possible exception of one, have said, "Yes, this is what we should do for the defense of our Nation. We should keep the freedom of the seas. We must maintain the freedom of the seas of the world and home porting is a good thing."

I ask you to vote "no" on the Hertel amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the preferential motion.

The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS].

The preferential motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the limitation of debate time previously agreed to, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT].

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, I have been surprised at the tone of some of the debate here today. There is no question that the Navy has looked at this very carefully. The Senate has already taken this issue up. The Armed Services Committee has already taken it up and considered it.

We are going to have 120 additional ships. We need greater dispersement. We need some of those ships to be based in the Gulf of Mexico.

In answer to the question of the gentleman from California about who is going to build the access roads, who is going to provide some of these facilities, I can answer that question. A lot of States and communities and counties that have said, "We support this concept, we are willing to make an investment locally because we think it is in the national security of our country and because it will be good for the areas affected."

It makes fundamental national security sense to not have all our ships based in just three home ports. We certainly should have a battleship and carrier group in the Gulf of Mexico.

So I would urge my colleagues to listen to the members of the Armed Services Committee, oppose this amendment, and support the home porting concept.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKS yielded his time to Mr. DE LA GARZA.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, the gentlewoman from Illinois in her very eloquent way is wrong.

This concept, we are sharing. The gentlewoman should be grateful and my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan, should be grateful and my distinguished colleague, the chairman of the subcommittee, should be grateful.

For the first time, we are bringing in the local community. We are not doing all of the expense. We are sharing with the local communities. We are sharing with the States. We are sharing with the counties. The infrastructure is going to be built.

This is a novel and beautiful and good concept that we share with the localities and all the expenditure does not come from the Navy, from the Federal taxpayers, but we are sharing with the local entities.

Also, I would tell my colleagues in response to my distinguished friend and brother, the gentleman from California, you cannot feed the children, you cannot house the elderly, you cannot house the poor, you cannot provide for their energy and welfare, unless you have the security of this Nation. Everything is lost if you do not have the security of the Nation, and the security of the Nation entails, yes, the World War II concept.

Forget about the missiles. Ten missiles will do us in today. Bang, and that is it, and there is no world as we know it.

We have to have the ships for the sealanes. We have to have the old concept of World War II to keep peace in the Nicaraguas and in the South Africas and the Lebanons.

We may be right, we may be wrong. I take no responsibility——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CALLAHAN].

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield my 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

So what we are talking about here is not feeding the poor, housing the elderly, providing for infrastructure. We are talking about the integrity and security for the future of this Nation, and for that you need a Navy. The missiles, forget.

I agree with the gentleman from California. We need no more missiles. Ten will do us in. I agree with the gentleman 100 percent.

We should not be talking about how many more missiles, match them one by one, but we have to have the conventional security to provide for wheat to go to one area, for rice to go to another area, to have the conventional ability to feed the world, the poor of the world. That entails a conventional security, not missiles. We have got too many already. When we went past 10, we should have stopped. I agree with the gentleman.

We are talking now about how to disperse the Navy, now to provide for the security of my boy to fight his war in the Mediterranean for the integrity and security of this Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LOWRY].

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Hertel amendment.

I again want to say that one of the proposed home ports is 20 miles from my home.

Who are we trying to kid here? We are going to miss the Gramm-Rudman target this fall, we are going to miss it by about $15 billion because of falling revenue.

We are going to be back here then trying to figure out where to make the cuts to hit the target. We are going to have to be making those tough decisions. When you go to make those tough decisions, this home porting cost is not justified. It means we will have to make cuts elsewhere to pay for this.

The right vote is to vote for the Hertel amendment, have the courage to make the strong adjustment now. It is going to be tougher this fall. It is going to be tougher in the future.

My colleague on the Budget Committee, the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. MARTIN] is absolutely right in talking about the budget problem.

Even at the $293 billion figure, we know we are going to be over Gramm-Rudman. That is a fact.

Make the vote now for the right priority.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I simply say to my colleagues that the ships that will be going into these new home ports are nuclear equipped ships, make no bones about it. We are not talking about traditional ships here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment.

It seems to me it is a program that we cannot afford, plus the fact that recently one of the major news networks did a rather interesting study of this particular problem, and what they looked at in home porting was, where is the money going to go? They looked at one city where the money is going and they found that a large percentage of that money is going to go to some of the most corrupt unions in the country who are directly associated with organized crime.

Our scarce resources are going to end up in the pockets of organized crime. We cannot afford that. I think we ought to approve this amendment.

(By unanimous consent Mr. HUTTO yielded his time to Mr. SWIFT.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT].

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield briefly?

Mr. SWIFT. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to answer my colleague from California. These are not nuclear powered. The concept of refurbishing the old battlewagons are not nuclear-powered operations. This is conventional operation. We do not need to confuse the issue in that area.

Mr. SWIFT. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. LIVINGSTON yielded his time to Mr. SWIFT.)

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, I should not be surprised that a great many of my colleagues have only focused on this issue for some time. Some are surprised that what we are talking about is not whether or not to build 600 ships. Some people in this body think they are yet to be built. The fact is, the 600 ships are built or almost completed. We have them.

What we are talking is that we bought the Rolls Royce. We are talking about whether we are going to build a carport for it.

The fact is, the $799 million, the entire home porting of all these extra ships at all of the ports throughout this country, will cost less than some of the ships that cost over $1 billion a copy that will be ported there; $799 million is a lot of money, but value has to be related to something. If I am going to sell you a brandnew 1986 car for $100, that is a deal. If I am selling you a candy bar for $100, that is not a deal.

We are talking about providing dispersal, which provides safety for these ships, at less than the cost of a single ship. It seems to me, put in that context, the whole economic issue changes drastically.

Let me speak for a moment to some of my colleagues who, as I have, have been concerned that we have skewed our national defense toward nuclear weapons. One of the things that I believe, and I think a number of my colleagues believe, is that we should have been putting greater emphasis on conventional weapons.

While it is true that we can put a nuclear weapon on a ship, the fact is that the Navy is an inherently conventional system. Some people say, "Come a nuclear holocaust, how are we going to save Navy through dispersal?" Come nuclear holocaust, the Navy anywhere is irrelevant. The whole purpose of the Navy and conventional weapons is to try and prevent our ever escalating to the point of nuclear exchange. The ability to disperse the Navy, the ability to send that Navy faster to places such as the North Pacific, 1½ days steaming time shorter than out of San Diego, all of those add up to essentially a strong increase of our conventional capability.

Those of us who have had some concern and have voted that concern about an overbalance toward nuclear weapons must now not have it both ways. We cannot be against nuclear buildup on one ground and against conventional on the other.

I believe this is a smart, intelligent, wise, conventional response to our military buildup.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWIFT. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PICKLE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman makes a very good point. This concept has been studied for the Navy for 2 or 3 years and has been adopted by the other body. The host city has already voted for the bonds to support the concept. It is needed and it ought to move forward.

A lot of cities wanted this, and now all at once they think, "Maybe we ought to take another look." This concept ought to move forward, and I support this move.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. HEFTEL].

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, it is interesting that the former Chief of Naval Operations, Admiral Hayward, does not understand the reason for home porting and considers it a wasteful exercise in financial spending and extravagance.

It is interesting that the GAO tells us that we do not need home porting; that we have all the capacity we now need for the ships that are being built and will be built.

It makes no sense to indulge in this kind of spending when there is not a need for it, when Senator GOLDWATER tells us this is a boondoggle. There is something wrong when we have financial problems on the one hand and indulge in this kind of spending on the other hand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS].

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Hertel amendment. The time has come to put an end to the Navy's home-porting scheme—a plan that is wasteful, dangerous, and strategically unnecessary.

The more closely the Navy's rationales for the home porting policy are scrutinized, the more feeble they look. The Navy claims the new ports are both affordable and necessary. But according to a recent study by the General Accounting Office, the Navy has grossly underestimated the costs of home porting, and hundreds of millions of dollars could be saved by simply making better use of existing Navy ports. At a time when critical domestic programs are being senselessly cut or eliminated, it would be foolish to start this expensive, unjustified new construction program.

At the same time, the Navy has failed to show that these new ports will make even a minimal contribution to national security. After looking at the strategic rationales for the home porting plan, the GAO recently concluded, "The Navy's basis (for the home porting policy), both with regard to strategic considerations and costs, is not adequately demonstrated." Even the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee calls home porting "pure, unadulterated politics," and has pointed out, "there is no reason why we have to go to all this expense to prepare harbors and docks for ships where those facilities already exist." In the last few weeks, the home porting scheme has come within a single vote of defeat in each body of Congress.

But Congress is not the only place where home porting has been opposed. Ever since the Navy announced plans to build a new home port in New York City, the proposal has met with heated opposition from city residents. Most opponents are appalled at the idea of basing battleships equipped with nuclear weapons in the middle of the country's most populous metropolitan area. These fears have been renewed with every nuclear accident, past or present, that the media reports. The recent disclosure by the Navy that in the Pacific Basin between 1965 and 1977 alone, a total of 381 nuclear weapons incidents and accidents occurred, has given added weight to these concerns.

Last summer, an unprecedented 112,000 signatures were collected on a petition to place a referendum about the New York home port on the city ballot. It was the first time in two decades that a referendum won a place on the ballot as a result of a grassroots campaign. Days before the vote, however, home port proponents convinced the courts to remove the referendum from the ballot on a technicality.

Despite the absence of a vote, opposition to the Navy plan has grown plain to all observers. The recent discovery that the Navy has selected as its housing site an area known as South Beach, which is a protected wetland, has only added to the uproar against the home port. To their credit, the House Armed Service Committee eliminated housing funds in recognition of this problem. But how can you have a Navy port without any place to house the people?

Taken as a whole, the plan for a New York City home port is in an extraordinary state of contradiction and confusion. The Navy pays great lipservice to public concern, yet ignores the community when those concerns are raised. The Navy claims it will only go where there is adequate, affordable housing. Yet New York City may well have less affordable housing than any city in the country—and the Navy is legally unable to build on the one housing site they have already chosen. The Navy keeps assuring New Yorkers of the economic boon the home port will bring. But the Pentagon's own fiscal impact analysis, inflated as it is, shows the home port to be, at best, revenue-neutral for New York City. And the people of New York have repeatedly raised questions about the safety of placing nuclear weapons in a busy harbor in their midst, only to have them callously dismissed by the Navy. Finally, the Navy assures Congress that home ports are cost-efficient and strategically necessary, while the GAO report portrays the program as a poorly conceived, wasteful extravagance.

Mr. Chairman, there was some question raised a moment ago by the gentleman from Mississippi as to who was going to pay for all the additional facilities such as housing. I have news for him. Contrary to his belief, as far as the city of New York is concerned, it expects, as it has been promised by the Navy, that the Navy, the Federal Government, the American taxpayer, is going to be paying for that housing. The GAO has estimated that with all the facilities, including housing, factored in, just the New York port and the State of Washington port will cost $1 billion.

That is what we are talking about and it is not appropriate to try to lowball what the cost will be.

After Chernobyl the middle of New York City is the last place in the world we ought to want to put a nuclear home port.

So we must ask ourselves again, why build the home ports? Why spend scarce Federal dollars on a costly plan that brings few, if any benefits to either the community or the Nation? Why impose this onerous project, which will aggravate New York City's housing crisis, on a community that seems reluctant at best to accept it? And last, why place nuclear weapons in the Nation's most populous region and possibly endanger the health and safety of millions for a plan for which the General Accounting Office finds no strategic justification?

Mr. Chairman, at least when they paid the $600, the Navy actually got their toilet seat, and when the Air Force paid $7,600, they received their coffeemaker. At a cost estimated by the GAO of over half a billion dollars, I'm not sure either New Yorkers or the Nation's taxpayers will get anything at all from the New York home port.

I urge my colleagues to support the Hertel amendment and end this poorly conceived and dangerous plan.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON].

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Armed Services, I have been, and express my wish, in favor of home porting in that committee.

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SKELTON. I yield to my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ORTIZ. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to reiterate what has been said before. It is that we pay now or we pay later.

The concept has been approved by the Subcommittee on Military Construction and by the full committee. The communities have kicked in a lot of money, in my State and my locale, to the tune of $50 million. If we wait any longer, we are going to have to pay for it at a higher cost.

The Navy has studied this problem for many years. They have been able to make a good argument as to why we need it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL] to close debate.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, when we began this debate, which has lasted longer than I think many of us expected, I said it would not be a partisan debate and it has not been. Most of the people who are opposed to my amendment understandably have new ports coming into their States under this bill, but this appropriation bill only deals with appropriations for Everett, WA, which has serious environmental questions and additional cost questions that have been raised in this debate, and the other city that is involved in this appropriation bill is New York City which, as has been pointed out in this debate, is the most expensive city in which to house our military personnel, and clearly, strategically, is one of the top targets of the Soviet Union.

Why move ships, why disperse ships, to New York, which is already one of the major targets, which is already the most expensive place to put our personnel. It makes no sense. That is why I offered this amendment. That is why other Members from around the country have come forward in opposition to home porting.

The gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. MARTIN] pointed out, as a member of the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Armed Services, that there is no new money. We weaken our existing facilities around the world. We weaken our conventional forces when we take money that is not necessary to go forward with this new idea.

Senator GOLDWATER opposed it. He called it a boon-doggle, as the chairman of the Senate Committee on Armed Services. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ASPIN], the chairman of the House Committee on Armed Services, also voted against it. The vote in the Senate Committee on Armed Services was only won by one. That was the difference.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will caution Members not to refer to Members of the other body.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. I have tried all day to move this debate forward and to agree on a time limit, so I am going to be brief.

We are talking about the Navy not spending $800 million, but $2 billion. I am asking my colleagues to vote "yes" for the amendment and save $2 billion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL].

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 241, noes 190, not voting 2, as follows:

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GONZALEZ

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. GONZALEZ: Page 16, after line 5, add the following section 124:

SEC. 124. No part of the funds appropriated in this Act may be obligated or expended for any purpose in connection with a replacement hospital at Brooke Army Medical Center, Texas, if such replacement hospital is designed to contain less than 450 beds.

Mr. GONZALEZ (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I am offering an amendment to clarify and enforce the Appropriations Committee's intent regarding H.R. 5052, the fiscal year 1987 military construction appropriations bill.

H.R. 5052, particularly as explained in the committee's report, clearly contemplates funding for design and preliminary site construction of a 450-bed replacement hospital at Brooke Army Medical Center, TX. The report language mandating application of funds toward the construction of a 450-bed replacement hospital was written in recognition of an agreement reached in 1984 between Congress and the Department of Defense. The original House-passed version of the fiscal year 1985 military construction appropriations bill called for funding of a 695-bed replacement hospital at Brooke Army Medical Center. In conference, the House ultimately receded from its earlier language and agreed to language that did not specify the precise scope of the project. However, this concession was made only after the Office of the Secretary of Defense agreed to the construction of a 450-bed replacement to this agreement; the Army Corps of Engineers in 1985 entered into a $20.67 million architectural design contract calling for the design of a facility containing at least 450 beds.

Despite its earlier commitments to Congress and despite the consummation of contractual obligations for architectural services in connection with a 450-bed replacement hospital, on June 12, 1986, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs William Mayer issued a decision approving the construction of a replacement facility at Brooke containing only 150 beds. This 11th hour breach of longstanding commitments to the Appropriations Committee, the Congress and the people of San Antonio shows a lack of good faith by the Department of Defense.

I believe that the DOD's conduct underscores the need for unambiguous language in the text of H.R. 5052 that holds the Defense Department to its earlier bargain and prevents the expenditure of appropriated funds in connection with a replacement hospital of less than 450 beds; given Assistant Secretary Mayer's recent actions, I am afraid that even clear report language may not suffice to prevent DOD from ignoring congressional intent.

For this reason I am offering an amendment, which would simply prohibit the use of any appropriated funds in connection with a replacement hospital of less than 450 beds.

I hope that my colleagues will support this amendment to clarify and enforce the committee's intent.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is also coauthored by my colleague from Texas, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LOEFFLER], to whom, I take this advantage to say, we owe a great debt of gratitude. The soldiers have a great debt of gratitude, also. Mr. LOEFFLER has been almost singlehandedly in the forefront on this issue.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GONZALEZ. I would be delighted to yield to the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. HEFNER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have looked at the amendment. We have no objection. We ask that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the distinguished chairman.

Mr. LOEFFLER. Mr. Chairman, will my distinguished colleague yield?

Mr. GONZALEZ. I would be delighted to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LOEFFLER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman from Texas on yet another fine innovative method of saving something that is near and dear not only to both of us and not only to the people involved in the military in and around San Antonio and south Texas but throughout the world. I look forward to working with the gentleman for the remainder of this year and then when I am gone and he is still in this body, I look forward to working with him again.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I would just let the record show that we are suffering a great loss when Mr. LOEFFLER leaves the House because he has been the champion of the needs of soldiers, the hospital and medical care needs of the soldiers in our area.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GONZALEZ. I will be delighted to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to express to the gentleman that I support his amendment, and I am pleased to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to the bill?

PREFERENTIAL MOTION OFFERED BY MR. HEFNER

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with such amendments as were adopted in the Committee of the Whole, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER].

The preferential motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 481, the Committee does not rise and report. The text of title II printed in House Report No. 99-653, proposed by Representative MCCURDY, shall become title II of the bill.

The first reading of this title is dispensed with.

The text of title II is as follows:

Redesignate the existing provisions of the bill as title I and add the following new title II at the end of the bill:

TITLE II

PURPOSES

SEC. 201. The purposes of this title are—

(1) to promote economic and political development, peace, stability, and democracy in Central America;

(2) to encourage a negotiated resolution of the conflict in the region;

(3) to demonstrate United States support for and confidence in the objectives being pursued by the democratic countries in Central America for their countries and for the region; and

(4) towards these ends, to enable the President to provide appropriate assistance for the Nicaraguan democratic resistance, subject to the terms and conditions of this title.

POLICY TOWARD CENTRAL AMERICA

SEC. 202. (a) It is the policy of the United States that—

(1) the building of democracy, the restoration of peace, the encouragement of economic development, the improvement of living conditions, and the application of equal justice under law in Central America are important to the interests of the United States and the community of American states;

(2) the interrelated issues of social and human progress, economic growth, political reform, and regional security must be effectively dealt with to assure a democratic and economically and politically secure Central America; and

(3) the September 1983 Contadora Document of Objectives, which sets forth a framework for negotiating a peaceful settlement to the conflict and turmoil in the region, is to be encouraged and supported.

(b) The United States—

(1) expressed its confidence in the abilities of the Governments of El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and Costa Rica to negotiate a peaceful resolution to the conflict in Central America that protects and promotes the political and security interests of the region and United States interests in the region; and

(2) strongly supports as essential to the objectives set forth in subsection (a)—

(A) national reconciliation in all countries in the region, and especially the creation of a framework for negotiating a peaceful, democratic settlement to the conflicts in Nicaragua and El Salvador; and

(B) efforts to reach a comprehensive and verifiable final agreement based on the Contadora Document of Objectives, including efforts to encourage the Government of Nicaragua to pursue a dialogue with the representatives of all elements of the Nicaraguan democratic opposition for the purposes of achieving a democratic political settlement of the conflict, including free and fair elections.

POLICY TOWARD THE GOVERNMENT OF NICARAGUA

SEC. 203. (a) United States policy toward Nicaragua shall be based upon Nicaragua's responsiveness to continuing concerns affecting the national security of the United States and Nicaragua's neighbors about—

(1) Nicaragua's close military and security ties to Cuba and the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies, including the presence in Nicaragua of military and security personnel from those countries;

(2) Nicaragua's buildup of military forces in numbers disproportionate to those of its neighbors and equipped with sophisticated weapons systems and facilities designed to accommodate even more advanced equipment;

(3) Nicaragua's unlawful support for armed subversion and terrorism directed against the democratically elected governments of other countries;

(4) Nicaragua's internal repression and lack of opportunity for the exercise of civil and political rights which would allow the people of Nicaragua to have a meaningful voice in determining the policies of their government through participation in regularly scheduled free and fair elections and the establishment of democratic institutions; and

(5) progress toward a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Central America based upon the comprehensive implementation of the September 1983 Contadora Document of Objectives.

(b) The United States will address the concerns described in subsection (a) through economic, political, and diplomatic measures, as well as through support for the Nicaraguan democratic resistance. In order to assure every opportunity for a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Central America, if the Central American countries have concluded an agreement based on the Contadora Document of Objectives or Nicaragua takes other significant steps to reduce the conflict in the region, the United States will limit the types and amounts of assistance provided to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance and take other positive action in response to steps taken by the Government of Nicaragua toward meeting the concerns described in subsection (a). Particular attention will be paid to whether—

(1) freedom of speech, assembly, religion, and political activity are being respected in Nicaragua and progress is being made toward the holding of regularly scheduled free and fair elections;

(2) there has been a halt to the flow of arms and the introduction of foreign military personnel into Nicaragua, and a withdrawal of all foreign military personnel has begun;

(3) a cease-fire with the Nicaraguan democratic resistance is being respected; and

(4) Nicaragua is refraining from acts of aggression, including support for insurgency and terrorism in other countries.

(c) The actions by the United States under this title in response to the concerns described in subsection (a) are consistent with the right of the United States to defend itself and to assist its allies in accordance with international law and treaties in force. Such actions are directed, not to determine the form or composition of any government of Nicaragua, but to achieve a comprehensive and verifiable agreement among Central American countries, based upon the 1983 Contadora Document of Objectives, including internal reconciliation within Nicaragua, based upon democratic principles, without the use of force by the United States. Nothing in this title shall be construed as authorizing any member or unit of the Armed Forces of the United States to engage in combat against the Government of Nicaragua.

POLICY TOWARD THE NICARAGUAN DEMOCRATIC RESISTANCE

SEC. 204. (a) The United States shall assist only those groups within the Nicaraguan democratic resistance which—

(1) are committed to work together for democratic national reconciliation in Nicaragua based on the document issued by the six Nicaraguan opposition parties on February 7, 1986, entitled "Proposal to the Nicaraguan Government for a Solution to the Crisis in Our Country"; and

(2) respect international standards of conduct and refrain from violations of human rights or from other criminal acts.

(b) No assistance under this title may be provided to any group that retains in its ranks any individual who has been found to engage in—

(1) gross violations of internationally recognized human rights (as defined in section 502B(d)(1) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961); or

(2) drug smuggling or significant misuse of public or private funds.

(c) The President shall use the authority provided by this title to encourage the Nicaraguan democratic resistance to take additional steps to strengthen its unity, increase the responsiveness of military forces to civilian leadership, pursue a defined and coordinated program for representative democracy in Nicaragua, and otherwise increase its appeal to the Nicaraguan people.

(d) In furtherance of the policy set out in this section, not less than $10,000,000 of the funds transferred under section 205(a) shall be available only for assistance to resistance groups otherwise eligible and not currently included within the United Nicaraguan Opposition (UNO), such assistance to be provided according to their needs and contribution to the resistance. In carrying out this subsection, not less than $5,000,000 of the funds made available pursuant to this subsection shall be available only for the Southern Opposition Bloc (BOS) and not less than $5,000,000 shall be available only for the Indian resistance force known as Misurasata.

(e) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, no member of the United States Armed Forces, or employee of any department, agency, or other component of the United States Government may enter Nicaragua to provide military advice, training, or logistical support to paramilitary groups operating inside that country.

TRANSFER OF FUNDS

SEC. 205. (a)(1) The Congress hereby approves the provision of assistance for the Nicaraguan democratic resistance in accordance with the provisions of this title.

(2) There are transferred to the President for use in carrying out the provisions of this title (other than section 214, relating to additional economic assistance for Central American democracies) $100,000,000 of unobligated funds from such accounts for which appropriations were made by the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1986 (as contained in Public Law 99-190), as the President shall designate. No limitation or restriction contained in section 10 of Public Law 91-672, section 8109 of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1986, section 502 of the National Security Act of 1947, or any other provision of law shall apply to the transfer or use of such funds.

(b) Funds transferred under subsection (a) shall remain available for the same periods of time, but not beyond September 30, 1987, as such funds would have been available under the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1986 (as contained in Public Law 99-190), but for the enactment of this title.

(d)(1) There are transferred to the President, out of the $2,000,000 appropriated by the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1985 (Public Law 99-88), under the heading "ASSISTANCE FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF A CONTADORA AGREEMENT", such sums as the President may require to facilitate the participation of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras in regional meetings and negotiations to promote peace, stability, and security in Central America. No limitation or restriction contained in section 15 of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956, section 10 of Public Law 91-672, or any other provision of law shall apply to the transfer or use of such funds.

(2) Funds transferred under paragraph (1) shall remain available for the same period of time as such funds would have been available under the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1985 (Public Law 99-88), but for the enactment of this title.

COORDINATION OF ASSISTANCE TO THE NICARAGUAN DEMOCRATIC RESISTANCE

SEC. 206. The Secretary of State (or his designee) shall be responsible for policy guidance, coordination, and supervision of United States Government activities under this title.

APPLICATION OF EXISTING LAWS; LIMITATION ON USE OF CIA RESERVES FOR CONTINGENCIES

SEC. 207. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this title, funds transferred under section 205(a) shall be available for the purpose described in section 105(a) of the Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1986, and all the requirements, terms, and conditions of such section and sections 101 and 102 of such Act, section 502 of the National Security Act of 1947, and section 106 of the Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1985 (Public Law 99-88), shall be deemed to have been met for such use of such funds.

(b) The use of funds made available under this title is subject to all applicable provisions of law and established procedures relating to the oversight by the Congress of operations of departments and agencies.

(c) Nothing in this title shall be construed as permitting the President to furnish additional assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance from funds other than the funds transferred under section 205(a) or otherwise specifically authorized by the Congress for assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance.

(d) Funds from the Reserve for Contingencies of the Central Intelligence Agency may not be used to provide assistance for the Nicaraguan democratic resistance unless the use of those funds for that purpose is specifically approved by the Congress.

UNITED STATES POLICY AND USE OF FUNDS AFTER A PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT

SEC. 208. If the President determines and so reports to the Congress that a peaceful settlement of the conflict in Central America has been reached—

(1) the unobligated balance, if any, of funds transferred under section 205(a) shall be available for the purposes of relief, rehabilitation, and reconstruction in Central American countries in accordance with the authorities contained in chapter 4 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (relating to economic support fund assistance);

(2) Executive order 12513 of May 1, 1985, and the sanctions imposed with respect to Nicaragua pursuant to that Executive order, shall cease to be effective; and

(3) the United States shall take such other actions as are appropriate to encourage the economic and political development of the countries of Central America, including Nicaragua.

INCENTIVES FOR A NEGOTIATED SETTLEMENT

SEC. 209. (a) Assistance under this title for the Nicaraguan democratic resistance shall be provided in a manner designed to encourage the Government of Nicaragua to respond favorably to the many opportunities available for achieving a negotiated settlement of the conflict in Central America. These opportunities include the following proposals:

(1) Six opposition Nicaraguan political parties on February 7, 1986, called for an immediate case-fire, an effective general amnesty, abolition of the state of emergency, agreement on a new electoral process and general elections, effective fulfillment of international commitments for democratization, and observance of implementation of these actions and commitments by appropriate international groups and organizations;

(2) President Reagan on February 10, 1986, offered simultaneous talks between the Government of Nicaragua and all elements of the Nicaraguan democratic opposition in Nicaragua and between the Government of Nicaragua and the United States Government;

(3) President Jose Napoleon Duarte of El Salvador on March 5, 1986, offered an additional dialogue between the Government of El Salvador and the insurgents in El Salvador if the Government of Nicaragua would simultaneously engage in a dialogue with all elements of the Nicaraguan democratic opposition; and

(4) President Reagan's Message to the Congress of March 19, 1986, proposed a mission to Latin America by his special envoy to encourage the Contadora and Support Group countries to join in urging the Government of Nicaragua to initiate a national dialogue with representatives of all elements of the Nicaraguan democratic opposition.

(b)(1) Of the amounts transferred under section 205(a), $30,000,000 shall be available only for the provision to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance of the following:

(A) assistance of the types authorized by section 722(g) of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985, provided by the Nicaraguan assistance office established by Executive Order 12530;

(B) logistics advice and assistance;

(C) support for democratic political and diplomatic activities; and

(D) training in radio communications, collection, and utilization of intelligence, logistics, and small-unit skills and tactics.

(2) Of the $30,000,000 specified in paragraph (1), $3,000,000 shall be available only for strengthening programs and activities of the Nicaraguan democratic resistance for the observance and advancement of human rights.

(3) In furtherance of the objectives set forth in subsection (a), none of the funds authorized to be transferred by section 205(a), except the $30,000,000 specified in paragraph (1), may be obligated or expended for assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance unless the conditions specified in subsection (c) are met.

(c) The restriction in subsection (b)(3) shall cease to apply on and after October 1, 1986, if—

(1) the President has determined and reported to the Congress that—

(A) the Central American countries have not concluded a comprehensive and effective agreement based on the Contadora Document of Objectives,

(B) the Government of Nicaragua is not engaged in a serious dialogue with representatives of all elements of the Nicaraguan democratic opposition, accompanied by a cease-fire, leading to regularly scheduled free and fair elections and the establishment of democratic institutions, or is not taking other significant steps to de-escalate the conflict;

(C) the democratic countries of Latin America and Western Europe have not made a significant effort to induce the Government of Nicaragua to enter into such agreement, dialogue, and cease-fire; and

(D) there is no reasonable prospect of achieving such agreement, dialogue, and cease-fire through further diplomatic measures, multilateral or bilateral, without additional assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance; and

(2) the Congress has enacted under section 210 a joint resolution approving the provision of assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance under this title without regard to the restriction in subsection (b)(3).

(d) Upon the enactment of a joint resolution pursuant to subsection (c)(2), $25,000,000 of the funds transferred under section 205(a) shall be available for obligation and expenditure in accordance with this title (in addition to the funds provided for in subsection (b)(1)). Upon the transmittal after the enactment of that joint resolution of each report required by section 212, an additional $15,000,000 of those funds shall be available for obligation and expenditure in accordance with this title.

(e) If the conditions specified in subsection (c) are met, assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance under this title (other than the assistance provided for in subsection (b)(1)) shall no longer be provided if at any time—

(1) the President determines that—

(A) the Central American countries have concluded a comprehensive and effective agreement based on the Contadora Document of Objectives; or

(B) the Government of Nicaragua is engaging in a serious dialogue with representatives of all elements of the Nicaraguan democratic opposition, accompanied by a cease-fire, leading to regularly scheduled free and fair elections and the establishment of democratic institutions, or taking other significant steps to de-escalate the conflict; or

(2) the Congress enacts under section 210 a joint resolution disapproving the provision of assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance under this title (other than the assistance provided for in subsection (b)(1)).

(f)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, on or after October 1, 1986, funds may be obligated or expended for assistance under this title for a Nicaraguan democratic resistance group only if the President determines and reports to the Congress that—

(A) that group has agreed upon a program of principles and objectives directed toward the attainment of democracy in Nicaragua, such program to include a plan to provide a significant measure of autonomy for Nicaraguan Indians;

(B) that group has instituted full and adequate human rights-related training programs;

(C) that group has removed from its ranks all persons responsible for past human rights abuses in Nicaragua;

(D) that group has established procedures to ensure severe punishment of any person within that group who commits human rights abuses in the future; and

(E) in the case of the groups currently within the United Nicaraguan Opposition (UNO), the United Nicaraguan Opposition has been restructured to allow complete and balanced representation of all democratic opposition forces within that organization and to ensure full subordination of military commanders to the political leadership, as required in the communique signed by the United Nicaraguan Opposition directorate in Miami, Florida, on May 29, 1986.

(2) In making his determination under subparagraph (E) of paragraph (1), the President shall take into account the effectiveness and legitimacy of the political leadership of the United Nicaraguan Opposition, including the ability of that political leadership—

(A) to reflect the views and objectives of the internal and external Nicaraguan democratic opposition;

(B) to function as the spokesman for the Nicaraguan democratic opposition with Central Americans, international organizations, and the United States Government; and

(C) to represent the Nicaraguan democratic opposition in dealing with the Government of Nicaragua.

EXPEDITED PROCEDURES FOR CONGRESSIONAL ACTION

SEC. 210. (a)(1) A joint resolution described in subsection (c)(2) of section 209 shall be one without a preamble, the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "That pursuant to section 209(c) of the Military Construction Appropriations Act, 1987, the Congress approves the provision of assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance pursuant title II of that Act without regard to the restriction in section 209(b)(3).".

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY] will be recognized for 30 minutes, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and another Member opposed to title II will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to title II.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman opposed to title II?

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. I am opposed to title II, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY].

Mr. MCCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the language in this title of the bill represents the efforts of a number of Members who have worked to develop a bipartisan policy with respect to Central America. It is based on the following propositions:

First, that the Sandinista government is undemocratic and repressive. To the extent that they export revolution and provide bases for Soviet and Cuban military operations, they pose a security threat to their neighbors and to the United States.

Second, the Contras have not become a unified and credible democratic alternative to the Sandinistas. They have no political identity in Nicaragua and no meaningful contact with the internal opposition. Nor are they an effective fighting force.

Third, support for the Contras must be seen as an instrument—not a goal—of U.S. policy.

Fourth, if we are to achieve a negotiated solution to the conflict, there must be clear incentives for both sides to negotiate.

Fifth, for the first time in history, there are now democratically elected leaders in four of the five Central American countries—leaders who, in my opinion, share our commitment to democracy and our security interests in the region.

Finally, Mr. Chairman—and perhaps most important—the proposal is based on the proposition that poverty, social injustice and denial of political liberty are, in the long run, the most serious threat to hemispheric security. There is no sense in setting the stage for democracy in Central America if we cannot produce an alternative to generations of oppression.

Questions have been raised as to whether there are any real differences between the language in the bill, and the substitute to be offered by my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS]. I believe there are significant differences, and I will try to highlight them.

The bill makes $30 million available upon enactment for nonlethal assistance to the Nicaraguan Democratic Resistance. In effect, the funds could be used for purposes authorized by current law and for training. The Edwards substitute would provide $40 million upon enactment, but these funds could automatically be used for lethal military aid beginning on September 1.

The Edwards substitute requires no second vote. It lifts all restrictions on lethal aid to the resistance on February 15, based solely on a Presidential certification. To stop military aid, Congress would have to pass a joint resolution of disapproval, and both Houses would then have to override a Presidential veto.

Under the bill, none of the $70 million balance could be used before October 1. On or after that date, the money could be used only if two events occur:

First, the President must report to the Congress that the Central American countries have not concluded a Contadora agreement; that Nicaragua is not engaged in a serious dialog with representatives of the opposition; that the democratic countries of Latin America and Western Europe have not made a significant effort to influence Nicaragua; and that there is no reasonable prospect for reaching an agreement without additional assistance to the resistance.

Second, the Congress must enact a joint resolution approving the use of such funds.

Unless both of these events occur—Presidential certification and a congressional vote of approval—the additional assistance provided in the Senate resolution remains "fenced."

This second vote of approval is the principal objection that has been made by the distinguished assistant minority leader and some of his colleagues. The amendment, they say, would entail "yet another Contra aid debate."

Let's look at the facts. The Edwards substitute contains an expedited procedure for a vote of disapproval. So we will be debating this issue and voting yet again in any event. The difference is that the vote provided for in the bill is a meaningful one. If the President decides to request unrestricted lethal military aid, he will be asking for a commitment from this Congress that will extend far beyond the $100 million we are talking about today, and beyond the end of the next fiscal year.

The bill says, in effect, that this kind of commitment should be undertaken only with the support of a majority in both houses of the Congress. The decision should not be made by default. It should not be left up to 34 Members of the other body. If, after the report of the bipartisan monitoring commission, the President cannot muster a simple majority in the Congress to support his request for lethal military aid, then it seems to me that we should not undertake this kind of commitment. Conversely, if majorities in both Houses vote to support his request, it seems to me that we will have a lot stronger and more sustainable policy than we have right now.

In addition, none of the funds provided in the bill could be used for any purpose on or after October 1 unless the President reports to the Congress that strict conditions have been met by the groups receiving assistance. This is a key issue; even the President now admits that there have been abuses. We believe the language of the bill is far preferable to the language in the Edwards substitute, which requires only that groups receiving assistance "have agreed to and are beginning to implement" much milder reforms. I should add that the bipartisan monitoring commission must report to the Congress on whether the mandated reforms have been carried out, and progress or lack thereof will clearly be a factor in the outcome of any second vote.

With respect to support for democracies in the region, the bill reallocates $350 million in previously appropriated but unused DOD funds for economic assistance to Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, and El Salvador, as well as UNICEF's regional child survival fund. I believe this is crucial to the success of U.S. policy in the region, and I am glad that my colleagues on the other side have joined me in endorsing it. As the Baltimore Sun states in an editorial today:

> Aid to the Contras makes sense only if it is part of a widely accepted regional effort that will allow Nicaragua's troubled neighbors to face down a Managua regime receiving more and more aid from the Soviet Union.

Finally, I state for legislative history that this title of the bill is separate from the part of the bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and that the provisions and conditions that apply to the committee bill do not apply to this title.

Mr. Chairman, those of us who have worked on this legislation do not claim that it is perfect. We do believe it is better than any of the alternatives that have been presented. The issue is not what passes or fails to pass on this floor today. It's not who "wins" or "loses." The issue is whether we can put together a credible policy that the American people can understand and support. Perhaps that is impossible. But at least I think, we should try.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON].

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the proposition of the gentleman from Oklahoma and in favor of an amendment that will be offered shortly by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAY], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CHANDLER], and myself.

In doing so, we offer a coherent policy for Central America. In doing so, we offer an effort to promote a policy which will be a pole star for the years to come between our country and that section of our hemisphere.

In a word, I would like to very briefly say what we will be providing as an amendment a bit later. We will provide $300 million in economic aid to promote democracy in Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras, and Guatemala. This is economic aid in our amendment to be offered later that will be taken from unspent, already appropriated moneys that have gone to the State Department.

Further, there will be $100 million in assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance, the Contras, split 70 percent in military and 30 percent in humanitarian assistance.

Third, Mr. Chairman, this is a policy that is the fulfillment of the Kissinger Commission recommendations on economic aid, some military assistance, and keen attention to human rights.

Our efforts over the past few years has been to find a peaceful solution to the problems of the region, and we all know that they have been severe, especially the thorny problem brought about as a result of Nicaragua and the Sandinista government there.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the issue is not whether we ought to defend American interests in Central America. We should. The issue is whether we are going to defend them effectively or ineffectively.

The President says that we need $100 million for the Contras. I would suggest that the Contras are probably more effective in running drugs than they are in fighting battles.

The American people oppose, by a margin of about 2 to 1, providing aid to the Contras, because they instinctively know that it would be wasted dollars.

I think we ought to take a look at what is happening. Originally, we were asked to provide $100 million in aid to the Contras. Now we have two alternatives before us, one of which would provide $400 million, another $450 million in combination packages for aid to the Contras and aid to Central America. We have a competing Republican amendment and we have a competing Democratic amendment. The price tag has grown and the price tag will continue to grow, because neither of these amendments will solve the basic problem.

If the American people opposed wasting $100 million in Nicaragua, I assure you they will oppose wasting $400 million or $450 million in Nicaragua and Central America.

I oppose both packages today, because they avoid the central problem, they waste money, and they will result in more killing.

Others will debate the advisability of our Nicaraguan policy. What I would like to focus on today is the idea that the provision of new economic aid to Central America, which has been grafted on to these packages, makes any sense at all. I would suggest to you that, under these circumstances, it does not.

The first reason I say that is because if we pass either the McCurdy amendment or the Edwards amendment, we will in fact cripple our ability to use other tools to defend our interests in the region or elsewhere in the world.

The foreign aid bill which our subcommittee will report out is already about $4 billion below the President's request. The McCurdy amendment, for instance, takes money out of defense; the Edwards amendment takes money out of a different source. But either way it means that our subcommittee, will be charged with either additional outlays on budget authority under these amendments. It means that in the next fiscal year we will have approximately $200 million, give or take a few dollars, we will have $200 million less to parcel out for other priority items which the President has indicated he wants us to provide money for.

Before this amendment was brought to us, we were already faced with a situation which would require virtually every major account in the foreign aid bill to be reduced by 20 percent, and it would mean that in the ESF area, for instance, if we make the provision, which we undoubtedly will, to set aside the needed money for Camp David, we would wind up having to cut the amount that goes to every other country in the world by some 60 percent below last year. If this amendment is adopted, it will require us to make even a deeper cut, and I doubt the President is going to want that.

Now the argument is made that we need to send these dollars to save Central American economic development. I think we ought to examine that. Let us take a look first at how much we have alread provided by way of economic assistance to Central America.

Since 1981, we have increased economic assistance to El Salvador by 171 percent. We have increased economic assistance to Guatemala by over 500 percent. We have increased economic assistance to Costa Rica by over 1,000 percent. We have increased economic assistance to Honduras by over 260 percent.

The Edwards amendment and the McCurdy amendment each would add additional amounts of money for those countries. The McCurdy amendment would add another $50 million to El Salvador; $75 million to Costa Rica; $75 million to Honduras; $100 million to Guatemala; and $5 million to Belize.

It would also provide additional UNICEF money and some aid operating expense money. Forty percent of that goes by way of cash transfer. Sixty percent of it goes by way of developmental projects. I would point out we already have in the pipeline in unexpended funds, some $550 million to those same Central American countries. They have not been able to use the money that we have already appropriated to them. I think we ought to ask why.

The reason is that added aid is not the way to attack the economic problem in Central America or Latin America. The problem goes far deeper and is far more fundamental than that. I would simply like to quote to you what Saul Linowitz, who headed the other Central American Commission has said in testimony before our committee.

He said, "I applaud the Kissinger recommendations with respect to an economic program but the timing is all-important. To make economic aid available when you have no infrastructure, when you have no real way of using that aid effectively does not advance the prospects for economic development or for peace."

Why do I agree with that statement? It seems to me that if the administration really wants to save Latin America we need to get at the gut problem. Neither of these amendments will do it. All additional economic aid to Central America will do at this time under these conditions is simply provide marginal assistance to those countries to enable them to pay back interest on debt that they already owe.

The administration is focusing its attention and its energies on an effort to provide $100 million in aid to the Contras. But the real problem in Latin America is the way the administration is mismanaging the mountain of debt in the Third World, most especially in Latin America, which is killing the economies of the region and killing our own economy in the process.

Latin America in 1982 had a combined debt of $320 billion. Today, they have a combined debt of $370 billion. The administration is following the policy of telling Latin America that their first priority is not to be economic growth, that their first priority is not to be jobs and food for their people, that their first priority has to be to make interest payments to American banks on past loans.

Latin America last year paid to the developed countries of the world $22 billion on interest payments on prior loans. Does anybody really think that providing $300 million in additional economic assistance is anything but spitting in the wind against a $22 billion capital outflow from those countries?

I hate to sound like my good friend JACK KEMP, but on this subject I very much am in agreement with him. The idea that you think that somehow you can save the economies of Central America with more foreign aid is nonsense. The administration policy says, "Pay the banks first." What is the result? The result for the U.S. economy is that because Latin countries have to use their foreign exchange to pay back U.S. banks rather than buying American products, we cannot sell American goods in Latin America or Central America any more.

It also means that we are forcing those countries to produce commodities in the agriculture area and in other areas which already are in surplus on worldwide markets. That means that Argentina, for instance, can expand its exports by 47 percent but they can only expand what they make from those exports by 3 percent because of falling world prices. That is not the way to solve the economic problems in Central America or Latin America.

Mexico is a basket case. Equador, which was in reasonably strong condition just 1½ years ago because of oil, is now close to being a basket case. Take a look at Central America. The combined debt for Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras is $11 billion. The additional amount in the McCurdy amendment will not even equal the interest payments which those four countries have to make to us this year.

I find mind boggling the idea that the administration and the Congress would devote its time and its energy and its resources to providing a $100 million aid package to a half-baked series of military operators in Nicaragua, focusing on the hole in the donut, when we are allowing Mexico to be in shambles, when we are doing nothing, nothing to prevent that mountain of debt from building and killing off the ability of those countries to run their economies in a way that will enable us to really cut off Marxists before they win more support in Latin America.

We need to face the central problem. If you really want to stop the Marxists in Central America we have to have a dramatic, radical change in our whole world economic policy. We have to stop killing our economy and the economies of Latin America and Central America. We have to recognize that our economic policies in the way we are managing that Third World debt is endangering not only our economy but endangering the very fragile democracies which now exist in some Central American countries and in Latin America.

I would urge the Members as an alternative to support the Hamilton amendment and to urge the administration to face up to the economic shambles which their management of that Third World debt problem is creating for Central and Latin America.

We have to face the fact that in the teeth of a $300 billion problem a lousy $300 million fix-up arrangement may give some people some political cover, but it will do nothing to attack the basic economic problem facing our potential allies in Central America.

We have to have a basic change if we want to contain the Sandinistas, if we want to contain Marxism. If we want to strengthen the economies of the region that is what we have got to do.

I would leave the Members with one other thought on a different subject. If anybody really believes that this little war that will be conducted under the administration policy will be a minor, little popgun affair, I urge you, I beg you to read the classified annex to this legislation which will describe in detail what kind of equipment and what kinds of activities will be carried out if the administration program prevails.

I urge you and beg to do it. If you believe, after reading that, that we really will have just a minor, little confrontation down there, indeed, you will be smoking something that is not legal.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, this vote may not be the key vote of the year as some have suggested, but it certainly could be. There is a general consensus now in this body of what we want and what we do not want. We want human rights; we want democracy; we want economic opportunity for the people of Central America.

What we do not want is a complete and total Soviet takeover of Nicaragua. What we do not yet agree on are tactics. My colleague from North Carolina earlier today stated, "Somewhere, someday down the line we are going to have to talk tough to the Soviet Union and Cuba."

I quote him to prove a different point than he made. Today could be that day. I urge the Members to support the Skelton-Edwards amendment because I believe it the best opportunity that provides the means for our Nation to accomplish these crucial and agreed-upon objectives for Central America.

The McCurdy proposal, though well-intentioned and possessing many positive elements, avoids making the crucial hard decision necessary for our policy to succeed. Simply put, we are facing a crisis in Central America. The Sandinista regime has been cynically using the Contadora negotiations as a smokescreen to buy time, much as Hitler did in Munich in 1938, to further militarize their nation and eliminate all opposition.

The Sandinistas feel just a little more time on negotiations, and a couple more votes in Congress, and the American people will tire of this whole debate and abandon efforts to promote democracy in the region. Perhaps they are right, but let us use today's vote to prove them wrong.

Mr. MCCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, as we all know, this is an extremely polarized issue. There are very few undecided Members. I would like to address my remarks to those few Members.

Mr. OBEY, my distinguished colleague from Wisconsin, addressed the economic aid portion of this measure. I would like to focus on those aspects of the bill.

Beginning with the passage of the rule, we have changed the policy of this Congress and of this Nation toward Nicaragua, because, as we are well aware, both the text of the bill, the McCurdy provisions, and the Republican substitute, the Edwards provisions, both contain a substantial amount of economic aid to the four democratic nations of the region.

This is a major departure from prior policy. It is finally an implementation of what was advocated in the bipartisan Kissinger Commission report and the so-called Jackson Commission.

To me this is a welcome relief, because it is the first time that we have had a bipartisan coherent regional policy to not only try to deal with the Sandinista problem, but, more important than that, to bolster the democracies in the region.

Several of us went down to Central America. For the information of those Members who have not been there recently, it is staggering to note that the progress that has been made in the four democratic countries surrounding Nicaragua is marvelous to behold: four democratic leaders that we can be proud of, but democratic regimes that are not entirely stable, that will not necessarily last forever, democratic regimes that we are going to have to support if we are going to have democratic leaders whom we can depend upon in that region.

For so long, as the Members are aware, our only allies down there were military figures. Now we have democrats. Let us support them. Now is an opportunity to do that, and both the Democratic initiative and the Republican initiative offer substantial economic aid.

As the Members are aware, we take our money from reprogrammed DOD money. It is a chance for Democrats to take appropriated military money and to turn it into peaceful aid to promote peace in that region. Under the Edwards plan, they prefer to take their money apparently from foreign aid that was, as I understand it, partially designated for African hunger relief. I understand that this aid was unable to be spent.

To me we are taking the money from the right place. It is reprogrammed money. It would not increase the deficit, and it will do a world of good down there to a region that we have largely neglected.

I have tremendous respect for my colleague from Wisconsin, but to me you can reduce many of his arguments to four basic points:

First, committee problems. I think that we all understand and respect committee problems, but with a major policy issue like this, we should not let committee problems override.

Second, I am afraid that throughout a lot of Democratic arguments there is a strong strain of isolationism, a lack of concern for other parts of the world that are extremely important to us both strategically and economically.

There is also a strain in many of these arguments in which we let the best be the enemy of the good: just because a plan is not perfect and does not address all global economic problems, it is not good enough.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAY].

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Edwards-Skelton bipartisan plan to provide aid to the United Nicaraguan Opposition, better known as UNO. UNO is the umbrella organization for the Contra political groups and freedom fighters. I wanted to explain this, because most Americans, including some Members of Congress, do not understand the organizational structure of the so-called Contra group.

Mr. Chairman, I was one of those who worked diligently on March 20, to defeat the last plan, which would have provided $100 million in aid and assistance.

I worked against this legislation for several reasons, but primarily because of concerns I had with reference to the credibility of the Contras, the accountability of UNO, and also, the accountability of the funds.

Mr. Chairman, during the last several weeks I have examined my vote of March 20, and I have attempted to educate myself by digging into the background of Central America, and the region. I have visited the UNO headquarters in Miami, FL, the FDN logistics directorate, the press, and the human rights organization in Honduras, and I have met with the heads of State of all of the Central American governments, including Daniel Ortega.

I am convinced that we were correct as a body to defeat the legislation on March 20, because it has put in motion a number of reforms which have been positive—reforms in our Nation's policy toward Central America as a region, reforms in the Contra organizations and their goals, and reforms in the procedures for accounting for the aid we distribute to Central America.

I want to give you the impressions of my visit and my investigation of the UNO and FDN organizations and their records and operating procedures.

First, I traveled to Miami, FL, where I met with the Contra leaders, Mr. Calero, Mr. Cruz, and Mr. Robelo and the Secretary General of the organization and visited with them for 2½ hours.

Almost 2 years ago these leaders, along with their advisers, realized that there has to be an organization other than a guerrilla fighting force. So the United Nicaraguan Opposition was organized as an umbrella group and in effect became an organization in exile based in Miami, which in my opinion could become the government in exile which the people of Nicaragua could build confidence in a rally to. The UNO's highest priority is a political settlement and not a military one. UNO is a fledgling infant, much smaller than the FDN (the primary Contra fighting force) which answers to it. It is making progress but has a long way to go and vitally needs our moral and financial assistance to be successful.

I was allowed without restriction to review in depth the accounting and purchasing procedures of the UNO and their military arm, the FDN—their logistics organization, their human rights organization, their press and propaganda organizations, and their directorate group. I also visited the Contra's base camps in the mountains on the Nicaraguan border on two occasions.

My colleagues, this is a larger and better coordinated organization than I had imagined. It has a strongly dedicated group of individuals including many professionals from all walks of life who are dedicating their lives to the organization in exile—many are serving without remuneration—and again I emphasize that they say their highest priority is a political victory. The director of their logistics operation is a graduate of Georgetown University, Dr. Gonzales, a prominent citizen and a director of UNO. He heads up a group consisting of the human rights coordinator, the press and propaganda division. There are numerous physicians, exiled business people and educators who are actively involved and dedicated to the UNO. There is no doubt, in my opinion that this group is serious and dedicated to a free democracy in Nicaragua.

I want to refer to the records which I examined. I was impressed with the meticulous detail of the records. I reviewed the procedures for purchasing and distributing equipment, food, clothing. My impression of the rather massive files, papework and documents remind me of the American bureaucracy which we are all familiar with.

Now this is not to say that their procedures should not improve but the accountability and records are not in the poor shape which we have been led to believe. The UNO is continuing to put in place procedures which will meet an even higher standard and scrutiny.

Mr. Arturo Cruz, a member of the UNO directorship, made the point that it is difficult to run a resistance movement which depends on a secure and confidential strategy when they have to make public to the world every detail. But he went on to say that they are willing to do so—they are willing for every allegation to be examined and if any allegation should turn out to be valid, they are pledged to confront and correct it. There has been a flood of allegations, but the GAO's intensive examination has not found any wrongdoing which they will certify. Despite this, our legislation, the bipartisan Skelton-Edwards-Ray-Chandler amendment, has strong accountability controls—much stronger than those offered in any other legisation we are considering to provide Contra aid. We have four separate sections which detail the accountability controls that must be put in place, and ensure that we in the Congress will receive a full accounting at regular intervals of how the aid has been spent, as well as regular confirmation that stringent accounting controls are being used.

My travels and studies and research have convinced me that massive misuse of funds has been exaggerated and that controls are now in place to provide the paperwork trail we need on future funds. I joined in introducing this amendment in part because it strengthens the accountability controls we need for future aid. I urge you to support our bipartisan amendment today.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE].

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, I stood at the well in March urging my colleagues to take a close look at what was being asked of us on behalf of the Contras. Since then I am more firmly convinced that "total" war is not the answer to prodding the Sandinistas toward a more open society.

I support the McCurdy provision. This is the approach I adopted earlier this year and I continue to support it.

I do not want to escalate the war in Nicaragua, but rather seek a peaceful solution to the conflict and a continuation of the Contadora process. So that—just as in the Philippines and Haiti—the Nicaraguan people are allowed to bring about democracy.

We must provide the tools for them to do so. We must assist their transformation into a viable political alternative to the Marxist Sandinista regime.

We must sent a message to the Sandinistas that there is no alternative but democracy, and that the surest way to end U.S. aid to the Contras is to sign and honor a peace treaty that is acceptable to the United States and the democratic governments in Central America. To do otherwise is to prolong the suffering of the Nicaraguan people.

This humanitarian aid that I'm supporting must be better accounted for in the future. It is troubling to all of us who voted for the $27 million aid package last July that nearly half is questionably unaccounted for. There must be better accounting of these funds and I urge the administration to cooperate with Congress in this effort.

I am voting for aid to the Contras because it is important that the United States takes a stand for democracy in the hemisphere.

I also want to say that I believe the best approach to address the situation in Nicaragua is through negotiations. But, Mr. Chairman, I would want to make it very plain: the Contadora—group particularly the Central American governments—must take strong steps to convince Nicaragua to permit its people to experience the freedoms for which they so bravely fought—to pressure the Sandinistas to eliminate the presence of Soviet bloc advisors and the unsavory influence of antidemocratic regimes.

The nations of Central America have more to lose from a Marxist Nicaragua than any other group. They should take the boldest initiative through the ongoing negotiations.

Humanitarian aid for the Contras is not an escalation of the violence in Nicaragua but a statement endorsing balance and a call for negotiations and an end to the conflict. The Contras appropriately can keep the pressure on the Sandinistas to sign a regional peace agreement.

Mr. Chairman, I have consistently supported humanitarian aid. I received letters of commendation from the administration for taking this stand. They now pressure Congress for military aid, and I think this adjustment in their position should be noted.

Humanitarian aid to the Contras will send a message to Ortega that State-supported terrorism will not be the cancer that destroys democracy in Central America.

The United States cannot stand idly by and wash our hands of the conflict in Central America. We must offer support reflective of a democratic society and continue to work with our neighbors toward those ideals.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I say the Contadora process must continue. Humanitarian aid can ensure that process.

The best hope for us is to continue the negotiation process at this point and hope that we can reach a peaceful solution. That is the best way to get peace now and I hope it is the procedure that we follow.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER].

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested several times in the course of this debate that issues related to title II of this legislation are not black or white, but an endless variety of shades of gray.

This Member of Congress, a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and a former member of the Western Hemisphere Subcommittee, defers to only a few Members of this body in interest and knowledge of Latin America and the Caribbean. This Member is acquainted with the various policy nuances and certainly has not been uncritical of either the past actions of the House and Senate Intelligence Committees on the matter of Nicaragua, nor uncritical of either the Carter or Reagan administration on all of their decisions on Central America. This Member has also attempted to avoid either extreme language or actions on the matter of aiding the Nicaraguans who fight against the Sandinista regime of Nicaragua.

It is, however, in this Member's judgment, clear that the Skelton-Edwards amendment should be adopted. The so-called McCurdy compromise should be rejected, for it lacks the key element of compromise that is necessary for protecting the national interests of the democratic Central American republics and the United States of America. It approves no military aid to the Contras—and that is the only option really available at this time to bring pressure upon the Sandinista regime. That pressure is essential to restore a legitimate democracy to Nicaragua. It is essential pressure on the Sandinistas to leave their neighbors alone through a verifiable Central America peace and military de-escalation plan that satisfies Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras, and Guatemala, too. Although undoubtedly well-intentioned, the McCurdy approach is one more postponement and it will bring us no closer to a Central American peace. It will only provide more time for the growth of this Soviet bloc base on the mainland of North America.

It is frequently observed in this debate that the American people oppose military aid to the Contras. The attitude of the American public cannot and should not be treated lightly in this, The People's House. But now asking them "if they favor military aid to the Contras" is not the only question. Ask them "if they want a second Soviet bloc country in the Western Hemisphere—this one on the North American Continent." Overwhelmingly the response would be a resounding "no."

Earlier America made a tragic mistake in not pushing Cuba toward democratic institutions and traditions and toward basic economic reform. Today, realistically, Nicaragua must be assessed as a Soviet block country or, as a minimum, in the final stages of becoming a full-fledged Soviet bloc country under the hard-line Marxist regime that runs it. Their goals of regionalizing the Marxist revolution in Central America are publically stated and their military and terrorist tactics and armaments for achieving that revolution are all too apparent.

It is interesting to note that there is no appreciable support for the Sandinista regime in the Congress today. There is no longer doubt among Members of Congress that the Sandinistas are engaged in attempts to subvert the governments of their neighbors. There is also no longer any doubt about the fact that over thousands of Cubans are actively and directly involved in the Nicaraguan military.

As recent as 2 years ago there were substantial questions about these matters among Members of Congress. There is no longer any doubt since there is documented evidence from a variety of sources for every Member of Congress to examine. High-level Sandinista defectors are one source of such information. The only important question that remains is what the United States should do about a hard-line Marxist regime in this hemisphere. It has already become a Soviet outpost on the mainland of North America.

The Sandinista regime is not really interested in any evenhanded, verifiable Central American originated peace plan; nor are they interested in real, evenhanded measures for reducing the militarization of Central America. They certainly are not interested in power-sharing with even legitimate democratic forces in Nicaragua. Increasingly, it is clear that Cuban and Soviet bloc advisers call the shots at the negotiating table. Without military pressure—directly by the United States or indirectly through aid to the Contras—the Nicaraguans will persist in their aggressive plans to bring down the democratically elected governments of their neighbors and stamp out any political dissent and religious freedom within Nicaragua.

The time for delay is long past and the only real choice before us is now really crystal clear. Yes, there are legitimate criticisms of very real and tragic Contra abuses. It is almost always true of a largely untrained and poorly disciplined force. They, the Contras, are, nevertheless, fighting against a Marxist regime that is trying to destroy their neighbors' fledgling or longstanding democracies. They are fighting against what is clearly an emerging Soviet bloc country on the mainland of North America and they are fighting against totalitarianism in Nicaragua.

My colleagues, as you cast your vote on the Edwards-Skelton amendment, ask yourself whether the American people really want another Soviet bloc country in this hemisphere. Ask yourself if history will forgive you if America waited too long or was unwilling to protect Costa Rica from Sandinista subversion, terrorism, and aggression. Ask yourself if you gave the new democracies in Guatemala, El Salvador, or Honduras a chance to establish their roots and flourish. Ask yourself if history will judge you as willing to live up to America's leadership responsibilities for the free world. Ask yourself if you will be judged ready to halt this Marxist cancer in Central America when it was possible to contain or eliminate it.

We've seen the House stalled far too long on this crucial issue. Time has expired; we've gone the extra mile in testing the Nicaraguans' interest in a Central American peace plan and basic freedoms for their people. They have failed. Keep the only available, effective pressure on the Sandinistas until they accept a legitimate, verifiable peace and democratization plan created in Central America by Central Americans. Vote "yes" on the Skelton-Edwards amendment.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Tennessee [Mrs. LLOYD].

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Skelton-Edwards amendment.

Like many Members, I went to Central America last spring for honest answers—answers on how and why and if we should continue our support for the democratic process south of our border.

I came home completely convinced, yes, we must continue to share the responsibility of supporting the fragile democracies, and adopt specific policies to be effective and obtain the maximum benefit for our dollars invested.

First of all, I am convinced the aid should have been legislatively bound for a reasonable time to allow for the Contadora negotiations to allow the funding to serve as a leverage to promote dialog. Every President, every diplomat, every military leader I met agreed with this position.

Second, I am convinced a second vote would be detrimental. Every Central American leader I met with also expressed their opposition to a second vote on the aid. The second vote would diffuse the commitment of our country and erode the strength of our support.

A second vote will say "maybe yes, maybe no" we will stand behind our neighbors in their quest for peace and democracy.

But we've had a reasonable time now for negotiations. We've tried but we aren't there. Today, we can send a strong message that the United States of America—not 60 days from now—supports and encourages democracy in Central America—denounces communism in our hemisphere. We can demonstrate this commitment by a strong vote of support for the Skelton-Edwards compromise.

The McCurdy language is part of the way, but let's not erode the strength of our commitment by saying maybe yes, maybe no. We'll tell you for sure in 90 days.

Let us get on with our responsibilities now.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Latin American Subcommittee, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES].

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished chairman from Wisconsin for yielding.

When we passed the appropriation last year for $27 million in assistance to the Contras, my colleagues will recall that in the law that was passed we included language that said, "The President shall establish appropriate procedures to insure that any humanitarian assistance provided by the United States is used only for the intended purposes."

My subcommittee asked the General Accounting Office to do an audit of the expenditure of the $27 million to see if that provision of the law had been followed. It is rather clear, given the findings of the General Accounting Office, that the way in which this program has been administered has not been consistent with that requirement that there be an assurance that the funds be used only for the intended purposes.

Later I will be offering an amendment, along with the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], to provide that no funds that may be appropriated today, can be spent until we have a complete report from the administration on how the last funds were spent, certainly a reasonable requirement. I do not think any Member would want to see more funds go down until we have a report from the administration on how the last funds were expended.

I think it is relevant as we consider votes on the McCurdy proposal and the other proposals before us to consider some of the very serious questions that have been raised with respect to the expenditure of the last $27 million.

For example, the General Accounting Office found that out of the accounts into which funds were deposited, some of this $27 million, out of those accounts some rather questionable payments were made. About a million and a half dollars went to the armed forces of Honduras, for example.

Very substantial amounts, in the hundreds of thousands of dollars, were deposited out of those accounts into accounts in the Cayman Islands and in the Bahamas.

Other significant amounts went to individuals who apparently have no connection that we can discover with providing medicine or food or clothing to the Contras.

There are a lot of important questions to be answered about this program. Our subcommittee has offered a number of opportunities to the State Department to appear before the committee to respond to the questions that have been raised and to answer the various questions that were included in the General Accounting Office report to the Foreign Affairs Committee, and the State Department has refused to appear.

The first invitation was issued on June 9 of this year, a couple weeks ago, and the State Department said that they could not appear as quickly as we had hoped.

We issued a second invitation. They said they could not appear. We issued a third invitation, and here we are on the moment of the vote and the State Department has yet, the administration has yet to come before the Congress to respond to the very serious questions that have been raised about the way the last $27 million was spent.

They have issued a fact sheet which I hope many of you have seen and perhaps we will have an opportunity to discuss that this afternoon. It raises more questions than it answers; but there are other questions that I would pose. I think we want answers to these questions before we vote for more money, whether it is $30 million or $100 million for the Contras.

I invite the State Department before we vote on this question to answer these questions. For example, why was there a payment from a supplier to the Cayman Islands bank account of a colonel of the Honduran Armed Forces?

Why were there more than $75,000 in payments to a person who appears to be the wife of a key Honduran military officer, reported to be the principal contact with the FDN of the Honduran military?

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, today we are again debating and voting on President Reagan's request for $100 million in assistance to the freedom fighters in Nicaragua. I am sorry that we refuse to deal forthrightly with this issue and make a decision which will be in effect for a reasonable length of time.

Over the past 4 years this issue has come before the House again and again and yet there are those here who still try to insure that we will not have a final decision on the question of our support for freedom and democracy in the Americas. Those who would have us vote today and then vote again later this year and then vote again next year are not only temporizing and endangering the lives and prospects of the freedom fighters; they are playing politics with the security and future well-being of the United States.

I must say that I am sadly disappointed that this crucial foreign policy issue has degenerated into a partisan political battle seen by some as a way to attack the President and appeal to partisan emotions when the interests of the United States call for consensus and nonpartisanship. Those who refuse the President of the United States request to address the House on this vital matter and who are also the leading opponents of that President's efforts to save Central America from Communist expansionism must bear the burden of their actions when future history is written and the results of today's decision will be clear for all to see.

Mr. Chairman, there is clearly defined opposition to the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua. Popular support for the Communists was never universal and we have seen that support erode steadily as freedoms disappear in Nicaragua as fast as goods on the market shelves of that Government controlled economy. Accusations of human rights violations by the freedom fighters have been investigated and refuted or acknowledged and punished. At the same time the Sandinistas continue their repression of so many human rights of the Nicaraguan population that I do not have time to list them all.

Mr. Chairman, we have tried to negotiate with the Sandinistas. We have tried to nudge them gently with warnings, appeals and with mild economic sanctions. The results that these attempts have achieved from the Sandinistas is more than $500 million in Soviet weapons and the almost total suppression of the 6 million people remaining in that unfortunate country. The delivery and use of helicopter gunships, tanks, heavy artillery, and now Soviet piloted reconnaissance aircraft should be adequate evidence for any reasonable person of the Soviet desire to destabilize the Western Hemisphere and of the Sandinistas' willingness to obediently follow orders to sacrifice their nation and their people for the advance of the parasitic Communist philosophy.

The time for vacillation is over. The time to make a decision is here. There is no rational reason to postpone our decision further and to jeopardize the lives of the freedom fighters and the fate of Nicaragua. We must act. We must help these people. And we must help them now before the weight of Soviet weapons and Soviet bullets wipes out the hopes and aspirations of another people and dims the light of freedom by covering it with the blood of people who do not want to be slaves.

I support the bipartisan Edwards-Skelton amendment to H.R. 5052 and I urge all of my colleagues to join me in pursuing our national duty to help those who are willing to die to be free.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the McCurdy amendment.

This amendment reminds me of the young man who killed his mother and father. Then he went to court and threw himself on the mercy of the court because he was an orphan.

The McCurdy amendment kills the President's initiatives in Nicaragua. It also kills the Contras' efforts to place more pressure on the Sandinistas.

I would like to spend my time, since that is out of the way, talking about some of the statements that have been made here in reference to the Skelton-Edwards amendment.

First, I want to address the continuous allegations of drug running by the Contras and set the record straight. The No. 1 country guilty of sending drugs into this country and polluting the minds of our young people is Mexico; second, Colombia, and third, Panama.

The Contras are not drug smugglers. That is a smokescreen.

Second, there has been much talk about accountability. Well, how can we account for the aid when we write restrictive language that says no U.S. Government agent can go down there and make sure that the supplies get to the Contras?

Third, I want to talk about the polls. It seems that everyone says the American public is not behind the President because he is wrong and 2 to 1 are opposed to Contra aid.

In my opinion, our job is to lead. It is to go out and educate our constituents and not run for the political safety net.

Last, but certainly not least, I want to talk about the mindset of some of the editorial writers in this country who many of my colleagues are reading very religiously every day and shaping their opinions about Contra aid.

These people are the same people who said that we ought to withdraw support from Batista because he was such a bad person in Cuba. What did we get in his place? Castro, a Communist surrogate dictator. These are the same people who said we ought to withdraw support from Somoza. What did we get in Somoza's place? Ortega, another Communist puppet.

These are the same people who said instead of backing our troops in Vietnam we ought to follow those who are spitting on the American flag and burning their draft cards. These are the same people who said we ought to give away the Panama Canal.

I mention all of that because I think the mindset is very, very important. I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY] and "yes" on Skelton/Edwards.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. BADHAM].

Mr. BADHAM. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, and I rise in strong support of the Edwards-Skelton proposal.

Mr. Chairman, Members from both sides of the aisle, have gotten up here today, and made any number of arguments and statements both in favor of, and against, aid to the Nicaraguan Democratic Resistance. Some of them have described prison systems and arms buildups, while others have discussed atrocities and alleged illegal monetary dealings.

While I welcome my colleagues' elaborations, I feel that some of these remarks are, at best, entertaining diversions. This is an emotional issue, and tempers have at times run high. As duly elected lawmakers, though, I would encourage you to approach this debate in a logical fashion. My colleagues, look carefully at this issue, strip away its many shades of gray, and make a decision on the one underlying question: Do we, as a people, actively support democratic institutions and opportunities for the people of Central America? Do the people of Central America deserve the same chance at self-determination that we had as a fledgling nation?

I think everyone believes our Central American neighbors should have the chances that we have had. Therefore, let's give them that opportunity. What we're discussing here is whether we're going to spend $100 million to do so.

I'll be frank with you, particularly those of you on the other side of the aisle, I would rather take the chance and spend the $100 million that the President has requested than proceed in the manner you advocate.

I have two reasons for feeling this way. First, to be perfectly honest, your track record is not the best going. Many of those now opposed to this aid package were also against aiding the Salvadoran Government, and predicted a new Vietnam in El Salvador if we provided aid. Well, we did so, and as far as I'm aware, we have yet to commit combat troops.

Second, if the President is wrong, 100 million Americans are out $1. But if you're wrong, my constituents and yours will be paying quite a different price. My colleagues, I, for one, refuse to pay for isolationist tendencies with the blood of my constituents.

It is important, indeed vital, that we support the President in Nicaragua. I would urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on the bipartisan Edwards-Skelton proposal.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, 164 years ago, the United States first urged the recognition of the emerging Latin American republics. Simon Bolivar spoke then of his plans to make the Americas the greatest region in the world. "Greatest," he said, "not so much by virtue of her area and her wealth, as by her freedom* * *"

Bolivar's vision has never been in greater peril.

Central America, and Nicaragua in particular, pose serious and difficult challenges for the United States. If there is anything on which we can agree, it is the complexity of the issues we face in that troubled region. In truth; there are no simple solutions to the current situation in Central America. There is no easy answer.

Those who seek to simplify the Nicaraguan question by focusing solely on the Contras do little to aid progress toward the broad, bipartisan policy that is sorely needed. In fact, the Contras have had major problems with internal discipline, and have had limited success in winning the support of the Nicaraguan people. While there may well be a place for the Contras in our Central American policy, they should not be the sole recipients of our aid, our support, or our sympathy. The administration has made the Contras the primary instrument of our policies in Central America; I believe this is unwise and may well be self-defeating.

Since the last vote on this issue, this fact has become clearer to all of us in the Congress. The bipartisan delegation which met the five Presidents of Central America earlier this month brought to light critical information about the situation in the region. Armed with this better understanding of changing conditions there, I believe we are ready to formulate a wiser and broader policy equal to the challenges we face.

Such a policy is both urgently needed and eminently possible. We have ceased to focus on whether the Sandinistas are a threat to their neighbors; that is accepted. We now face a much more difficult question: What should we do about the Sandinistas? What kind of long-range policy will give stability to Central America and help democracy to flourish?

I believe the McCurdy plan as incorporated in the military construction appropriations bill sets us on a course toward a comprehensive approach to Central America. Beyond the provision of $30 million in nonmilitary aid immediately to the Contras and $70 million in military aid after an October vote of approval, I would like to note some important provisions of the McCurdy plan that address specific and legitimate concerns many Americans have had on this issue.

First, a bipartisan congressional observer team would be appointed by the leadership of the House and Senate. The group would report regularly on the progress of the Contadora peace negotiations and the status of human rights in Nicaragua. It is my hope that this commission will inject an objective, dispassionate voice into this ongoing debate.

There has been much discussion about human rights abuses by the Contras. I have no doubt that those abuses occurred, and we need to act to correct this situation. In the McCurdy plan, specific funds would be designated to provide training to the Contra soldiers in the observance of human rights; and procedures would be created to stop funding if those who perpetrated such abuses were not expelled from their forces.

Many Americans are also concerned by revelations of improprieties in the use of the humanitarian assistance funds given in 1985. In response, this bill provides for much stricter accounting procedures for the funds appropriated to the Contras.

Another area of deep concern to me has been the narrow focus of our policy debate on the Contras to the exclusion of consideration of regional concerns. It is surely folly to believe that the decision on aid to the Contras will complete all necessary decisions on this region so full of hope and turmoil. We need to commit ourselves to a long-range partnership with the fragile democratic governments of Central America. The most important step we can take toward assuring the long-term stability of the region is the commitment of our resources and leadership to the economic development of Central America. To address the need for a regional approach, the McCurdy plan authorizes the diversion of existing funds to support a $350 million economic development plan for Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, and Costa Rica.

We need to press this mini-Marshall plan for Central America. Not since President John Kennedy founded the Alliance for Progress in the early 1960's has any administration set clearly defined social and economic goals for the region and then aggressively worked to achieve those goals. It is time to revive that spirit and commitment.

Finally, the United States must more clearly define to Cuba and the Soviet Union our vital security limits in Central America. We must be prepared to enforce those limits with American strength. Our responses must be specific and unequivocal—not undefined strategies such as the random mining of Nicaraguan harbors.

I do not consider the McCurdy plan a final answer to this extremely complex and difficult issue, but it is a broad and logical beginning toward crafting a bipartisan policy for all of Central America.

There are great opportunities for democracy to flourish in Central America. In Honduras, in Guatemala, in El Salvador, fledgling democracies are trying to grow. A new generation of democratic leaders has come to the fore in these nations that have for so long suffered under military juntas and the fear of political violence. Let us seize this opportunity to create a larger policy for our hemisphere.

As President Kennedy said 25 years ago:

> Our continents are bound together by common history, the endless exploration of new frontiers. Our nations are the product of a common struggle . . . and our people share a common heritage, the quest for the dignity and the freedom of man.

Today we have the opportunity to set our Nation's policy on a course toward security and democracy for our neighbors. We must give strength and direction to those striving for freedom across Central America.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman. I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCHUGH], a member of the Intelligence Committee and the Foreign Operations Subcommittee.

Mr. MCHUGH. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the McCurdy proposal, and if it should survive this debate to final passage, I would urge the Members to vote against final passage.

I say this reluctantly because I do respect the work and the sincerity of the people who have worked with my friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY], in fashioning this proposal. I know they have approached the issue seriously and believe they have a package which will address our interests in a responsible way.

I am also aware that the package, on its face, may appear attractive to many of our colleagues. First of all, with respect to Contra aid, it would provide $30 million in its initial phase for nonlethal assistance, and certainly as compared with the administration proposal as presented by my friends, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr.

EDWARDS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON], it is less objectionable for that reason. Their proposal, as we know, would provide $100 million in lethal and nonlethal assistance.

But for those of us who believe it is fundamentally wrong for the United States to provide support to the military efforts of the Contras, the assistance incorporated in the McCurdy proposal, even though it is called nonlethal, obviously is assistance to an army in the field, and for that reason should be rejected by those of us who believe that the Contra military effort is not consistent with U.S. interests.

A second and perhaps more beguiling element of the McCurdy proposal relates to the additional $350 million in economic assistance that would be provided to the four governments in Central America, three of which could be called fledgling democracies and the fourth being Costa Rica, which is a more settled democracy. This is attractive because we do have a strong interest in encouraging democracy and we do need to provide support to democratic governments in Central America, particularly since most of them are fragile democracies. So, on the face of it, additional economic aid does appear attractive and appropriate for us to consider very seriously.

Why should we not do it? I think there are two important reasons for not doing it at this time.

First of all, money alone will not solve the problems of Central America. Money from the United States in the form of economic aid will simply not do the job. It is important to remember that since 1980, in addition to $1 billion in military aid for Central America, we have provided almost $4 billion in economic aid. Yet, in each and every year since 1980, per capita GNP in Central America has gone down. Is it because we did not provide enough economic assistance? I do not think so. I think $4 billion is a lot of money. Basically it is because the continuing conflict and instability in that region makes it impossible for economic assistance to work effectively standing alone, because there has been capital flight from that region, and because of international economic problems, including the debt problems the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] spoke about.

So, yes, we should provide significant help to our friends in Central America, and we have done so, but let us not assume that simply pumping more money into Central America in the form of aid will solve the problems.

Second, and most important perhaps, it is important for us to consider aid to Central America in the context of our entire foreign aid program, and consider it in the light of our other vital interests in the world. No one argues that Central America is not important to us. But we also have significant interests in other parts of the world: In Asia, in the Middle East, in Africa, in base rights countries, in international institutions.

In a few weeks those of us who serve on the Committee on Appropriations will have to write a foreign aid bill which takes into account all of these interests, and we will have to do so with 20 percent less money than we have in fiscal year 1986. That is going to require us to make some tough decisions about how to allocate a very limited foreign aid budget among all of these important interests, including Central America.

Consider some of the choices we have to make. Consider the Philippines, for example, a nation struggling to recapture and retain its democratic form of government, a country with significant economic and security problems, a country in which we have important base rights, a country which has twice the population of any country in Central America and is poorer than any country in that region. Yet today the Philippines receives less economic assistance from the United States than any country in Central America.

This year Central America has already been allocated $820 million in economic aid. If either the Edwards or McCurdy proposal prevails, over $1 billion of aid will flow to Central America this year. The Philippines has gotten $200 million in economic assistance. With the supplemental appropriations conference report we just passed, it would be increased to $300 million.

Please also consider the world debt problem that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] referred to. The Secretary of the Treasury, James Baker, has said that the international institutions, including the World Bank, will have to play an increasingly active role in addressing the problem. Yet, we are $200 million behind in existing commitments to these international institutions, and next year we are going to have an additional 20-percent cut in our commitments to these banks.

Consider also sub-Saharan Africa, with 15 times the population of Central America and less than half the per capita GNP, a region with desperate human and economic problems, and it gets less economic aid than Central America today.

I ask you to allow the committees that have jurisdiction to consider all of these important interests in the context of our entire foreign aid budget, including our interests in Central America, and then you can make a judgment on the whole package in a manner which enables you to weigh the relative merits of our aid allocations.

For these reasons, I urge you to reject the McCurdy and Edwards proposals, and support the Hamilton substitute.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP].

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my strong support for the bipartisan amendment to be offered by Mr. EDWARDS and Mr. SKELTON. Their amendment recognizes that we need to support the democracies of Central America, which face a difficult battle. They are struggling to expand their economies and the quality of life for all of their people, while standing up to the Communist threat of military expansion and subversion.

I believe the Edwards-Skelton amendment parallels the well-reasoned policy approach set by the bipartisan Commission on Central America. That Commission upon which I served and the Jackson plan that grew out of its recommendations, called for a balanced program of military and economic aid. It rejected a policy of containment as an adequate means of dealing with the Sandinista-Cuban-Soviet nexus. Containment is not enough: The Sandinistas must understand that nothing short of democratic reform and nonbelligerency toward their neighbors will be acceptable to the United States.

And the Commission called for continuing existing sources of pressure on the Sandinista government—including emphatically the Contras.

Mr. Chairman, for more than 5 years, a small faction of this House has consistently opposed every major aspect of President Reagan's policy in Central America. In 1981 and 1982, they said that there was no real Communist threat. In 1983 and 1984 they opposed realistic levels of military aid to El Salvador. And throughout they have said that the United States intends to send U.S. troops to fight in the region.

Today, this same minority of the far left are leading the opposition to the bipartisan amendment before us, which would provide $100 million in aid to the freedom fighters of Nicaragua, and another $300 million to support the democracies of Central America. But history has proved their judgment on Central America is wrong.

Earlier this year they were wrong again. No sooner had the House vote of March 20 denied aid to the democratic resistance in Nicaragua than the Communist Sandinistas raided Honduran territory to wipe out Contra bases.

The March offensive was the deepest and bloodiest incursion to date. Sadly, I predict it will not be the last.

The same small minority that saw no threats, that persuaded a majority in this House to block effective military assistance to the democratic resistance in Nicaragua, continues to put forth only one policy: a one-track option of negotiations.

They say negotiate, even though the Soviet Union pours over $500 million in military aid into Nicaragua and the United States Congress does nothing. Negotiate, they say, even though the Sandinista military grows to nearly 120,000 troops—with Soviet bloc and PLO and Libyan advisers—and the United States Congress does nothing.

Negotiate, they say, even though the Sandinista military grows stronger every day, the threat to the region grows greater, the internal totalitarian noose grows tighter—and the United States Congress does nothing.

Men and women are fighting and dying in a lonely struggle to regain their freedom and their God-given rights—and still the Congress waits for negotiations to work. But how can we expect good-faith negotiations from a regime that has violated every promise it made to the OAS? How can we expect diplomatic progress when procrastination only buys Ortega more time to consolidate his totalitarian powers? How can you expect to stop the spread of communism in our hemisphere when the U.S. Congress declares is neutrality.

This conflict in Nicaragua is no simple civil war. Libya has provided $400 million in military assistance to Nicaragua. Qadhafi is helping the Sandinistas as part and parcel of his campaign of terror against the United States.

We need to ensure that terrorists have no sancutary anywhere and that includes Nicaragua.

The legislative record of constant deferral and delay and conditionality is not policy. It is procrastination and self-delusion.

So my colleagues, consider the great consequences of your vote. The hour is already late. Any further delays will only buy more time for the communists: more time for incursions, more time for the Sandinistas to mount a phony peace campaign, more time for more Contras to die and more time for Soviet style foreign aggression to succeed in our hemisphere.

Freedom and democracy can win, but only if we who were sent here by the people deal with the difficult questions and make the hard choices. To vote down this amendment is to increase the risk this Nation would face from a Soviet-Cuban base in Central America. We cannot escape the verdict of history.

Let it be said of our generation that we shouldered our responsibilities that democracy and freedom prevailed.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes and 45 seconds to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT].

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the McCurdy provision. Since I hope to be able to speak later in the debate on the McCurdy plan itself, I would like to address myself now mainly to the economic aid provisions in McCurdy plan.

In February, when we began this debate, it was a debate over $100 million in Contra aid and nothing more. The Kissinger Commission recommended military aid. It recommended military aid as a shield behind which to work out social and economic and political problems. We endorsed the Kissinger Commission. We authorized the money for it.

For the most part, its economic aid provisions have been honored in the breech. We have been buying the shield, but not the aid. We scrubbed the defense budget and shook out $100 million in loose change for Contra aid, but somehow that process did not work when it came to finding money to back up our own commitments to economic aid.

It did not work, at least, until, to the great credit of Mr. McCURDY, we scrubbed again and we found over $300 million which could be applied to fill out this gap, could be applied to economic aid for Central America.

This bill provides 3½ times more economic aid than military aid. It restores balance to the Contra aid proposal. It takes something that was a wobbly legged policy and makes a complete coherent policy for the whole region out of it.

When we went to Central America a few weeks ago, Contra aid was at the top of our agenda. We were, all of us, anxious to know how the Central American Presidents stood on Contra aid. Let me tell you how they stood.

We had to bring the subject up. We had to broach the subject ourselves. It may have been at the top of our agenda; it was somewhere near the bottom of theirs.

Arauz, the newly elected President of Costa Rica, is officially against Contra aid. Cerezo of Guatemala takes a position of "active neutrality." Those are his words. He asks us rhetorically: "How can I support United States aid to the Contras and oppose Cuban aid to guerrillas in Guatemala?"

Duarte says the same thing. The only thing that all five of these Central American Presidents openly support is aid, economic aid for their countries. They tell us that, at bottom, their economies will survive; their democracies will survive only if their economies grow.

They make that equation, all of them, clearly and emphatically. President Arauz of Costa Rica told us, "For the first time in history," he said, "four of the five Central American countries are democratic, but these are fragile. vulnerable democracies and we still," he said, "must show that democracy will work in Central America."

This is what he said: "The Indian in Guatemala; the campesino in El Salvador is going to measure our success in economic terms."

President Duarte of El Salvador told us: "The best pressure we can put on the Communists is not the Contras, but showing that democracy works." Clearly, he said, "We will show democracy works when we show that our market economies supported by democratic means work themselves."

"Right now," he said, "this is happening." But Duarte went on to tell us that his economic program is exacting such a heavy political price that he is not sure that he can continue to sustain it. "The poorest," he said "is suffering the most."

It would be the worst sort of hypocrisy to vote for Contra aid and to tell the country and to tell ourselves and our constituents that we are addressing the problem in Central America. Unless we are willing to vote for economic aid, substantial aid, we are not addressing the problem at all. Indeed, we are worsening it by widening the violence and instability that plague this region and doing nothing to correct the problems at their source.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RINALDO].

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Chairman, 3 months ago I stood before this body and urged my colleagues to support President Reagan's proposal to aid the Contras in Nicaragua. At that time I listed the numerous reasons why I believed the aid was necessary. Today, I believe the reasons which warranted my support for aid then are stronger than ever.

Earlier this year I spoke of my concern about the amount of Soviet military aid the Sandinistas had received as well as the presence of Soviet and Cuban military advisers. It is now estimated that the Sandinistas have received as much military equipment this year to date as they did in all of 1985. The doubling of the amount of arms entering Nicaragua is not the sign of a country preparing for a negotiated settlement.

In March I expressed my concern about the restrictions that were placed on the activities of the Catholic Church. Since that time, Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo, archbishop of Managua, has stated that the church has been bound and gagged by the Communist regime. The bishops of Nicaragua attempted to publish a plea for negotiations in their weekly column in the newspaper La Prensa, the only private newspaper in the country. This plea for cooperation and dialog was censored by the Sandinistas as a threat to the country. Radio Catolica the only Catholic radio station in Nicaragua remains shut down by direct order of the State.

I have previously warned about the immigration problem this country would face if the Sandinistas were successful in spreading their revolution without borders to other Central American nations. A look at what has happened in Nicaragua is an indication of what could occur throughout the region. Since the Sandinistas rise to power in 1979, almost 10 percent of the population has left the country. The number of Nicaraguan refugees in other Central American countries and illegal immigrants in the United States now comes to nearly 225,000. Earlier this spring the Sandinista military attacked numerous Miskito Indian villages along the Atlantic coast. This unexpected assault triggered a mass exodus of 11,000 Miskitos across the river into Honduras, necessitating the United Nations High Commission on Refugees to declare a state of emergency.

It is often argued that we are driving the Sandinistas into the Soviet camp by our unwillingness to provide economic and humanitarian aid to the people of Nicaragua. Well, we tried that approach at the outset. From the time of their coming to power in July 1979 through April 1981, the United States provided the Sandinista government with over $118 million in aid, more than we provided the Somoza regime for the previous 20 years. And what was their response to this assistance? The establishment of ties with Cuba and the Soviet Union and the initiation of a massive military assistance program.

I have met with both the Contra aid supporters and those opposed to any further U.S. assistance. At the core of the opposition to our aid to the Contras is the fear that it will drag this country into a war we do not want, will not fight, and which the American people will not support. Well, the very last thing we wish is to involve American troops in a border war with Nicaragua and its neighbors. That is precisely the reason why it is necessary to act now in a modest way by giving the Contra forces the weapons they need to prevent the Sandinista from exporting their violent Communist revolution throughout Central America and to our own borders. If we fail to assist them, we will witness the collapse of the only armed resistance to a Sandinista domination of Central America and possibly the eventual fall of El Salvador, Costa Rica, Honduras, and Guatemala to the Soviet and Cuban backed armed revolution in this hemisphere.

There are thousands of Cuban-Americans and other Latin Americans in this country who have fled dictatorships. They know the price of appeasing Castro and the Soviet supported rebels. They lost their homelands, their liberty, and their families to Communist and rightwing oppression. Our aid to the Contras is a powerful symbol of hope not only to these people, but a clear declaration of our national will to resist Soviet-Cuban-Sandinista expansion in our hemisphere. By acting now to bolster the Contra resistance, we will offer millions of people in Central and Latin America hope for a better solution to their economic, social, and political problems than the Sandinistas and Fidel Castro offer them. That hope will vanish and political resistance will crumble in the region if we refuse aid to the only armed force willing to fight for freedom in Nicaragua.

We must not leave the Contras defenseless or else we would set the stage for direct American military intervention in Central America. That is a prospect none of us want and indeed one which we can and must avoid.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CHAPMAN].

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman, what is the best policy for the United States to achieve our desired results in Central America? Results that every Member of this body agree on.

I think first it is a regional policy that recognizes the negotiations that are currently underway; and made no mistake, I, too, went to Central America, and there are negotiations underway.

Second, a policy that exerts absolutely the maximum amount of pressure on Nicaragua, to give them an incentive to negotiate in good faith, if in fact they will.

Third, a policy that assures that the Contra force is truly one fighting for democratic goals. It is the McCurdy plan that best achieves this policy.

It does so by first providing assistance to our allies, and my colleagues have spoken to that. Recognizing the fact that our allies' strength is the absolute best defense against Nicaragua and their export of revolution.

It does so by providing the incentive to negotiate through the provisions of military assistance in the event the Contadora process fails.

I was in Central America and know the commitment of the four presidents of the democracies there to those negotiations.

Let me point out that in the event of the failure of those negotiations, it is the McCurdy plan that delivers the heavy metal to the Contras earlier than the Skelton-Edwards plan; and I think we should support the internal resistance and provide the means for a marked escalation in the event of that failure.

I think we must then assure the accountability of the administration and the Contras on the issue of expenditure of funds. Any of the available options have some faults, some excesses. The most important distinction being the available options of accountability.

The Constitution of this great Nation provides the President with the power as Commander in Chief, but it reserves to the Congress the power to raise an army and to declare war. It is not sufficient for the President to say as he said months ago, "Just give me $100 million and do not ask me what I am going to do with it."

The McCurdy proposal recognizes the inherent constitutional duties of the President and the Congress, and preserves the checks and balances that are the beauty of that constitutional system.

The Congress must have the final say on the commitment of arms, and only the McCurdy plan preserves that important constitutional distinction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will advise members of the Committee that there is remaining 7 minutes for the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY], 7½ minutes remaining for the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCURDY], and 7 minutes remaining for the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. COLLINS].

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Contras aid.

Mr. Chairman, here we go again, another Contra measure. Once again, we have to rehash Contra aid. How many times must we return to this issue? When will the administration get the message that the American people will not underwrite terrorists? This is getting to be a waste of Congress' time.

The administration must truly be embarrassed by the men that it has chosen as its so-called freedom fighters. The true character of the Contra leadership is clearly demonstrated by the disappearance of $27 million of previously approved funds. Where did this money go? The Government Accounting Office can't find it, the President won't talk about it, and the State Department can't account for it.

So where is it? The GAO states that $1.5 million was paid to officers of the Honduran armed forces but that millions of dollars more have been funneled to private brokers. Still another $14.1 million has mysteriously been placed in Miami bank accounts. I, for one, am appalled by press reports indicating that a small grocery store, set up by several Honduran Army officers, has received a whopping $3.8 million in United States funds.

Now, that's a lot of money for a jungle supermarket. Contras are even trading in dollars on the black market. Some people seem to be getting very rich as a result of U.S. aid. Now, the President wants to make them even richer; he says that we can trust the Contras.

What kind of freedom fighters are the President's Contras—these men that he says should be trusted with $100 million? The Contra leadership is composed almost entirely of former members of the Nicaraguan National Guard. These are the men who propped up the hated Somoza regime. These are the troops who repressed the people of Nicaragua for years. These are the men who shot, tortured, and brutalized Nicaraguan civilians. And these are the men who President Reagan says will win hearts and minds, and bring democracy to Nicaragua.

What have the Contras really brought to Nicaragua? Death, destruction, and misery, that is their gift. They have devastated the economy, forcing Managua to divert up to 40 percent of its budget to defense. Civilian casualties from the fighting amount to over 1,285 killed and 2,000 wounded. The Contras deliberately target health and agricultural workers, rebuilding programs, and the institutions that support daily life. Regularly, they engage in terrorist activities directed at unarmed civilians, yet these are the men the President has chosen to bring freedom and justice to Nicaragua.

Do the Nicaraguan people really need Contras? I think the answer is: No. Nicaragua does not need the Contras. Central America does not need more militarization and violence. What Central America needs is peace and stability. The region cries out for an end to the war. The people want an end to the fighting, the poverty, and the hatred. The nations of Central America need no more weapons of death, they need jobs. They need no more soldiers, they need food and justice. Negotiations are the only answer to the crisis in Central America—not the Contra's terror.

The Contadora process provides the vehicle for negotiations. It enables Central American nations to settle their own problems, in their own way, and in a peaceful manner. This is the process that the United States must support if it wants a just end to the crisis in Central America. But Contadora is impossible as long as the Contras continue their terror.

Congress must support peace, not war—negotiations, not Contras. The Contras represent a dead-end street. Military aid only leads to more war and continuing crisis. Once again, Congress must prevent any further funding of these terrorists. America must stand for peace, and justice, and human rights. No money for the Contras—not today, not tomorrow, not ever.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, our colleague from Arkansas calls Contra drug traffic a smokescreen. He is wrong on that.

Some shocking facts from our very own Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control:

First, armed Contras are used to guard planes carrying cocaine.

Second, indicted drug smugglers admitted delivering one-half million dollars from drug sales to two Contra groups.

Third, one known drug kingpin has connections to the very top levels of the Contras.

These are documented facts, Mr. Chairman. Cocaine is killing our kids. Let us not play a role in this slimy business. We have some good alternatives; the Hamilton alternative and the Barnes amendment. Let us support those.

We have to be sure we know what we are doing and who we are going to replace the Sandinistas with. We know what is happening in some of the Central American countries; let us not see a repeat.

Vote "no" on Contra aid.

Mr. MCCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. MACKAY].

Mr. MACKAY. Mr. Chairman, the only sensible policy statement on Central America was the report of the Kissinger Commission. That report was warmly endorsed by the White House, and was passed without controversy by this House, by both liberals and conservatives: but then, that was last year.

It is ironic now that the McCurdy proposal, which tracks the policy recommendations of the Kissinger Commission, is now under attack by liberals and conservatives; under attack sufficiently so that we had to divide the opposition time to make sure that each side got their own fair shots.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to talk about two aspects of the Kissinger Commission report that are accurately reflected in the McCurdy proposal.

First, it reflects the central thrust of the Kissinger Commission report which says that, long term, we've got to try to stabilize that region economically; $300 million for economic aid is not perfect. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] is absolutely right, it is not perfect. Perhaps we should wait for something to come along that is perfect. By that time, the war will be over; $300 million is a start, and it is doing what we said we would do.

As the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] said, it is critically important that we recognize that economic stability is the key to any permanent regional solution in Central America.

The money is taken from the defense budget, there is some poetic justice in that. It does not increase the deficit; it also does not require that we breach commitments that we have made in other parts of the world.

If the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCHUGH] wants to know how we can meet our foreign aid requirements, I would suggest that he look in the defense budget, where a major portion of our foreign aid is.

We could perhaps send a bill to Japan for the money that we spend—I think it is foreign aid in that we defend them, at our cost; although they run a $60-billion annual surplus with America—we could send them a bill. We could begin to eliminate that part of our foreign aid budget.

The second thing about the McCurdy proposal that I want to talk about is that it reflects the Kissinger Commission recommendation for a two-track approach. It continues the pressure on the Sandinistas but it ensures that military aid will only be provided when a majority of this House is satisfied that all peaceful alternatives have been explored. It is not a perfect proposal, but it is a first step toward implementing the only rational and wise recommendations that have been made for a sensible foreign policy in Central America toward implementing the Kissinger Commission approach.

I urge its adoption, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, just in brief response to my friend from San Francisco who talked about drugs, I hope she has read the report from the investigator for Mr. Thomas Borge, who has defected, Elviro Jose Baldizon, who on page 13 ties drug trafficking to Thomas Borge, the minister of the interior. I hope she would read that.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. I do not have the time, but I will show this to the gentlewoman. I am sure she has not read it.

Nine days from now, we will celebrate our Declaration of Independence, and I hope that we will all ask ourselves: Do we really want to permit the Soviet Union to become the dominant force on the land bridge between South America and North America? I hope I know the answer. But if you need a rationale for our helping freedom fighters, read that Declaration of Independence, find those words that say governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. And when any government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it. That is what the freedom fighters are trying to do. And as the French helped us do the same thing, we should help them. And, remember, self-determination applies to people, not to governments that do not legitimately represent people.

Ought we not help these freedom fighters? The struggle is the same whether it is Angola, Afghanistan, or Cambodia.

Twenty-seven years ago Cuba, 90 miles from our coast, was swept into the Soviet orbit because we lost our nerve at the Bay of Pigs. We tried to rehabilitate the situation with brave words, "we will pay any price, bear any burden," do you remember that? We ought to have learned something.

Now we face another "Bay of Pigs," only here it is not air cover that the freedom fighters want, it is just some weapons. It is weapons. Now we are confronted with Mr. MCCURDY's bill which, as I think about it, a souffle comes to mind. It looks all right, but there is nothing there. We will have the best-dressed casualties in Central America.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON], a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to aid to the Contras.

Mr. Chairman, the administration is correct in its judgment that the Sandinistas are repressive and a source of subversion in Central America. I too, support freedom and democracy for Nicaragua but the problems we face in Nicaragua will not be resolved by sending $100 million to the Contras; $100 million represents a small down payment on a huge mortgage which will take years to pay and offers no guarantee for success. What it will guarantee is massive bloodshed.

If we genuinely want a nonaligned democracy in Nicaragua, we need to take steps which can be sustained by the American public over the long run. By lacking the broad-based support that the Afghan freedom fighters have, the Contras are living from one congressional vote to another.

Realistically, the Contras do not have the ability to defeat the Sandinistas on the battlefield. Therefore, we need to consider more viable alternatives.

Mr. Chairman, the administration constantly refers to the broken promises that the Sandinistas made to the Organization of American States. Why not use the OAS as a vehicle to achieve our objectives? Since the administration contends that the Sandinistas are a threat to our friends in the region and have a dismal human rights record, it should make a case to the OAS for comprehensive regional economic sanctions against Managua. Further, the administration should seek an OAS mandate to establish a multinational peacekeeping force to interdict arms supplies originating from Nicaragua to insurgencies operating in Central America.

If these measures do not bring about the desired results, the administration should consider asking the member states to implement a quarantine of military deliveries to Nicaragua. While there would be certain risks in pursuing this course of action, support for the Contras offers far more threatening implications for U.S. interests.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, critics of the Reagan administration policy in Central America repeatedly argue, "We must give negotiations a chance." The United States has been trying to negotiate with the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua since August 1981. There has been no constructive response from the Sandinistas in 5 years. Now, critics argue, we must have 90 additional days and another vote just on military assistance to give negotiations a chance before military aid can be sent to the Contras. There is nothing that has happened in the past 90 days that makes it any more likely that the Sandinistas will agree to a verifiable, enforceable Contadora agreement in the next 90 days. Further delays cannot be justified; it is time to support the democratic resistance in Nicaragua with the humanitarian and military assistance up front it needs to survive as a viable counter to the totalitarian, expansionist regime in Nicaragua. That is really what the Kissinger report is all about.

The internal political opposition inside Nicaragua has become increasingly critical of the Sandinista regime. Mrs. Maria Azucena Ferrey, vice president of the Social Christian Party of Nicaragua, wrote a letter to Comandante Ortega in which she urged Ortega to "experience first hand the level of discontent which exists" in Nicaragua. Mrs. Ferrey said, "Do not blame just external factors for what is going on here. * * * If what you preach about equal opportunity, pluralism, respect for the rights of others, individual and collective security were actually put into practice in daily life, * * * the external causes [the Contras] would not exist."

Mrs. Violeta Chamorro, publisher of the Nicaraguan newspaper La Prensa and an original member of the governing junta after the Sandinistas came to power, says the same thing about the Contras, referring to them as the "external dimension." Mrs. Chamorro says, "The external dimension, which apparently has been the one more dealt with by Contadora and the Contadora support group, is no more than the reflection and the echo of an interior imbalance revealed in popular discontent, emigration, and exile, which nourish subversion and the war of those who search through violent means what they can't achieve through nonviolent means." The clear message is that legitimate political opposition in Nicaragua is crushed.

Jaime Chamorro, the brother-in-law of Violeta Chamorro, says, "It is the general belief that if the Contras were not where they are, we wouldn't be there at all, because they serve to counteract the government's actions, and what they do has helped us survive.* * *"

When Congressman MIKE DEWINE and I visited Nicaragua in March 1985, we heard the same message from every private group we met—the church, labor leaders, political party members, La Prensa, and the private sector. They were concerned about the Sandinistas' campaign of repression. Several told us that before the Contras existed they had been "Public Enemy No. 1," but that now they were "Public Enemy No. 2." They said they would go back to being "Public Enemy No. 1" if the Contras were no longer an effective opposition force to the Sandinistas. They said the only way to prevent the Sandinistas from consolidating total control over their country and enabling them to export their revolution is to keep the pressure on them. I believe the way to keep the pressure on them is to continue to support the Contras. It is only through that kind of pressure that you can expect meaningful negotiations with the Sandinistas.

In this lengthy, and often divisive, debate, I am afraid we sometimes lose sight of the evolution of United States policy in Central America. Critics who complain about American actions in the region seem to make their arguments as though U.S. policy developed in a vacuum. They fail to acknowledge the fact that U.S. actions are a direct counter to a determined and continuing armed attack against our allies in the region. A review of the historical record puts U.S. policy into clearer perspective.

The United States cut off military assistance to Somoza in 1977; it initiated the 1979 OAS resolution calling on the OAS member states to recognize the Nicaraguan insurgents; during the first 2 years of the Sandinista government, the United States gave it $118 million in economic assistance, and in addition supported $292 million in World Bank and Inter-American Development Bank loans to the Nicaraguan Government; in August 1981, President Reagan offered to renew economic assistance in exchange for Sandinista termination of support for the Salvadoran guerrillas; there was no significant military opposition to the Sandinistas until the spring of 1982, more than a year and a half after the Sandinistas began their sustained, secret war against El Salvador. In October 1982, the United States and eight other democratic governments in the Western Hemisphere joined in the San Jose declaration which made a proposal outlining the essential conditions for peace in the area, with primary emphasis on free elections and human rights. The Sandinistas refused to meet with the group's spokesmen.

That account is only a very short list, and I could go on for pages describing efforts made by the United States to engage in constructive negotiations with the Sandinistas which they have ridiculed, rejected, or ignored.

John Norton Moore, who is currently director of the Center for Law and National Security at the University of Virginia, has written at length regarding the justification for United States actions against Nicaragua given its activities in training, arming, and directing guerrilla movements in El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica, and Guatemala. Moore points out that the Rio Treaty, on which the defense of the inter-American system is based, provides for "a legal obligation * * * to assist in meeting an armed attack." It specifies that "Each one of the contracting parties may determine the immediate measures which it may individually take in fulfillment of the obligations contained in the preceding paragraph" and it specifies that these self-defense measures shall be valid "until the Security Council of the United Nations has taken measures necessary to maintain international peace and security." As Moore states: "Aggressive attack, whether covert or overt, is illegal and must be vigorously condemned by the world community, which must also join in assisting in defense against such attack. At a minimum, it must be understood that an attacked state and those acting on its behalf are entitled to a right of effective defense to end the attack promptly and protect self-determination." It seems to me, too much of the debate on aid to the Contras overlooks the Cuban-Nicaraguan secret war against its neighboring states.

And what of the Contras themselves? What do they represent and what are they fighting for? In May, the leaders of the Nicaraguan democratic resistance held lengthy meetings to clarify the objectives and principles which guide the Contra movement. I believe it is important to consider very carefully the document those leaders issued at the end of their deliberations, because it offers a very clear picture of the democratic goals the Contras seek to achieve. The communique released by the United Nicaraguan Opposition reflects its commitment to strengthening democratic procedures, incorporating all segments of Nicaraguan society into the opposition, ensuring civilian control of military forces, and guaranteeing proper human rights practices.

The structure of UNO would consist of the three-man directorate of Arturo Cruz, Alfonso Robelo, and Adolfo Calero. The decisionmaking process will be by majority vote. A consultative assembly, composed of Nicaraguan political, labor, and business organizations, will be established. All military forces—UNO-South, UNO-FDN, and UNO-Kisan—will be integrated into a single armed force under the control of a military commission composed of the directorate and the military commanders. A Secretariat for Military Affairs, headed by a civilian, will act as liaison between the directorate and military forces.

Three non-Nicaraguans, preferably one Latin American, one European and one North American, will be added to the Human Rights Commission. A commission consisting of a lawyer, a manager and an accountant not associated with UNO will be established to review control systems and auditing of aid. They will prepare a public report.

On political issues, the communique reiterates UNO's support for the six-party proposal as a means for achieving national reconciliation through dialogue. UNO supports efforts to reach a solution to the conflict in Central America through the Contadora process, and expresses confidence in the efforts of the democratic governments in Central America to reach a solution. UNO also reasserts its two-track—civil and military—policy to bring the Sandinistas into a real agreement. Military aid is vital to this policy.

Once again, in this debate, we reach the ultimate question: How do we achieve peace in Central America? Another way to ask the question is "How do we get the Sandinistas to negotiate?" Obviously, to achieve peace the Sandinistas will have to negotiate a peace agreement that is comprehensive, simultaneous and verifiable. The other Central American Presidents have said they will accept nothing less. Our objective must be to get the Sandinistas to accept that as well. To do that, I believe we must demonstrate to the regime in Nicaragua that they cannot achieve their goals through default, that the United States Congress will not sit back and do nothing while the Sandinistas consolidate their totalitarian regime and spread their revolution across their borders.

I urge my colleagues to support military assistance for the Contras as the essential element in keeping pressure on the Sandinistas to negotiate. I not only urge adoption of the Skelton-Edwards amendment, but I also urge an overwhelming vote in favor of this amendment to demonstrate to the Sandinistas that the United States is prepared to do what it must to preserve liberty and democracy in this hemisphere.

REMARKS BY ISRAELI FOREIGN MINISTER SHAMIR DURING JUNE 17 VISIT TO HOLON, ISRAEL

"We are mainly fighting against Arab terrorism. But we know that those organizations and others cannot cause much damage without being supported by states who help them with money, weapons, training areas, etc. That's why we believe the war against international terrorism—war in which the United States plays a leading role—is absolutely vital.

The U.S. attacks on Libya are of the utmost importance in that framework, and they have already deterred other states from walking along this path of supporting terrorism. International terrorism is an international monster that exceeds all bounds. We see this terrorism in Libya and we see it in other places such as Central America. We see it from Libya to Nicaragua.

We know that the PLO had assisted the Sandinistas and had cooperated with them in Nicaragua. The Sandinistas in turn have established a PLO base in Nicaragua. We welcome the American activities aimed at struggling with the danger of terrorism in that part of the world as much as we welcome the U.S. activities in Libya. There is a direct connection between Libya and Nicaragua, and this is a terror connection that spreads over continents and oceans. We believe that whoever is trying to deal with this threat has results and will have results."

Last weekend, by contrast, the Iranian foreign minister was in Nicaragua.

FINALLY, A STANDARD FOR THE "CONTRAS"

At long last, in a last-minute bid to rescue his $100 million military aid package for Nicaraguan rebels, President Reagan invites Congress to monitor the investment against open, measurable objectives. He promises to purge the rebel army of corrupt, antidemocratic elements and to support only an honorable civil war. He promises a still-incredible outcome—the establishment of democracy in Nicaragua—but calls that only the best guarantee that the Soviet Union will not gain another foothold in the hemisphere. He implies that he would also use the "contra" army for leverage in negotiations for different guarantees.

Two or three years ago, such a clear presentation might have secured the bipartisanship for which Mr. Reagan now pleads. The President still refuses to choose between the goal of toppling the Sandinistas and merely containing them—an ambiguity that deserves the resistance he has met. For whatever its value as a bargaining chip, the contra army has had no discernible success in igniting a popular rebellion against the Sandinistas.

But Mr. Reagan does now offer to accept a bipartisan Congressional commission to monitor the rebel forces. Since Congress is plainly unwilling to disband the "contras" altogether, this amounts to an offer it cannot refuse. It has two chances to attach effective strings to the contra appropriation, in the House today and then in conference with the Senate.

Mr. Reagan offers to spend the money in three phases, delaying heavier weapons until next year. That provides a chance to schedule additional votes after the November election and after Congress has heard from the monitoring commission.

A commission worth its salt should by then have received an honest budget for the contra aid, to guard against more diversions to profiteers. It should by then have reliable rosters of the rebel army, to insure that former Somoza soldiers and mere mercenaries have truly been retired. Above all, Congress could by then have tested the President's claim that thousands of Nicaraguans are waiting to join the rebels, once American backing is made clear.

The record of this C.I.A.-sponsored army does not justify the President's confidence that it can "win" a civil war. But neither does the record of the Sandinistas inspire trust in their promises to keep the Russians and Cubans out. Neither side in Nicaragua is worth a wrenching, Red-baiting war of recrimination in the United States. America's available choices depend on discernible facts. By giving the President some of what he asks, with the strings that he now offers to accept, Congress may actually get those facts.

ECUADORAN GUERRILLAS WIDENING INTERNATIONAL LINKS

QUITO, ECUADOR (REUTERS).—A leftist Ecuadoran guerrilla movement allegedly trained in Libya and Nicaragua is widening its international links and raising concern in the United States.

The Alfaro Vive, Carajo (AVC) guerrilla group recently joined Peruvian and Colombian guerrillas to form the "Americas Battalion" inspired by the internationalism of guerrilla Ernesto "Che" Guevara.

The AVC's emphasis on violence has grown to the point that President Reagan mentioned the situation when he greeted Ecuadoran President Leon Febres Cordero in Washington in January.

"I say the United States stands with you," Mr. Reagan said during a White House ceremony. "That is especially true when it comes to defeat the twin menace of international terrorism and narcotics trafficking."

Fernando Rondon, U.S. ambassador to Ecuador, said in a speech in December that Washington was providing technical and financial assistance to combat political violence in Ecuador. The U.S. Embassy would not provide details of that assistance.

The Washington-based Heritage Foundation, which has close ties to the Reagan administration, urged the United States in January to spend $8 million to train the Ecuadoran army in counterinsurgency tactics to battle what it called the growing security threat posed by combined forces of the AVC and Colombia's M-19 guerrilla group.

The AVC, believed to have fewer than 1,000 members, is led mainly by former university students. It takes its name from Eloy Alfaro, a reformist Ecuadoran president from the 1890s.

Alfaro took power after leading a decade-long peasant insurgency.

The name of the guerrilla group translates roughly to "Alfaro Lives, Damn It." Claiming to be fighting for his ideals, the AVC is also battling what it brands a ruling oligarchy.

The rebels' protest against the policies of Mr. Febres Cordero's conservative government initially drew a sympathetic hearing from some center-left quarters.

Last year, the rebels stormed a meeting of Ecuadoran Women for Democracy, where witnesses said the hooded guerrillas drew applause after denouncing what they termed the erosion of democracy under Mr. Febres Cordero, a pro-American businessman elected in 1984.

Center-left critics allege Mr. Febres Cordero has repeatedly violated the Ecuadoran constitution. They often mention his order to ring the supreme court with police in September 1984 to prevent congressionally appointed judges from taking office.

"To some, the Alfaro Vive originally appeared as idealistic youths who were carrying out a popular revenge against the government's violence," said Cesar Verduga, head of the Quito-based Latin American Assembly for Human Rights.

"But they lost that image after they got violent and people died in their attacks."

The AVC, thought to be an offshoot of Ecuador's Communist Party, surfaced in 1983 when it stole Alfaro's sword from a museum. Last year it began to rob banks and kidnap businessmen to finance their operations. So far, it has raised more than $250 million, according to a captured rebel document.

The Ecuadoran government says the AVC has received training in Libya and Nicaragua. Ecuador broke diplomatic relations with Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government in October.

Mr. Febres Cordero told foreign correspondents in March that "we have proof that part of the Ecuadoran subversive group has been trained and is being trained in Nicaragua."

Evidence of the Central American link includes Nicaraguan residence documents and Nicaraguan-published propaganda found with captured AVC members, according to Jofrey Torbay, secretary general of administration for the presidency.

About 30 or 40 rebels were believed to have been trained in Nicaragua, he said. Most of them were thought to have received training there between 1979 and 1983.

AVC leader Rosa Maria Cardenas had lived in Nicaragua and contacted the Libyan Embassy in Panama City seeking funds and training for AVC guerrillas, Interior Minister Luis Robles said.

At least 13 AVC leaders went to Libya in September 1983 for several months of training, according to an interior ministry document.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CARPER].

Mr. CARPER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

It's often said that for our foreign policy to be successful, it must enjoy bipartian support. I would observe that we have almost seen in the last several weeks the emergence of a consensus position on Central America in the House. Several months ago, there were some Members at one extreme who felt that all we basically needed to do in Central America was to provide guns and bullets to the Contras. At the other extreme, we had a number of Members who felt that we really needed to do almost nothing and to simply let Central America sort out its own problems.

I think what we have seen here today my colleagues, with the final revision of the Skelton amendment, and with the incorporation of the McCurdy alternative in this bill, is the emergence of a near bipartisan consensus. While we are still some distance apart, I think that distance is relatively small as we come to a conclusion here this evening.

I am compelled to oppose both the amendments offered by my friend Mr. SKELTON and my friend Mr. HAMILTON. They are both thoughtful approaches, and it is difficult for me to oppose the two colleagues for whom I have the highest regard. I must do that, however, because I earnestly believe the McCurdy alternative offers the greatest likelihood of achieving a peaceful resolution of our differences, this administration's stated goal.

I have come to this conclusion for a number of reasons. Before I enumerate them, let me just take a moment to salute Mr. MCCURDY for the leadership that he has shown on this difficult issue. I think that he offers us an alternative that is going to work. In it, we pledge to strengthen the economies of the emerging democracies in Central America. We also come out foursquare in support of badly needed Contra reforms. We say with regard to the Contras we are not going to tolerate human rights violations. The McCurdy alternative also makes it clear that it's time for the tail to stop wagging the dog. We want the Contra military leadership to be clearly subordinate to the political leadership of that organization. We further want to ensure that the Contras stand for the same democratic principles that we do as a Nation. Finally, the McCurdy plan makes it clear that we want the Contras and our Government to be fully accountable for the millions of dollars of aid that we are prepared to provide for the Contras.

There has been some discussion in this Chamber today that negotiations have been going on for several years in Latin America and nothing conclusive has happened. Let me talk 1 minute, if I can, about how the right kind of pressure might finally get these talks off of dead center.

We know all too well here in this Chamber what pressure can do in terms of forcing meaningful negotiations. Those people in this Chamber who are lawyers also know all too well what pressure can do to bring opposing parties together to an agreement just prior to the beginning of a hearing or trial. We also know all too well in terms of labor negotiations what pressure can do to bring two divergent parties together to strike a compromise, just before a strike vote. The time has come to apply real pressure on the negotiating parties in Central America. I think the adoption of the McCurdy alternative will send a clear message: It is time to fish or cut bait.

Let me conclude with the remarks of Richard Nixon. I do not often quote Richard Nixon, but he said not long ago that if we are serious about containing the expansion of communism, we have to be willing to provide an economic alternative that works. He's absolutely right. The McCurdy alternative will work, in part, because it provides that kind of economic alternative. There is still plenty to be done in Central America.

Many of you have been there; I have been there. There are schools to build, there are hospitals to build, there are roads to build, there are children to educate, and there are people to feed. There is plenty to do with the money that we are now talking about providing to those people.

In a sense, these are exciting times in Central America. For the first time in our lifetimes, four out of five nations in that area have presidents elected by the people in elections tht even the opposition parties concede were fair. Four out of five. Let us endeavor to make it five out of five.

The McCurdy alternative embodied in this bill offers the best promise, with its comprehensive approach and carefully crafted balance of carrots and sticks, of doing just that. I urge its support.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DARDEN].

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Skelton-Edwards-Ray amendment to this crucial package of assistance for the Nicaraguan resistance. I especially want to commend my colleague from Georgia [Mr. RAY] for his leadership on this issue.

This bipartisan amendment allows Congress to maintain the necessary degree of accountability for the aid without requiring subsequent votes to release funds for weapons purchases.

This amendment calls for the immediate release of $40 million in nonmilitary aid, $10 million more than the Contras would receive initially under the McCurdy amendment.

But, while the McCurdy amendment requires that Congress vote again—later this fall—on providing money for weapons, the Skelton amendment would let the President decide whether to release $20 million for the first weapons purchase.

The Skelton amendment also leaves a later delivery of $40 million for weapons to the President's discretion—but it gives Congress the option to disapprove release of those funds.

Mr. Chairman, we do not need to revisit this issue each month. We need to give the administration a clear direction and move on to other vital matters. We need to balance the budget, we need to provide for our Nation's defense, we need to meet the needs of our poor and our elderly. This debate on Contra aid has paralyzed this House. We cannot all be the Secretary of State. Under our Constitution, conduct of foreign policy lies in the executive branch of Government. We cannot conduct the foreign policy of the United States from this Chamber, as many of us are attempting to do. We have been told repeatedly that this conflict can be resolved by negotiation. Under the present posture, the Sandinistas have no reason to negotiate. They remain in power, they build up their Marxist-Leninist regime, and the Contras wither away.

The fires of communism are burning in Nicaragua while Congress stands here today fiddling. The Sandinistas will never negotiate in good faith until we give the President real negotiating power.

Now while I have been to Nicaragua and I know some of the other Members have, I do not think that is crucial to the issue, but I have found out that the real threat in Central America lies from the Managua regime, a military machine that has been built up which destabilizes those fledgling democracies in the area. We know the Hondurans cannot do anything about the incursions. We know about the El Salvadoran problem. We know that Costa Rica does not even have an army. Why, the Capitol Police Department can take that country. So being in the middle of this area, those fledgling democracies are threatened, and the entire stability of that region is in jeopardy.

I urge my colleagues therefore to support the Skelton-Edwards-Ray amendment.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, all I can say is: Not the ones I know.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN].

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, there is no argument here about the Sandinista government. It is heading more and more toward a closed society. And there is no argument here about there being economic causes of unrest. I saw, as assistant administrator of AID for 4 years, that development assistance can work.

Two points about the economic alternative. One, when development assistance is placed in the context of increased military conflict, it most often loses its chance of effectiveness. And, economic assistance should not be used to divert or to sugar-coat a basic issue here. Will a solution involving increased military effort, likely work without the eventual direct use of military personnel, U.S. military personnel, regardless of the amount of U.S. economic assistance? The answer is no.

I ask, if there were no aid to the Contras in Edwards or McCurdy, would there be proposals here for $300 million more in economic assistance? Not by a long shot.

Mr. Chairman, I support the Hamilton amendment and urge its adoption.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. Chairman, to sum up our views, the McCurdy amendment is certainly better than the Edwards amendment. It does delay final commitment to a tragically ineffective policy. But both the Edwards and the McCurdy amendment have a tragic flaw. They are throwing money at Central America, and we have demonstrated time and time again that that has not and will not solve the problem.

It will, however, divert us from actions that are needed to salvage economic and political stability in Central America. The idea that $300 million in economic aid can change a $370 billion problem is tragically misguided and preposterous on its face. If you want to shut the Soviets out in Central America, and obviously we all do, we need policy changes that will put economic growth ahead of repayment of interest to American banks. Only that can effectively apply enough resources to make a difference and to create political and economic conditions that will isolate the Sandinistas and will give democracy a chance in that region.

I urge support for the Hamilton amendment. I urge recognition that the administration's own world economic policies are the principal obstacles to strengthening democracy in our hemisphere. And I urge you once again, if you think that all we are talking about is a tidy little war in Nicaragua, to look at the classified annex which accompanies this bill and see what indeed the administration has in store if they win this vote today.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr Chairman, I yield my final 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALLON].

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Chairman, I, too, recently visited Central America with a delegation of House Members anxious to gain a better understanding about our country's involvement in the region.

I want to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY] for helping many of us in the body focus on the need for regional policy in Central America. We met with all of the Central American leaders, including Daniel Ortega.

The democratic leaders of the region are all in agreement that there will not be a lasting peace in Central America until all the nations are democracies. And unfortunately, after our discussion with Ortega, I have come to the conclusion that we will not see political pluralism in Nicaragua or peace in the region without putting pressure on the Sandinistas, as outlined by the Edwards-Skelton-Ray amendment. I believe this measure will lead to the necessary political, economic and military actions to encourage democracy and stability in Central America.

At issue today is just not whether to provide military assistance, but when. Why not agree to do it now, when it is needed and when it will make a difference? Why wait until an arbitrary date of October 1?

The entire region of Central America is in a state of flux. U.S. actions in the region have a greater consequence now than ever before. Aid to the Contras will distract the Sandinistas from their efforts to consolidate a totalitarian Government in Nicaragua and export their Marxist revolution to neighboring nations. But the issue extends beyond guns to the Nicaraguan Contras. We must not become so consumed by that issue that we are blinded to the needs of other struggling democracies in the region.

The democratic governments of Central America are genuine but fragile. Each of these dedicated democratic leaders deserve our support and economic assistance. The future of democracy in the region depends on it. I think this can best be achieved by supporting the Edwards-Ray amendment, and I urge my colleagues to do so.

PREFERENTIAL MOTION OFFERED BY MR. TRAFICANT

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TRAFICANT moves that the Committee rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his preferential motion.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I do not plan to use all the time, and will probably through unanimous consent withdraw my motion at the conclusion of my statement.

However, I have not been able to get time. I think this is a very important issue, and I would like to offer my humble words on this particular issue.

I particularly feel that we should not send one more penny to Nicaragua. Ladies and gentlemen of the Congress, it is simply not a good investment. We are diluting our language here of freedoms and liberty with the fact that we are beginning and attempting to support an army that, after all these years and all this money, does not control one town or one village nor one street. In simple language and in simple terms, this is not good economic investment for America, and we are becoming the narcotic in Central America, and there is the correlation that there can be no success unless there is money to come from the United States. That is not a formula that will effect freedom and liberty in Central America.

Nicaragua is going to have to seek that on its own, and we cannot continue to support former Somoza people to effect those means and ends.

I just particularly feel very strongly that we have to start levying pressure with the international community. Right now we make it easy for Ortega.

I agree with many of my colleagues on the other side. We do not support nor do we fathom the concept of any regime similar to Ortega. However, the people in Nicaragua must deal with Mr. Ortega, and he can now hide behind the fact that since we have this Contra army at our doorsteps, funded by these revolutionary exporters in America, that I will continue to oppress and withhold the freedoms in Nicaragua.

I believe that we have not set up a good correlation, nor a very good foundation, to expedite freedoms in Nicaragua. Those people there are going to have to earn it and take some of those measures for themselves.

In closing, I would just like to say something not more or less off the cuff, but today is a very famous day in military circles in American history. It is the 110th anniversary of a famous military battle at the Little Bighorn with General Custer. I believe that he opted for a military decision and he did not have a coordinated effort in his particular plans at that time, and we here today are about to do the same thing.

In my humble opinion, while we have one senior citizen who does not have adequate nutrition or housing, children without an adequate education, we should not spend one dime down there, because it is not a good investment. It will make absolutely no difference. After all this period of time, 5 years, and all of the funds we sent, they do not have control of one street, let alone a town or a village.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it is my understanding that if I do object to the unanimous-consent request, we then have the similar time of 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I do object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. CHENEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CHENEY] is recognized for 5 minutes in opposition to the preferential motion.

Mr. CHENEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to take this opportunity to obtain some time to discuss the basic issue before the House this afternoon.

On behalf of the Republican Policy Committee, I would like to include at this point in the RECORD a statement that the policy committee adopted yesterday, making it clear that the committee strongly supports the adoption of the Edwards-Ray amendment as a substitute for the McCurdy amendment, and reiterating the position of the Republican Party in the House that we strongly believe that it is extremely essential that the Congress support the President's request for assistance to the Contras.

The statement follows:

The Republican Policy Committee calls on the House of Representatives to vote for the survival of democracy in Central America by approving the bipartisan Skelton/Edwards/Ray/Chandler Amendment to the Military Construction Appropriation Bill. The bipartisan package provides for $300 million in economic aid to the four Central American democracies. It also authorizes $100 million in military and humanitarian assistance to the freedom fighters in Nicaragua, $40 million of which will be released as soon as the bill is signed.

The Nicaraguan freedom fighters urgently need military assistance. The United States has not given them one penny in military aid since September, 1984. During that same period, the Marxist Sandinista Government has received over $300 million in military assistance from communist bloc countries. The Presidents of the four Central American democracies are justifiably concerned about the potential threat posed by a Communist Nicaragua.

The interests of the United States require that we support policies that encourage democracy to flourish in Central America. The bipartisan amendment strengthens existing democratic governments while providing the Nicaraguan freedom fighters with badly needed, military assistance. The Republican Policy Committee urges adoption of the Skelton/Edwards/Ray/Chandler Amendment to resist Communist efforts to snuff out freedom in Nicaragua.

Mr. CHENEY. Mr. Chairman, I am extremely concerned that the House has developed a pattern in recent years of politicizing, if you will, extremely important issues with respect to the Nation's security.

The House clearly has the power at this point to trash the President's policy in Central America. What is at stake today is the question of whether or not we are going to move forward, preserve the Contras, and preserve the four very fragile democracies that surround Nicaragua, or whether, in fact, the House is going to take what, I believe, would be an irresponsible act, destroy the administration's policy with respect to our efforts in Nicaragua and, in effect, leave the United States without any options at all in Central America in the years ahead.

Of great concern to me, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that those four democracies surrounding Nicaragua, Honduras, Guatemala, Costa Rica, and El Salvador all have very high rates of population growth, severely damaged economies and they are newly established democracies.

All of them require continued investment in economic growth if we are going to be able to prove that democracy in fact offers a better model than marxism in Central America.

Investment will never occur, economic growth will never occur as long as the Sandinistas are free to establish a Communist regime in Managua; as long as they are free to pursue the subversion of those neighboring countries.

I think it is absolutely essential that we keep the Sandinistas occupied, that we support the Contras and that we make it clear that we too believe in democracy in those surrounding nations if we are going to be successful in providing the kind of economic growth that will avoid the increase in poverty and the increase in unemployment that will otherwise occur.

Mr. Chairman, I think the choice before the House today is very clear-cut. We have argued this issue three times previously this year. It is not a new item for us, but it seems to me that the ultimate question for the House is to decide whether or not we want to preserve the option of supporting those Nicaraguan citizens who want to reclaim their revolution or whether we want to strip ourselves of any option in Central America other than diplomatic protest or the intervention of American troops.

I think as long as the Contras are in business, as long as the Contras exist, then the United States and the other nations in the region have options and the Sandinistas will not be able to consolidate a Communist regime in Managua.

Once the Contras are gone, there will not be any other course for the American Government except for diplomatic protest or the insertion of American troops, and neither one of those activities would be supported or is to be desired by the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I would strongly urge my colleagues to support the package. It is a good package; it has more economic assistance in it than it does military assistance. I think it is the kind of program that all of us can be proud of an that will, in fact, achieve our objectives in Central America.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DEWINE. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, in the brief period of time that is remaining I would like to briefly respond to an argument that was made by my colleague and good friend, Mr. BARNES, a moment ago.

I think the gentleman is bringing this up as a bogus argument. He has been stating time and time again the funds have not been accounted for in the $27 million.

The facts are these: The GAO never said in the testimony that was in front of our committee that this money was misspent. No proof that there is any leaking of these funds, any wrongdoing, anything illegal. The basic question is and the one that this Congress should be concerned with is whether or not the goods got through. That is the question in front of the Congress; that is the question we should be looking at.

The testimony has been very clear at the State Department that the goods have in fact gotten through. They have verified this. The key is the money is never put into the account; moneys are not put into the account until the goods have been delivered. That is the key. It is the order that we have to keep in mind. Not the fact that the money is put in. What happens first is, the goods are delivered, then the money is put in.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the preferential motion.

The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

The preferential motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY] has 1½ minutes remaining to close debate.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, this is now the fifth time in the last 14 months that the House of Representatives is considering the issue of granting aid to the Nicaraguan Contras.

Yesterday, the President gave us his closing arguments of warmed-over charges against Nicaragua to pry loose $100 million to fuel the war in Central America and commit the United States to escalating military assistance to the Nicaraguan Contras. But, the President's appeals on behalf of Contra aid are even less persuasive now than in the past.

The time has come for us to act decisively and put the issue of Contra aid to rest once and for all.

The Contras lack political legitimacy in Nicaragua. They lack popular appeal in Nicaragua. There is no popular uprising in Nicaragua on their behalf. By themselves, the Contras cannot dislodge the Sandinistas. In short, the Contras represent a losing cause.

If the Contras are granted additional military assistance, this will permit them to carry on their war of terrorism against the people of a poor nation. The Nicaraguan people have been and will continue to be the chief casualties of this dirty war waged by the Contras and promoted by the United States.

As for so-called humanitarian aid to the Contras, as we all are fully aware, there are shocking revelations about the misallocation of the $27 million in "humanitarian" assistance which the Congress approved last year. The General Accounting Office has informed us that the State Department cannot verify the whereabouts of about half of this $27 million. It would make no sense to repeat this mistake.

Mr. Chairman, this debate over military aid to the Contras is really a debate over what political and moral principles shall inspire the future of Central America and our relations with that region. It is a debate over whose vision will be allowed to prevail. The choice is clear. We can vote for Contra aid and war or we can vote for diplomacy and peace. Diplomacy recognizes that dialog can be a prelude to peace and that words are preferable to bullets. A negotiated settlement of the differences between the United States and Nicaragua represents the ultimate hope for peace in Central America, and peace in Central America can best be attained through the Contadora process.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote for the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] and stop Contra aid once and for all.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, the last time the House took up the Contra question, the vote was on the President's proposal to give military and nonmilitary aid to the Contras. I voted no on that question, and, if that were today's question, I would vote no again.

The reason for my negative vote was that proposed U.S. policy was focused on the Contras' ability to cause the overthrow or removal of the Sandinista government. I doubted that the Contras could accomplish that goal. I thought that policy tended to isolate the United States, whereas I believed an effective policy would have to have a regional focus that would isolate Nicaragua.

I think it unlikely that the Contras will drive out the Sandinistas. If they are monitored and responsibly controlled, as seems possible under several of the policy options to be considered today, they may be a factor in forcing the Sandinistas to agree to a regional agreement satisfactory to the four democracies in the area.

The President still prefers the original $100 million proposal. I still oppose it.

Today we are considering quite a different set of proposals. The McCurdy amendment is already in the bill. It provides a regional approach, which I favor, but it requires another vote after October 1.

That second vote would be required before any military aid could go to the Contras. The first problem is that we have had plenty of votes and plenty of debate already. We ought to move on to other business. The second problem is, if the Contras give any leverage in the current negotiations, the four democracies need that leverage now, not next October.

The Edwards-Skelton-Ray-Chandler amendment is the counter to McCurdy. It also provides regionalization of reprogrammed economic aid to the four democracies, Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, and Costa Rica. It does not require an additional vote before sending military and nonmilitary aid to the Contras until next year. Then a vote will be required if the President proposes to send heavy weapons.

There is one other new feature in both the McCurdy and Edwards amendments. Both contain a provision for congressional monitoring of Contra aid. The monitoring will be conducted with reference to measurable standards or objectives such as the purge of corrupt or antidemocratic elements from the Contras.

I have been asked again and again today "Are you going to switch your vote?" The answer is a loud, clear no. I still oppose the President's original proposal.

I have made the choice to support the Edwards amendment, which is a very different question. It adds a regional approach with aid to the neighboring democracies. They, incidentally, have risen to the occasion by demanding that any agreement negotiated for the region must protect their security and insure peace in Central America.

The recent development of leadership in those countries, coupled with the $300 million in reprogrammed economic aid, makes this amendment a much different, and much better, proposal than the one which confronted us a few months ago.

The language in both the McCurdy and Edwards amendments that provides for congressional monitoring of the Contras, and our aid to them, is also a major change, and a major improvement, over that which was presented to us when last we voted.

At the time of the last Contra vote the President's proposal was defeated. Today we have two new different proposals, neither of which was a Presidential initiative. They were born of criticism right here in this House of the original White House proposal. They are both, unmistakably, congressional compromise proposals.

The President has been forced to accept changes which were conceived right here. This House has accepted its responsibility to share policy responsibility with the executive branch.

Because I believe we ought to make a decision now, I will support the Edwards proposal. The similar, but not identical, McCurdy proposal may also prevail, and, if so, may eventually have about the same effect as Edwards. But, because, of its unfortunate timing of a second vote, it is not my first choice.

Whichever becomes the choice of the House, I am grateful that the House has become a real policymaking participant. Members may agonize over the choice, but all ought to agree that the previous House vote against Contra funding was successful because it forced us to consider the question on our own terms as well as those of the President.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Hamilton amendment.

The administration wants to gamble American foreign policy on the Contras who are accused of committing atrocities against their own people, are disorganized internally and militarily, are guilty of misusing millions of dollars in U.S. aid, and cannot succeed on the battlefield. It's a bad gamble, one the American people don't want to make.

Our actions in Nicaragua not only represent bad policy, they are immoral and illegal.

Specifically, international human rights groups have concluded that the Contras have consistently targeted and killed civilians. And, there is no evidence that the Contras are improving their pattern of gross and systematic human rights violations.

In addition, our Government is on the verge of being branded an international outlaw by the International Court of Justice for our intervention in Nicaragua.

As my colleagues will recall, in early 1983, President Reagan approved a plan for the CIA to mine Nicaraguan waters. Later that month and in early 1984, the CIA proceeded to mine Puerto Sandino, allegedly as part of an effort to stem the flow of arms to guerrillas fighting in El Salvador.

In response to the mining, in November 1984, the World Court voted, over the administration's protests, to hear Nicaragua's charges against the United States. Since that time, the Court has been examining international law and custom to determine the legality of U.S. intervention in Central America.

The President decided not to present a defense of U.S. actions before the Court.

He has not even made a pretense of complying with international law.

And, it should come as no surprise to those of us in this Chamber if the International Court of Justice rules against the administration later this week when the Court is expected to issue its decision on the legality, under international law, of United States intervention in Nicaragua.

Mr. Chairman, rebuffing the World Court reeks of arrogance. The administration is annoucing to the world that we will abide by the rule and word of law only when it serves our own self-interest.

International law is meant to be a buffer between competing domestic laws of the world's states; it serves to preserve standards which benefit all nations.

The administration has acted illegally in the past, without specific congressional support. Our Government will act wrongfully and illegally again if we approve this aid today, but this time we will be the administration's accomplices.

Again, I urge a "yes" vote on Hamilton, a vote against any aid to the Contras—including nonmilitary aid—and a vote for a peaceful, negotiated settlement that will end the senseless bloodshed of innocent civilians in Nicaragua.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Chairman, 3 months ago, we debated this same question of aid to the Contras. And 3 months ago I stated my opposition to any military aid, lethal or nonlethal. Since then, the facts have not changed.

The majority of Americans continue to oppose aid to the Contras. The Contras do not have any more support among the people of Nicaragua than they did 3 months ago or 3 years ago. They control virtually no land in Nicaragua. They are neither a growing force, nor a respectable one.

Nicaragua is still a nation plagued by poverty, disease, and malnutrition. Most Nicaraguans want good crops, a roof over their heads, and a safe place for their families to live. Additional military assistance from the United States will only cause further bloodshed, further instability, and further aggravation of their desperate situation.

And most importantly, we must support the Contadora process. Mr. Chairman, our foreign policy objectives must seek to expand democracy and contain communism. The best way to promote democracy is by working on a multilateral basis with the countries of Central America. The Contadora process necessitates just that. Included in the present treaty are the following provisions:

An immediate cease-fire between the Government of Nicaragua and the Contras.

A complete withdrawal of all military advisers and the closing of all foreign military bases.

A ban on all arms imports and all foreign military exercises.

Mandates for free elections.

A ban on arms smuggling.

Ending support for guerrilla movements; and

The establishment of a verification commission to ensure that these provisions are followed.

We must focus more time and effort on aiding the Contadora process and less time and effort on aiding the Contras or the Contra war.

Mr. Chairman, some fear that if we do not give aid to the Contras, we will not be doing all we can to support democracy. I disagree. I believe the best way to affect change in Nicaragua is not through military force, but through the peace process. That entails putting our full support behind the Contadora negotiations, and full support behind demilitarization and stability for the entire region.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman I rise in opposition to title II.

Last year we appropriated $27 million in so-called humanitarian aid for the Contras. Now we find out that the State Department cannot even account for over half of that money, and it appears that the rest of it was spent in a very questionable manner. Considering these circumstances, I cannot believe we are seriously considering appropriating another $100 million for Contra aid.

Are we planning to ignore a major GAO investigation that reveals, at the very least, extremely shoddy accounting practices? I would like to find out what happened to the President's war against waste, fraud, and abuse, not to mention the strict oversight and accounting procedures that were supposed to be instituted. It appears we have paid to line the pockets of Honduran military officers and politicians and to enrich phony suppliers, while the people we were supposed to be aiding are not adequately clothed or fed.

However, even if the State Department were able to account for every penny of the $27 million we supposedly spent for Contra aid last year, there are still some serious questions that remain unresolved. Are the Contras true freedom fighters, or are they terrorist thugs, guilty of substantial human rights abuses? The evidence seems to point to the latter.

Do the Contras truly represent the will of the Nicaraguan people? It appears not. It is particularly telling that in their 5-year struggle to overthrow the Sandinistas they have failed to win even one single village. The Sandinistas may be every bit as unpopular as the President claims, but the people don't seem willing to embrace these former Somocistas as their saviors.

We should be discussing the appropriateness of the United States' openly trying to overthrow a legitimate government, particularly when there is an avenue for negotiation through the Contadora peace process. This discussion should include the administration's rationale for continually undercutting diplomatic channels through which we could attempt to peacefully resolve our differences. The President has justified our activities by painting Nicaragua as a major Communist threat in our own hemisphere. Again, the evidence seems to cast doubts on Nicaragua's ability to threaten anyone, as poor as it is and having to struggle just to stay afloat.

No matter how you feel about these issues, you should be outraged that we are being asked to send $100 million in scarce funds out of this country to some shadowy never-never land where everything is classified and nothing is explained. This request is particularly inappropriate at a time when we are facing severe budget constraints, when we are being asked to slash and even eliminate domestic programs by the hundreds, when we know there are people right here in this country who live in the streets, people who cannot afford the basics of health care, people who cannot read or write and have no employable skills. Should we dress America's 13 million poor children in fatigues and call them "freedom fighters" so they will finally get some attention from this administration? Should we equip our 3.7 million elderly poor to fight the Communist threat so that the administration will agree that they deserve a decent place to live? If we rounded up all our poor and disadvantaged citizens and sent them off to fight the Sandinistas, would the administration then care if they were eating properly and dressing warmly and had a roof over their heads at night?

President Reagan has painted those who oppose further aid to the Contras as un-American. On the contrary, I believe it is un-American to spend money unwisely overseas when we have the sick and hungry and homeless right here at home. It is time to get our priorities straight and vote down any more aid to the Contras.

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Chairman, we are once again debating one of the most contentious foreign policy issues to face this Congress—aid to the Contras. It has divided this body along ideological lines in a way that few, if any, other foreign policy concerns have.

Why is this so? Why has one of the most popular President's in recent history been unable to rally not only the Members of this body but the American people as well around an issue—no a cause—which he considers to be of such importance.

Much has been written and much has been said about aid to the Contras over the past few years. It is difficult to shed any new light on the subject. Nonetheless, I feel there are certain problems surrounding this debate that need to be clarified.

Getting back to my original question, why has not the President been able to muster sufficient bipartisan support for the Contras? In part, because there is a prevalent belief on the part of many from all sides of the political spectrum that the Contras will neither be able to exert enough pressure on the Sandinistas to force them to make changes in their style of governing, nor will they be able to overthrow the Sandinista government.

In addition, there have been any number of criticisms of the Contra leadership, particularly their past ties to Somoza's national guard. There are also allegations of corruption and misuse of funds by certain members of the leadership. Further, there have been internal political difficulties among these same leaders, casting a shadow over their ability to control their forces.

In essence, what began as a gun interdiction program has now become an ineffective, yet burgeoning policy to try and bring down the Sandinista government. No amount of lobbying or singing the praises of the Contras will empower them to achieve the goals the White House has for Nicaragua.

It is my belief that the only way for change to come about in Nicaragua is for the Nicaraguan people themselves to work for that change. There are still individuals and organizations within Nicaragua that actively oppose the Sandinistas. They do so simply by their very presence. Let me give you an example of what I mean. Recently, a member of my staff met with Nicaraguan trade union leader Alvin Guthrie, secretary general of the Confederation of Trade Union Unity [CUS]. While there is no question that Mr. Guthrie and his colleagues have been harassed because they are not Sandinista supporters, they are still willing to remain in Nicaragua and confront the Sandinista government, by refusing to be co-opted.

The meeting with my staff was arranged by the AFL-CIO's Free Trade Union Institute, hardly a pro-Sandinistra organization. Yet, the institute remains willing to help Nicaraguan free trade unionists to stand up to the Sandinistas in Nicaragua. As an institute publication clearly indicates, "* * * as the free trade unionists persist (in Nicaragua), so shall we stand in support of their arms." There is a lesson in this for us. These free trade unionists are the type of individuals we should support. We should put our energy and resources toward helping them to fight the Sandinistas from within Nicaragua.

As I have said before during debate on this issue, perhaps the biggest problem with the Contras is that they are not seen as an indigenous rebel force that could survive without the backing of the United States. Maybe what we ought to do is distance ourselves from the Contras, permitting them to work out their own internal problems and conflicts. If they were to seek and receive other legal means of support, maybe then they could honesty hope for success.

It must be clear to all of us, no matter our position on aid to the Contras, that this policy will never engender the bipartisan support of this body or the American people, and it is necessary to have that kind of support for this policy to be effective. An indication of the lack of popular support in this country for the President's Contra policy comes from a Washington Post-ABC News poll published in today's Post. It revealed that 62 percent of those polled generally oppose the granting of military and other aid to the Contras.

Finally, the only policy that will bring about a lasting stability to the region will be a long-term commitment of economic support and development assistance. The prosperity of its neighbors will bring about the downfall of the Sandinistas and enable the Nicaraguan people to build a democracy. While certain of the substitutes being offered today do call for economic aid, that aid is being offered as an afterthought to the President's military aid request. I believe this particular mix of military and economic aid only confuses and undermines our ultimate goal of bringing stability and prosperity to Central America.

We cannot, without undermining our own image in Latin America, pursue any other policy but negotiations—directly or through Contadora—and economic aid. Our difficulties with Nicaragua must be settled in a Latin American context, not merely on our own terms. Let us put our efforts behind the Alvin Guthrie's of Nicaragua; they are the real freedom fighters. They don't clamor for hundreds of millions of American dollars, they merely want our support. They certainly deserve it.

I urge my colleagues to vote against aid for the Contras.

Mr. LUNDINE. Mr. Chairman, due to obligations in New York, I am uncertain whether I will be able to be here later today when the House votes on proposals for aid to the Nicaraguan Contras. In the event that I will not be here, I wish to go on record as opposing further United States aid to the Nicaraguan Contras.

The House of Representatives has voted on aid packages for the Contras several times, and each time I have opposed proposals to send military aid to Nicaragua. I believe that the appropriation of money, whether $100 million in military assistance under the Edwards-Skelton amendment or $30 million in "nonlethal" aid and $70 million in conditional aid under the McCurdy plan, is, to put it bluntly, nothing more than a waste of money. Past expenditures have failed to result in any real progress toward a peaceful development of democracy.

I believe that it is counterproductive for the United States to supply military assistance to a rebel force that does not have the support of the Nicaraguan people and that has been repeatedly accused of corruption and human rights abuses. Instead, I believe that we can do much more to further democracy in this region by encouraging and supporting the peace negotiations of the Contadora countries.

Unfortunately, even humanitarian aid has not been immune from corruption. As the New York Times reported on June 11, recent GAO investigations have determined that a large percentage of the millions of American dollars intended as humanitarian aid to the Contras ended up in the offshore bank accounts of individuals or corporations, Contadora countries. Mr. Speaker, I do not want the dollars of American taxpayers to be siphoned off for the enrichment of a small group of people. It seems that at the present time we cannot ensure that our aid money is being used for the purposes we intended. Nor can we ensure that these expenditures are furthering our interests in the region. These would seem to me to be very sound and fundamental reasons for voting against further assistance packages.

Polls indicate that an overwhelming majority of the American people oppose military aid to the Contras. I believe that we should listen to our fellow citizens. President Reagan would do our country a great service if he were to use his enormous popularity to support and encourage peaceful efforts to establish a lasting democratic Government in Nicaragua.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, there is one other aspect of the debate over aid to the Contras which I believe has been overlooked. I agree that we should care about democracy in Nicaragua. But we must also remember that we have other interests in Latin America which are crucially important, and which deserve more attention than they are getting.

For the past 2 years the subcommittee which I chair has been examining the problem of Third World debt, particularly Latin American debt. Events of the past few days in Mexico confirm just how desperate the debt problem is for that country. I believe that the problems that Mexico is experiencing pose as great a threat to democracy in the region as do the military and political battles in Nicaragua. It is obvious that the long-term economic and political outlook for Mexico is of great importance to the United States. Indeed, the future stability of Mexico is possibly of greater importance to the stability of the region than is the future stability of Nicaragua. Mexico is certainly a greater political and economic power in the region. The President is fond of saying that the Sandinistas are only hours from our border. Mexico is our border.

It is not in the best interests of either the United States or the forces for democratic change that do exist in Nicaragua for the United States to become embroiled in a situation in Central America that is futile and counterproductive American resources could be put to much better use if they were channeled to support the Contadora peace process, and to positive initiatives to help other countries in the region.

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, for the third time this year we are being asked to vote on a morally and strategically flawed proposal to provide assistance to the Nicaraguan Contras. I believe that we should vote down all legislation to assist the Contras.

We should instead vote for this amendment offered by our distinguished colleague, Congressman LEE HAMILTON which would provide no assistance to the Contras. The Hamilton amendment would chart a different policy course toward Nicaragua, one supportive of a non-violent option, the Contadora peace process.

Mr. Chairman, the Reagan administration policy of attempting to impose military solutions to complex political, economic, and diplomatic situations is exemplified in Nicaragua. It is an error ridden policy. If the Sandinista regime is an immediate and serious threat to the security of our citizens then a $100 million program for defense is inadequate, indeed ridiculous. If, as is the case, the administration is being driven by ideology then the proposal is an unwarranted, illegal, and strategically extravagant intervention in the internal affairs of a sovereign nation with which we still have diplomatic relations.

Much can also be said about the marginal capabilities and compromised integrity of the Contras. The Contras are divided and their leadership is dominated by the discredited officers of the Somoza National Guard.

Let's finally put this issue behind us, end all assistance to the Contras, and get out of the business of seeking to overthrow by violence a regime with whom we disagree ideologically.

I urge my colleagues to vote down all initiatives to assist the Contras as we debate and consider military construction appropriations for fiscal year 1987.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Edward-Skelton amendment to provide aid to the Nicaraguan resistance.

Whether the Sandinistas are Communist or Marxist is not the crucial issue in this debate. My support for this aid package is based upon the anti-American policy that is being advanced by the Sandinista government.

In 1979, shortly after the revolution the Sandinistas prepared "The 72-Hour Document," a blueprint for constructing a Communist state in Nicaragua, in which they recognized that the true enemy they would have to confront was "the imperialist power of the United States."

In May of 1984, Commandante Bayardo Arce, a member of the ruling junta, delivered a speech to the Nicaraguan Socialist Party in Managua in which he stated:

Imperialism asks three things of us: to abandon interventionism, to abandon our strategic ties with the Soviet Union and the socialist community, and to be democratic. We cannot cease being internationalists unless we cease being revolutionaries. We cannot discontinue strategic relationships unless we cease being revolutionaries.

The Americas are the only region in the world in which the Soviet Union does not have a substantial presence. It is now attempting to establish a beachhead in Nicaragua. The Soviets already have Cuba as a base on the Atlantic side. Nicaragua gives the Soviets control of a port on the Pacific side and thus a gateway to the west coast of the Americas and the Pacific Basin.

The United States must make a decision about the presence of the Soviet Union in our hemisphere. The U.S.S.R. and its allies have provided almost $500 million in arms since 1979. Today there are about 200 Soviet and Eastern European advisers in Nicaragua. With the construction of a new military airport and a deep-water harbor, Nicaragua will be able to accommodate the full range of Soviet air and sea power, including nuclear submarines.

If we believe these developments are against the interests of the United States, then we must decide how to respond to this situation.

Nicaragua is not Grenada or Libya. No one is considering sending in the Marines to deal with this repressive government. The President has stated on numerous occasions that he will not send our troops to Nicaragua. Furthermore, the American people would not support direct U.S. military intervention. This is not a viable alternative.

There are those who place their hopes in negotiations to reduce the Soviet and Cuban military presence and to require free and fair elections. In June of 1985, Tomas Borge, the Nicaraguan Interior Minister, summed up the Sandinistas' interest in negotiations:

We will negotiate with the Contras on the day the right wing parties and COSEP (Superior Council of Private Enterprise) count all the grains of sand in the sea and all the stars in the sky. When they finish we will ask them to count them all again. (Tomas Borge, FSLN Interior Minister, in Daily Barricada, June 27, 1985.)

What other alternatives do we have? We can provide aid to the Nicaraguan resistance which shares our goals for a negotiated internal settlement and a representative government based on the free will of the people. While the Contras may not be an ideal fighting force, and the people of Nicaragua will continue to suffer as a result of this civil war, these freedom fighters are willing to risk their lives in the pursuit of democracy for Nicaragua.

The Nicaraguan freedom fighters represent the only real hope for democracy in Nicaragua. Without immediate military assistance they do not stand a chance against the immense armed forces of the Sandinistas and their sophisticated Soviet weapons.

Failing to provide aid to the freedom fighters will only further the Sandinistas' anti-American policy as they continue to strengthen their military alliance with the Soviet Union and to support terrorism and subversion in Central America.

America is the leading spokesman of the free world in promoting democracy, free trade, fair elections, and representative government. We have a long tradition of protecting these values throughout the world.

For these reasons, I believe we should support those who fight communism and Soviet intervention in our own hemisphere.

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Edwards-Skelton amendment. I believe this measure takes the necessary political, economic and military actions to insure democracy and stability in Central America.

It is unfortunate that our entire policy on Central America has been reduced to a debate on the issue of military aid to the Contras. As a result of the heated, and usually subjective debate on this matter the real issue has been lost. The issue is actually much broader; it involves the future of democracy in all of Central America.

Recently I was among a delegation of 13 House Members who visited the five Central American republics. We spoke individually with all five presidents, including Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega.

We found virtually unanimous agreement among the presidents of the four democracies—Costa Rica, Honduras, El Salvador, and Guatemala that: There can be no long-term peace and stability in Central America unless and until all five countries are democracies; pressure on Nicaragua is necessary if the Sandinista regime is ever to agree to democratic reform; and the United States must not be so blinded by the Nicaraguan problem that it allows the three struggling democracies—Honduras, El Salvador and Guatemala—to flounder.

For four decades we have been trying to induce the Central American republics to move toward democracy. Certainly, it is a form of interventionism, but it is not one we should shy away from. And now, for the first time in history, four of the five republics are democracies. In the 1980's, El Salvador, Honduras, and Guatemala have elected presidents freely.

The presidents of each of these democracies are impressive, intelligent, thoughtful men. I heard Fourth of July speeches that would bring tears to your eyes—with one big difference. These men aren't just mouthing traditional sentiments when they speak of democracy. Many of them paid dearly in earlier years for their commitment to democracy in the face of repressive military regimes. I only saw one national leader in military uniform—that man was Daniel Ortega.

Nicaragua, of course, has also held an election. But it is impossible to call Nicaragua a democratic state in any real sense of the word. Block committees are not the stuff of a pluralistic society. Asked directly if he would allow the opposition to win power in a free election—yes or no—Daniel Ortega concluded that the right of the Nicaraguan people to institutionalize Sandinista rule should not be abridged. In other words, the Marxist Sandinistas should reign permanently and unopposed. This is not democracy.

There is an inherent conflict between our ideals for government and those of the Sandinistas. In the words of El Salvador's President Jose Napoleon Duarte, "We all believe Central America will not have peace unless all five countries are democracies."

There was remarkable unanimity among the four presidents for the need to exert pressure on the Sandinistas to bring democracy to Nicaragua. As President Arias of Costa Rica said, "Ortega is not willing to negotiate unless there is a lot of political pressure from everybody—not only the Contadora countries." However, President Vincio Cerezo of Guatemala was most direct in urging us to keep our eye on the big picture. He said, "It is more important to consolidate the four democracies but all the talk is about $100 million for the Contras."

The message was clear—we must help the democracies to succeed in social and economic terms as well as in political terms.

Aid is not the sole answer, but it is an important one. A little cash goes a long way in the small economies of Central America. And it tells the people of the democracies that we are putting our money where our mouth is—we are truly supporting the cause of democratic pluralism in our hemisphere.

We must make clear that the United States is strongly supportive of the four democracies in Central America, and will take a dim view of a return to authoritarianism. We and the four Central American democracies need to continue to apply political, military and economic pressure on the Sandinista government. In addition, we can encourage our European allies to join us in pressing for democratic reforms.

The Contras, of course, will supply the military pressure required. For them to be a viable force, they need assistance to adequately train and equip troops and sufficient funding to prevent Ortega from simply waiting for Congress to tire and cut the purse strings. The Contras also require rational strategy and tactics, which evolve from skilled leadership wise enough to avoid human rights abuses that will discourage popular support.

American aid helps the four democracies by distracting the Sandinistas and making it difficult for them to try to export their revolution. In immediate terms, this is most significant to El Salvador. In the longer term, it is important to all the survival of democracy in Central America.

Yet we must go beyond giving guns to dissatisfied Nicaraguans. For democracy to take hold, it must be proven that it will work for the people. That means an economic aid package for the democracies.

President Cerezo of Guatemala said trade concessions were better than cash aids and several of the Presidents emphasized the debt burden. President Arias pointed to the flight of capital to Miami and the collapse of the tourist business which is the result of political instability. We need to review our policies on the debt burden, on trade relations and on investment promotion as well as direct aid with economic support for states that have chosen the high road of democracy. Mere talk will not do.

The entire region of Central America is in a state of flux and United States actions in the region have greater consequence now than ever before. The democratic governments of Central America are real but they are in danger of floundering. Each of these dedicated, democratic leaders deserves our support and assistance. The future of democracy in the region depends on it.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Chairman, once again I rise to express my strong opposition to the proposal to provide $100 million for the Contras who seek to overthrow the Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

First in March, and then in April, we considered aid to the Contras and the request was not approved. Today there is clear evidence that there is even more reason to cease this assistance.

The Contras themselves failed, after a 2½ week summit meeting, to achieve a united political organization and to assert control over their military commanders, most of whom are former members of the Somoza National Guard. They have not acted to halt human rights violations and have demonstrated no firm commitment to democratic principles. In short, they do not represent a viable or acceptable alternative to the Sandinistas. On the contrary, they only spread terror and hatred among the innocent campesinos of Nicaragua.

Earlier there were reports of mishandling of funds and criminal activity, including drug smuggling. Now it is clear that a massive abuse of the funds already provided has taken place. The General Accounting Office has reported that over $14 million—more than half of the $27 million appropriated—may never have reached the Contras. The GAO found that approximately $1.5 million was syphoned off to the Honduran Armed Forces and that much of the money appears to have been shifted among various bank accounts.

It is shocking to realize that a vast amount of the money intended for humanitarian aid to the Contras has been illegally diverted or misused. But it is more shocking to learn that the State Department has not instituted adequate auditing procedures, as required by Congress, and is, in fact, obstructing congressional and GAO investigations into use of the funds.

How then, has the administration the effrontry to ask Congress to approve more Contras funds when it cannot even account for those already appropriated?

It is incredible to me that President Reagan would think we should send good money after bad, even granting that it is properly distributed, to these discredited and disorganized Contras who do not control a single village in Nicaragua and who do not inspire any popular, democratic support.

Under this President, deep cuts have been made in vital programs providing nutrition, health, education, job training and other needed services to the most vulnerable of our citizens—our children, the elderly, the poor. To me it is inconscionable to consider sending $100 million down the Contra drain while Americans are deprived of essential assistance.

I would single out the problem of hunger, which is particularly acute in America today. Recently our Select Committee on Hunger reported that under the Food and Stamp Program 13.9 million of the 33.7 million eligible persons, or 41 percent, were unserved. Under the WIC Program 7.26 million women, infants, and children, or 70 percent, were unserved; under the School Lunch Program 3.1 million eligible children, or 21 percent, were unserved; and under the School Breakfact Program 11.56 million eligible children, or 79 percent, were unserved. Private sector emergency food programs have dramatically increased, especially for families with children and the long-term unemployed, and yet people are being turned away.

Mr. Chairman, at a time when one of every four children lives below the poverty line we cannot waste $100 million on a suspect, no-win collection of marauders who have no hope of overthrowing the Sandinistas regime and who, themselves, do not represent a democratic alternative. Continued funding for the Contras would be counterproductive both to our national security and to the domestic stability of our country.

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Hamilton amendment. I oppose aid to the Contras for two reasons: First, because of who the Contras are, and second, because of who we are.

In the words of one former Contra officer, the Contra leaders "have clean boots and dirty hands." Many of them are survivors of the vicious Somoza regime. Some of them are violent abusers of human rights who terrorize their own country men and women. Others have been occupied with financial abuses and graft. We may never receive a full accounting of the millions they have already received.

Now, President Reagan has pledged to correct these abuses. Frankly, I do not believe this can be done; I do not believe we can exert sufficient influence on the Contras. But even if we could induce the Contras to clean up their act, aiding them would still be wrong.

We are a country founded on the rule of law. We believe that democracy can work. The values we stand for are the highest aspirations of humankind—individual liberty, freedom, justice. We should not diminish our moral leadership in the world by underwriting a violent conflict with $100 million. That money can only continue a no-win situation.

The administration's policy in Nicaragua is simply wrong—politically, militarily, but above all, morally. It is a march of folly that takes us further from, not close to, our goals in Central America.

It is time to halt this march of folly, before we find ourselves marching to war. The Hamilton amendment would do that, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, for 5 years now, the American people have been embarrassed by the policy of aiding the Contras who are trying to overthrow the Government of Nicaragua. American covert aid to the Contras has resulted in economic sabotage, in the deaths of many innocent civilians and the fraudulent use of millions of dollars of U.S. taxpayers' money. Rather than defend its misguided policy, the administration chose to withdraw from participation in the World Court, an institution we helped found.

The United States has many resources we can apply toward an effective Central American policy—economic, political, cultural, and diplomatic. The military approach has proven to be ineffective, immoral, and wasteful. Public opinion polls and mail to congressional offices indicate that the American people oppose aid to the Contras by a 2-to-1 margin. We should listen to the good sense of the American people and reject any further aid to the Contras.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON]. As previous Members have outlined, the Hamilton substitute provides $32 million in previously appropriated funds for Central American refugees, for resettlement of Contras who cease their military activities, and for the Contadora peace process. The amendment would also provide $27 million for assistance to persons in Central America displaced by the conflict in Nicaragua. Importantly, no money would be made available for the Contras to wage war.

I share the concerns of my colleagues both from the other side of the aisle and from my own party. No one wants to see the Central American region become a base for the projection of Soviet or Cuban military power. However, the means through which the administration has fought this threat have become counterproductive; the savagery of the resistance has caused the Nicaraguan people to despise both the Contras and the American Government.

Many of the Contras are former members of Somoza's brutal national guard. Reports of human rights violations have abounded of late. In addition, we have recently learned that the Contras have been involved in drug related activities. Are these the type of people that Americans want their tax dollars to be associated with?

With millions already provided to the Nicaraguan resistance, the Contras have not made any meaningful gains against the Sandinistas. There is no indication that more money will make any difference on this issue. As is, we still cannot fully account for the $27 million most recently provided by the Congress. As with any other appropriations bill approved by this body. Members deserve an explanation as to how millions of dollars have been spent.

In the era of Gramm-Rudman budget cuts, it would be hypocritical to provide aid for the Contras. The money should be spent instead to help the less fortunate here at home. At the very least, the money should be used to promote democracy through peaceful means. This is precisely what the Hamilton substitute does. Instead of giving the Soviets and their allies the opportunity to turn the regions volatile nature for their own purposes, the substitute channels that energy toward the democratic goals we hold so dear.

I find it extremely distasteful to be waging a secret war against a government with whom we conduct diplomatic relations. If our Nation, the most democratic in the world, cannot find an effective alternative to war as we try to achieve peace, we dishonor the principles upon which this Nation was founded. After 5 years of guerrilla warfare, the Contras do not have the support of the Nicaraguan people. An additional $100 million will not change that.

Mr. Chairman, I am extremely concerned that the eventual resolution of the conflict will require American military intervention into the region. No one here wants another Vietnam. However, to approve Contra aid puts the United States one step closer to repeating a mistake of the past. I urge my colleagues who are supporting Contra aid to reconsider their positions. Enactment of the Hamilton substitute will ensure that this country follows the "high road" in establishing a true democratic Government in Nicaragua.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, our aid to the Contras will help to bring democracy back to Nicaragua. What happens to the Contras will directly affect the security of Central America, the security of the United States, and the well-being of the Nicaraguan people.

In the past, Congress has argued about the nature of the Sandinistas. Today, they are no longer seen as simple democratic reformers as they portrayed themselves in 1979. I believe that all of us will agree that they are Communists who are clearly "true believers."

In recent months, those Marxist-Leninists have stepped up censorship in Nicaragua, they crossed into Honduras and have bombed Miskito Indian villages. They are in the process of consolidating their power.

Comandante Ortega, not unlike his mentor in Cuba, wants a monopoly of power in that country. The church is being oppressed, the press is censored, opposition groups are harassed, and an efficient intelligence service "knows all."

If they get their way, there will be no opposition to the Sandinista regime. All pluralism in that society will disappear. If they succeed in their strategy, U.S. assistance to the Contras will also disappear.

The internationalist aspect of the Sandinistas is of great concern to me. They are committed to exporting their revolution to neighboring countries. Today, the Nicaraguan Government is involved in supporting revolutionary groups in many of the countries in Central America. If they succeed in convincing the Congress that we should end our assistance to the Contras, the Sandinistas will be able to devote more resources to the export of their failed revolution.

Our country's goals in Central America are clear. We want to protect Nicaragua's neighbors from Nicaraguan aggression. We want to help the Nicaraguan people achieve democracy. The freedom of the Nicaraguan people does matter. Our allies in Central America share these goals. For these reasons, our Government strongly supports the Contadora process. That peace effort is designed to reduce military tensions in the region. It also supports the growth of democracy in that nearby area.

Why must we support the Contras? The activities of the democratic resistance in Nicaragua put pressure on the Sandinistas. Comandante Ortega is forced by Contra operations to divert resources to deal with the Contras which might otherwise be turned against neighboring countries. The resistance is trying to bring democracy back to Nicaragua. The pressure from the Contras is also forcing the Sandinistas to deal with their neighbors. Those small countries want a democratic and peaceful Nicaragua.

Why hasn't Comandante Ortega signed the Contadora agreement, Why is he refusing to bring peace and pluralism to Nicaragua? Why is he refusing to negotiate with the opposition? Fortunately, the pressure from the Contras keeps reminding the comandante that there is a solution. There is a peaceful way. A negotiated settlement is the answer.

If we stop supporting the Contras, we will ensure their military defeat. The Sandinistas can further tighten the noose around the necks of their opponents. They can ignore the demands for democracy that their own people are making. They can forget about human rights and turn that poor country into a full-blown totalitarian state. Then, Communist Sandinista control will be complete, and their system will be strengthened. They will have succeeded in building another Cuba in this hemisphere. They will have established another Communist outpost right under the nose of Uncle Sam.

Do we want this to happen? We all know the answer to this question. Now is the time to help the Contras. We have no other choice.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Chairman, today we will have an opportunity to prove something to the people of the United States. We will have an opportunity to show them then we truly represent their concerns and that we are committed to ensuring that their concerns be aired in this forum.

The people of this great country have made known to us that they oppose aid to the Nicaraguan Contras. Some have phoned us. Some have written to us. Some have spoken to us during our visits back to our districts. Regardless of the means, however, they have clearly indicated to us that they want the United States to play no part in the funding of the Contras.

Mr. Chairman, when we are called upon to vote tonight, I intend to vote against aid to the Contras. I urge each and every one of my colleagues to do the same.

I am going to oppose aid to the Contras because I am convinced that the desire of the administration to extend funds—both military and economic—to the Contras is premised on ill-conceived notions which fly in the face of reality.

There are those who would have us believe that a vote for aid to the Contras is a vote for freedom in Nicaragua.

There are those who would have us believe that a vote for aid to the Contras is a vote against Soviet expansionism in our hemisphere.

And, there are those who would have us believe that a vote for aid to the Contras is a vote to for respect of human rights.

Then, there are those, who believe the truth: The real threat in Nicaragua is the threat posed by the administration's desire to promote a cause which does not represent the wishes of the very people it claims to protect. I am convinced that the administration's real goal lies not in freedom for the Nicaraguan people, not in the defense of Soviet expansionism, and not in a deep respect for human rights.

Rather, its real goal lies in a desire to overthrow the Sandinista regime. Remember, American intervention in Nicaraguan affairs has been more extensive than in any other country in Central or Latin America. Since 1981, the administration has merely used aid to the Contras as an instrument to realize its goal.

Yesterday, the President urged us to "remember" our history in Central America. Well, I remember all too well our history in Nicaragua: For more than four decades the United States supported one of the most corrupt and abusive regimes in that country's history—the Somoza family. Certainly, none of us want a return to that system. Nevertheless, a vote for Contra aid is a vote for United States intervention—a philosophical continuation of that age-old mentality.

I refuse to believe that I am inhumane, immoral, unpatriotic, or undemocratic because I oppose a return to that kind of history. I urge my colleagues to join me in opposing aid to the Contras.

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Chairman, the procedure by which this issue was brought to the floor today forces me to make a very difficult choice. Like many other Members of this body, I firmly oppose continuing our failed policy of aiding the antigovernment rebels in Nicaragua. Also like many other Members of this body, I support the military construction budget as an important part of our national security policy. Because of the unusual way these two separate issues have been packaged together, Members who share these views are forced to vote against their desires.

The district I represent includes the U.S. Naval Submarine Base in Groton, CT, our national training center for submarine personnel. The base is well commanded by Capt. John Williams, and it has an outstanding record of providing quality training to the men and women who serve on submarines. Physical structures at the base have deteriorated over the years, however, creating the need for new and better facilities. Since coming to Congress I have worked to inform my colleagues of the need for these improvements.

Although severe budget constraints have forced the committee to reduce the level of military construction funding compared to last year, several projects of the most extreme importance to the sub base are included in this bill. I support these projects, and I would like to commend Chairman HEFNER for the fine job he and his committee did in drafting this legislation. Given the opportunity to vote on the military construction budget alone, I most certainly would support it.

Unfortunately, members are not able to debate the military construction budget on its own merits. Because the two have been tied together, Members who support the military construction projects in this bill must also be willing to support aid to the Contras in Nicaragua. Although the choice is difficult, I have decided I cannot in good conscience do that.

We have provided support to the Contras for 5 years, Mr. Chairman, and in 5 years that policy has proven to be a failure. As my colleague and Chairman from Maryland, Mr. BARNES, has pointed out, the administration cannot even account for more than half of the $27 million in humanitarian aid approved last year. As my colleague from California, Mrs. BOXER, has pointed out, numerous press reports have raised serious questions about whether Contra leaders are involved in drug trafficking to the United States.

These reports alone should be enough to convince Members to reject the Contra policy. Even more compelling, however, is the simple fact that the policy has failed. After 5 years, the Contras have failed to hold any territory, to gain popular support, or to pose a serious threat to the Communist Government of Nicaragua. Instead, they have allowed that government to maintain support by blaming the United States for its own failures. They have worked to weaken internal political opposition—anyone who opposes the Sandinistas is dismissed as a dupe of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, no one in this Chamber seriously believes that voting for $30 million for the Contras, or $100 million for the Contras, will allow them to achieve their objective. It will simply continue a policy that has failed and postone the day when we face that failure and work to craft a new one.

Although I would like to go on record in support of the military construction aspects of this bill, I cannot in good conscience support Contra funding. I urge my colleagues to vote against this bill and the committee to report back a clean bill.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, the Hamilton amendent is the only prudent approach before us today. Indeed, it is the only funding alternative we are considering that can rightfully be labeled "humanitarian."

Lately, it has been in vogue to link humanitarian aid with military aid, as if this linkage will somehow make more palatable the fact that people are dying and suffering in Central America, and we are a party to it. Supplying the contras with military aid—next week or next year—will not make their cause of their methods more honorable to the Nicaraguan people who are in constant fear for their lives and well-being.

A military victory today will not bring peace tomorrow. We have subscribed to this view before in Central America and, sadly, it has brought neither stability nor prosperity to the region. A humanitarian policy is the only chance we have for a just solution, and the Hamilton substitute will set such a course.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Skelton amendment to improve the effectiveness of the Nicaraguan Democratic Resistance. Without the Skelton amendment aid, there soon would be no effective Resistance in Nicaragua. Without an effective Resistance, the Sandinistas would be free to intensify their police-state tactics for repression of the Nicaraguan people and to step up their efforts to subvert the democratic governments of neighboring countries. Now is the time to stop the Communist advance—not 10 years from now when it will cost a great deal more in blood and treasure.

Nearly three decades ago. The United States failed to prevent Communism from taking hold in Cuba. As a result of that failure, the Soviet Union has access to military bases in Cuba today, and the United States must deal with Soviet-supported Cuban adventurism in many sports around the globe, including in Nicaragua. The United States cannot afford to make the same mistake with Nicaragua that it made with Cuba. We cannot tolerate a Marxist-Leninist state on the mainland of the Americas to serve as the platform to launch subversive enterprises in North and South America and to support global deloyment of Soviet forces.

The President's policy for countering the Soviet-Cuban thrust in Nicaragua is the wisest course. Full support for the Resistance will establish and maintain pressure on the Sandinista regime to meet the negotiating objectives of freedom, democracy, and security to which the United States and the Contadora nations have subscribed. The President's policy will counter Communist advances without involving the U.S. Armed Forces.

I urge my colleagues to support the Skelton amendment to carry out the President's program for bringing about a satisfactory resolution of the conflict in Central America. With the Skelton amendment, the Sandinistas will finally understand that the United States means business.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, there can be no doubt that the question of how to best bring peace and stability to Central America is a difficult one. Unfortunately, the parliamentary situation before us today does not make the resolution of this issue any easier.0I voted against the rule because I am concerned about the limited options before us this evening.

I supported the McCurdy amendment over the Edwards amendment because, while not perfect, it represented a more realistic and balanced effort to address our major security and foreign policy interests in Central America, while taking into account the concerns of those who favor a diplomatic and political settlement of the problems in Central America against those who feel that the United States should take a more aggressive, military stance. The measure would have furnished $30 million in humanitarian assistance to the Contras, but delayed military assistance for at least 90 days by an affirmative vote of the Congress.

With the passage of the Edwards of Oklahoma amendment, however, we now have only two choices—either send $100 million to the Contras in the form of military aid and advanced anti-aircraft weapons, or don't. Unfortunately, the situation in Central America is just not that simple, and neither should be our response. Under the circumstances, however, given the limited choices before us. I am compelled to vote for the Hamilton amendment and against immediate and uncontrolled military and economic aid. Even though I feel that the Hamilton amendment has a number of serious problems, its adoption would be preferable to this renewed military swipe by proxy at the Sandinistan tar baby, which we may not be able to shake off for many years to come.

I believe that most Americans share the President's goal of supporting democracy in our hemisphere, and working against those regimes which attempt to export revolution and destabilize Latin America. Under the Constitution, he is our Commander in Chief and responsible for the conduct of U.S. foreign affairs, and his views demand the utmost consideration.

On the other hand, there is a large and growing body of evidence that our policy of aiding the Contras is flawed, both in its concept and its administration. There have been very serious charges of financial abuses in our past aid packages to the Contras, as well as fundamental questions about whether Contra aid will achieve the goals Mr. Reagan has set out for our Nation. I was elected to Congress to use my own commonsense and independent judgment on such matters and, where I differ with the President, to vote my convictions. Such is the constitutional role of Congress in providing a check and balance for administration policy. The question is not whether we should contain Communism, but whether we have only the option of using military means to achieve that goal.

In this regard, the administration has spared no effort to justify military action by portraying the Sandinistas in the worst possible light. Indeed, there is some basis in fact for many of the administration's charges. It has accused the Sandinistas of atrocities of all kinds including murder, imprisonment of political opponents, drug trafficking, and numerous human rights violations. It has cited the presence of Soviet and Cuban advisers, as well as Soviet arms shipments, as a threat to our national security. It has accused the Sandinista government of forcing centrist and democratic elements out of the broad-based Nicaraguan revolution, and converting it into a virulent Marxist-Leninist philosophy that will infect all of Central America.

On the other hand, to remedy these problems, the administration's instrument is the Contras, who themselves are no angels. Renamed by administration supporters as "freedom fighters," the Contras are a loose alliance of Nicaraguan counterrevolutionary groups based in Honduras, numbering between 15,000 and 20,000. Critics of U.S. policy have pointed out that the Contras have also committed serious atrocities, and include a substantial number of members the National Guard of deposed dictator General Anastasio Somoza-Debayle. The United States has already furnished some $100 million, including military aid, to the Contras, but they have never had any notable victories or gained significant numbers of adherents.

The stalemate in Nicaragua has led the administration to raise the ante, by furnishing the Contras with U.S. Green Beret training, and calling for a substantial increase in aid from $28 million in nonlethal aid last year up to $30 million in nonlethal and $70 million in weaponry this year, including advanced U.S. antiaircraft weapons. Interestingly, we are still attempting to determine what happened to millions of dollars of funds we just appropriated for humanitarian assistance to the Contras.

In fact, a recent investigation by the General Accounting Office revealed that, of the $27 million in humanitarian assistance to the Contras approved last year, slightly more than half—some $14.1 million—has not been adequately accounted for.

Some of this money, about $1.5 million, appears to have ended up in the hands of Honduran military officers. In the case of $4.4 million paid into the accounts of four brokers, less than $1 million can be traced to Central America. For the remainder of the funds, the trail becomes cold at offshore banks in the Bahamas and the Cayman Islands. One small neighborhood grocery store in Honduras, apparently owned by some Honduran colonels, has been paid some $3.8 million by the State Department, including a 20 percent carrying charge on all goods sent to the Contras. There have also been reports that some brokers and suppliers have made enormous profits trading U.S. dollars in illegal currency markets, and that some suppliers have been paid for supplies, such as uniforms, that have never been received by the Contras.

These abuses are an absolute disgrace. I believe it is scandalous that the administration has permitted U.S. funds to be handled in this manner. During these austere times, when so many programs to help our own farmers, the sick, the elderly, and other deserving individuals, are being pared to the bone, it is incredible that scarce Federal resources should be thrown up for grabs in this fashion. Frankly, I don't believe that one more penny should be allowed in aid to the Contras until the administration lives up to its responsibility to account for these funds. The McCurdy amendment would have imposed stronger accounting requirements on U.S. humanitarian aid to the Contras, and improves our ability to trace the ultimate disposition of these funds.

In addition these serious administrative faults, our policy of aiding the Contras is also subject to tremendous practical problems.

Certain facts are beyond dispute. The Contras number about 15,000 under arms. They face a Nicaraguan government force of 100,000, including national guardsmen. Few believe that the Contras can actually overthrow the Sandinistas. While there is some discontent with the Sandinistas within Nicaragua, it is not widespread. U.S. intelligence estimates indicate that the Contras are simply not popular enough to win, no matter how much aid we give them. Only direct U.S. military action would tip the balance.

It is that threat of a U.S. invasion that has been used by Daniel Ortega to rally and consolidate public support for his government despite some very serious economic and other problems. He has exploited the Contra threat to justify a large military buildup, suppress human rights and freedom of the press, and maintain a large Soviet-Cuban presence. In other words, our military threats are strengthening, not weakening, the Sandinista grip on Nicaragua. Meanwhile, atrocities and grievous human rights violations have been committed by both sides so, for those who want change, the Contras and their Somozan participants, offer little choice.

More to the point, however, the more aid we give the Contras, the more Daniel Ortega turns to the Soviets and the Cubans for assistance—military and otherwise. Ortega has said he will negotiate with us, but will never negotiate with the Contras, and there is no reason to doubt his resolve.

So, the question is what's next? More aid, more advisers, and then more aid? Since the Contras cannot themselves overthrow the government of Nicaragua, are we prepared to see through this proxy war when the Sandinistas don't cry uncle? Are we prepared to commit American ground troops, and air and naval support, when the Contras fall short?

Probably not, absent a clear threat to our national security. There is no question that the administration has made out a convincing case of abuses by the Sandinistas, but there are certainly other such governments around the world today which we can point out as equally or even more abusive, and we are not trying to overthrow all of them. As was stated in a recent interview by a former Republican Secretary of Defense, James Schlesinger, "Mere dislike of the Sandinistas is not an adequate basis for policy."

If we recall nothing else from our Vietnam experience, we should remember the impossibility of waging an undeclared war where there is no clear and present danger to our vital national security interests, and there is little prospect of success or support from the American people. Moreover, in terms of support from our allies, we are even more isolated than was the case in Vietnam.

Foreign ministers from eight Latin nations—Mexico, Brazil, Peru, Colombia, Panama, Uruguay, Argentina and Venezuela—visited Washington this year to urge us not to send military aid to the Contras. Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney said the same thing during his visit. We have little support.

Like most Americans, as well as our democratic friends and allies in Central America, I believe that the most prudent course is to use economic, political and diplomatic pressure to achieve our foreign policy and national security objectives. The military opinion should be our last one, not the first, particularly since the problems in the region are more socioeconomic than political.

In this regard, the McCurdy amendment, like the Edwards amendment, breaks important new ground by attempting to look at the problems of Central America as a region, and shore up existing democracies. It reprograms some $350 million in already appropriated funds, and directs these funds for economic assistance to four of Nicaragua's neighbors in Central America—assistance which is of critical importance if we are to remedy some of the root causes of instability and revolution in this critical part of the world.

One of the most serious flaws in the past U.S. policy toward this region is that we have treated political unrest in Central America almost exclusively as a military problem. There is no question that there is a military dimension to the problems of Central America, but there is also terrible poverty, disease, and hopelessness in that part of the world. For the vast majority of Central Americans, there are few opportunities for economic or educational improvement. It is indeed fertile ground for revolution, and I don't doubt for a minute that the Soviets will jump at every opportunity, no matter how small, to manipulate that discontent for their own advantage.

Our efforts in support of reform, to help the fledgling democracy in El Salvador, should tell us that there is a great deal to be gained by supporting the hopes and aspirations of the people of Central America, and not merely attacking the manifestations of their discontent and our own many years of neglect. I only wish that the administration had been as keen in support of the recommendations of its own Kissinger Commission as it has been in support of military aid to the Contras.

I very strongly support the reprogramming of funds to help the struggling democracies of Central America, to eliminate opportunities for Soviet exploitation of the problems of the region. I believe this would be an excellent supplement to the Contadora regional peace plan—which has been drawn up by the Latin nations themselves—and which calls for the withdrawal of Soviet and Cuban military advisers from Nicaragua, an end to arms shipments by outsiders into Central America, and other peaceful means to reduce tensions, de-escalate the arms buildup, assure regional stability, and address U.S. security concerns.

If we can achieve such a de-escalation, and then ecourage the building of a democratic centrist movement within Nicaragua, we would have a far better chance of tilting that country away from the Soviet-Cuban sphere of influence. In my judgment that should be the centerpiece of America's foreign policy in Central America.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, today's debate on our Government's policy toward Nicaragua is not a new one. All of the arguments have been made before, and I doubt that what any of us says in the well this afternoon or tonight will shed any new light on this difficult issue. I also know, however, that we draw no final curtain today, on this body's discussion of the Contras and the Sandinistas.

I believe that my position on the Contras is well known in this House. I have opposed military assistance to the Contras before—and I am opposed to that type of assistance today. I intend therefore, to vote for the Hamilton amendment which I believe, is the most likely of all the alternatives, to further a negotiated settlement to the situation in Nicaragua.

My opposition to assisting the Contras militarily, has always been based, on my judgment that they cannot accomplish any of the three main tasks assigned to them by President Reagan. To argue that the Contras can prevent Nicaragua from becoming a base for advanced Soviet weaponry, or that they can keep the Sandinistas from exporting their revolution to their neighbors, is to assert a conclusion unsupported by any evidence. To contend that Contra pressure will result in Nicaragua becoming a more open, less repressive society, is to ignore logic and the lessons of history. What we are being asked to do today is to make a down payment on a protracted military struggle—to invest in an organization, the Contras, that has never been able to get beyond guerilla-style operations, and which has never been able to generate, the level of popular support enjoyed by the Sandinistas, when they were insurgents, rather than rulers.

The great unanswered question about the President's Contra policy is "when?"—when, if we arm the Contras, can we expect them to take and hold substantial amounts of territory; when can we expect their popular support to increase to meaningful levels; when can we expect their pressure to result in internal reforms by the Sandinistas?

I hope the House will squarely face the fact that $100 million, even assuming it all reached the Contras, cannot answer those questions. That $100 million cannot buy a Contra victory. Adoption of the Edwards-Skelton amendment will, however, do several things. It will remove current restrictions on the type of support that can go to the Contras, and the agencies of our Government that can provide it. It will guarantee that, when this $100 million is gone, the administration will be back for more, either directly through additional requests for appropriations or indirectly by tapping the CIA's reserve for contingencies.

No; Mr. Chairman, $100 million cannot possibly advance an administration policy that is inherently contradictory, that seeks, on the one hand, to pressure the Sandinistas into changing the way they govern, while at the same time, maintaining that it is the very presence of the Sandinistas, and their philosophy, in the government of Nicaragua, that is a threat to the hemisphere. If we adopt the Edwards-Skelton amendment, we make the first installment on a military option that can have stalemate as its only realistic goal. I am not prepared to ask the Contras to die for that, nor am I prepared to ask the Nicaraguan people to endure the suffering that the pursuit of that goal will require. Nor, I would note, are any of the democracies of Latin America prepared to make those requests.

Those democracies have chosen another alternative with which to deal with the Sandinistas, the alternative of negotiation within the framework of Contadora. It has not been an easy process, nor have its results been especially encouraging to date. There is obviously a great deal of difficult work to be done, but the countries of Contadora, those with at least as much at stake in the Nicaraguan issue as we, have commited themselves to doing that work. They have chosen negotiation over the Contras. That was, and is, a wise decision, and it is one which could benefit from a greater degree of support by the United States. I hope that the votes we take today will reflect a judgment that that support should be forthcoming.

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Chairman, this House is faced with some extremely tough decisions today. As written, H.R. 5054 ties $100 million in military and humanitarian aid to the Nicaraguan Contras with $350 million in economic development assistance to Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras. I support the latter and oppose the former.

In 1983, I said on this floor, "The only way the United States can truly achieve the President's objective of fostering democracy for the people in Central America is to help them establish the basis for a positive future." Now, we finally have an economic development assistance plan for Costa Rica, Guatemala, El Salvador, and Honduras supported by the administration, but we can only help those allies in Central America develop their economy if, at the same time, we provide $100 million in military and humanitarian aid to the rebels in Nicaragua. Is this really a choice?

I cannot support H.R. 5052 unless all aid to the Nicaraguan Contras is deleted. I rise in support of Mr. HAMILTON'S amendment because it recommends a policy of multilateral diplomatic and economic containment of Nicaragua and also a commitment to disallowing the establishment of a Soviet base in Nicaragua. The only funds in Mr. HAMILTON'S amendment is for Nicaraguans who have been displaced by the war. It provides no funds for the Contras. We must choose a path away from involving our country in the civil strife in Nicaragua and toward one which affirms our commitment to ending the economic and political problems in Central America.

The real question in this debate is whether we are truly in favor of reaching a diplomatic solution to the problems in Nicaragua, with the help of our allies, or whether we favor militarizing the opposition forces in Nicaragua in hopes that they will oust the Sandinista government. I hope that this House will not favor a military solution that could possibly one day involve U.S. troops, but vote for a package that fosters democracy in countries that are already our allies and strengthens our resolve to work through the Contadora process in resolving the problems in Central America with the people and the governments of that region.

We cannot hope for democracy in Nicaragua unless we abandon our misdirected plan of aiding the Contras. I agree with those who see the need for economic development in Central America. We need to strengthen the economies in the region so that they can become self sufficent and not fall prey to any country that would encourage rebellion. We need to support our allies in the region now both economically and diplomatically.

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by Mr. EDWARDS and Mr. SKELTON.

I do so with no apologies and no regrets, because the President has bent over backward to accommodate the concerns of all the skeptics, myself included. This amendment buys time for a negotiated peace in Nicaragua without imposing a death sentence on the Contras. This amendment gives the Sandinistas 8 months to enter good-faith negotiations without cutting the Contras' legs out from under them.

Mr. Chairman, the President is to be commended for his willingness to compromise and the Edwards-Skelton approach represents a very significant compromise indeed. I was not afraid to vote against the President last time because I believed his approach was wrong. Wrong because it had too much stick and not enough carrot. Wrong because it didn't do enough to encourage the participation of the neighboring Central American nations.

But today we see a completely different approach, an approach that encourages peace without surrender and gives the Sandinistas real incentives to come to the bargaining table. The alternative is simply to do nothing about the spread of communism and revolution in Central America and that is a path I simply am not willing to follow.

That's not to say I am willing to give the administration's policy a blank check. I have no desire to fund an endless war in Nicaragua. But those who oppose this relatively small amount of aid have no answer for the growing Soviet base in Central America. And no answer is far, far worse than the alternative before us today.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I urge passage of the bill and the provisions regarding Central America in this package.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 481, title II is considered as having been read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. No further amendments to the bill are in order except the following amendments to title II printed in House Report 99-653 if offered by the proponents of said amendments identified in said report, or their designees, which shall be considered only in the following order and shall be considered as having been read, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for a division of the question; but each amendment shall be debatable as specified in House Resolution 481, equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a member opposed thereto:

(1) The amendment by Representative EDWARDS of Oklahoma;

(2) The amendment by Representative HAMILTON;

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. EDWARDS OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The test of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma: Strike out title II (as added to the bill pursuant to House Resolution 481) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

TITLE II—CENTRAL AMERICA

PURPOSES

SECTION 1. The purposes of this title are to promote economic and political development, peace, stability and democracy in Central America, to encourage a negotiated resolution of the conflict in the region, and towards these ends, to enable the President to provide additional economic assistance for the Central American democracies as well as assistance for the Nicaraguan democratic resistance, subject to the terms and conditions of title.

POLICY TOWARD CENTRAL AMERICA

SEC. 2. (a) It is the policy of the United States that—

(1) the building of democracy, the restoration of peace, economic development, the improvement of living conditions, and the application of equal justice under law in Central America are important to the interests of the United States and the community of American States;

(2) the interrelated issues of social and human progress, economic growth, political reform, and regional security must be effectively dealt with to assure a democratic and economically and politically secure Central America; and

(3) the September 1983 Contadora Document of Objectives, which sets forth a framework for negotiating a peaceful settlement to the conflict and turmoil in the region, is to be encouraged and supported.

(b) The United States strongly supports as essential to the objectives set forth in subsection (a)—

(1) a long-term commitment of economic assistance to the Central American democracies in amounts recommended by the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America;

(2) national reconciliation in Nicaragua and the creation of a framework for negotiating a peaceful, democratic settlement to the Nicaraguan conflict; and

(3) efforts to reach a comprehensive and verifiable final agreement based on the Contadora Document of Objectives, including efforts to encourage the Government of Nicaragua to pursue a dialogue with the representatives of all elements of the Nicaraguan democratic opposition for the purpose of achieving a democratic political settlement of the conflict, including free and fair elections.

POLICY TOWARD THE GOVERNMENT OF NICARAGUA

SEC. 3. (a) United States policy toward the Government of Nicaragua shall be based upon that government's responsiveness to continuing concerns affecting the national security of the United States and Nicaragua's neighbors about—

(1) Nicaragua's close military and security ties to Cuba and the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies, including the presence in Nicaragua of military and security personnel from those countries and allies;

(2) Nicaragua's buildup of military forces in numbers disproportionate to those of its neighbors and equipped with sophisticated weapons systems and facilities designed to accommodate even more advanced equipment;

(3) Nicaragua's unlawful support for armed subversion and terrorism directed against the democratically elected governments of other countries;

(4) Nicaragua's internal repression and lack of opportunity for the exercise of civil and political rights which would allow the people of Nicaragua to have a meaningful voice in determining the policies of their government through participation in regularly scheduled free and fair elections and the establishment of democratic institutions; and

(5) Nicaragua's refusal to negotiate in good faith for a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Central America based upon the comprehensive implementation of the September 1983 Contadora Document of Objectives and, in particular, its refusal to engage in a serious national dialogue with all elements of the Nicaraguan democratic opposition.

(b) The United States will address the concerns described in subsection (a) through economic, political, and diplomatic mesures (including efforts to secure the cooperation of other democratic nations in such measures), as well as through support for the Nicaraguan democratic resistance. In order to assure every opportunity for a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Central America, the United States will—

(1) engage in bilateral discussions with the Government of Nicaragua with a view toward facilitating progress in achieving a peaceful resolution of the conflict, if the Government of Nicaragua simultaneously engages in a serious dialogue with representatives of all elements of the Nicaraguan democratic opposition; and

(2) limit the types and amounts of assistance provided to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance and take other positive action in response to steps taken by the Government of Nicaragua toward meeting the concerns described in subsection (a).

(c) The duration of bilateral discussions with the Government of Nicaragua and the implementation of additional measures under subsection (b) shall be determined, after consultation with the Congress, by reference to Nicaragua's actions in response to the concerns described in subsection (a). Particular regard will be paid to whether—

(1) freedom of speech, assembly, religion, and political activity are being respected in Nicaragua and progress is being made toward the holding of regularly scheduled free and fair elections;

(2) there has been a halt to the flow of arms and the introduction of foreign military personnel into Nicaragua, and a withdrawal of all foreign military personnel has begun;

(3) a cease-fire with the Nicaraguan democratic resistance is being respected; and

(4) Nicaragua is refraining from acts of aggression, including support for insurgency and terrorism in other countries.

(d) The actions by the United States under this title in response to the concerns described in subsection (a) are consistent with the right of the United States to defend itself and to assist its allies in accordance with international law and treaties in force. Such actions are directed, not to determine the form or composition of any government of Nicaragua, but to achieve a comprehensive and verifiable agreement among Central American countries, based upon the 1983 Contadora Document of Objectives, including internal reconciliation within Nicaragua based upon democratic principles, without the use of force by the United States.

(e) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, no member of the United States Armed Forces or employee of any department, agency, or other component of the United States Government may enter Nicaragua to provide military advice, training, or logistical support to paramilitary groups operating inside that country. Nothing in this title shall be construed as authorizing any member or unit of the Armed Forces of the United States to engage in combat against the Government of Nicaragua.

SEC. 4. (a) It is the policy of the United States to assist all groups within the Nicaraguan democratic resistance which—

(1) are committed to work together for democratic national reconciliation in Nicaragua based on the document issued by the six Nicaraguan opposition parties on February 7, 1986, entitled "Proposal to the Nicaraguan Government for a Solution to the Crisis in Our Country"; and

(2) respect international standards of conduct and refrain from violations of human rights or from other criminal acts.

(b) No assistance under this title may be provided to any group that retains in its ranks any individual who has been found to engage in—

(1) gross violations of internationally recognized human rights (as defined in section 502B(d)(1) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961); or

(2) drug smuggling or significant misuse of public or private funds.

(c)(1) It is recognized that the Nicaraguan democratic resistance has been broadening its representative base, through the forging of cooperative relationships between the United Nicaraguan Opposition (UNO) and other democratic resistance elements, and has been increasing the responsiveness of military forces to civilian leadership.

(2) The President shall use the authority provided by this title to further the develpments described in paragraph (1) and to encourage the Nicaraguan democratic resistance to take additional steps to strengthen its unity, pursue a defined and coordinated program for representative democracy in Nicaragua, and otherwise increase its appeal to the Nicaraguan people.

(d) In furtherance of the policy set out in this section, not less than $10,000,000 of the funds transferred by section 6(a) shall be available only for assistance to resistance forces otherwise eligible and not currently included within UNO, of which amount $5,000,000 shall be available only for the Southern Opposition Bloc (BOS) and $5,000,000 shall be available only for the Indian resistance force known as Misurasata.

Amounts transferred under this section shall be administered in accordance with the terms and conditions of chapter 6 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961. (c)(1) The Secretary of State, the Administrator of the Agency for International Development, and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, shall—

(B) provide a report describing this plan to the President and the Congress no later than March 1, 1987.

(2) The report required by paragraph (1) shall include an analysis and recommendations, prepared in consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, on how more effective use can be made of agricultural commodities from the United States in alleviating hunger in Central America and contributing to the economic development of the Central American democracies.

(d)(1) There are hereby transferred to the President out of funds appropriated by the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1985 (Public Law 99-88), under the heading "Assistance For Implementation of a Contadora Agreement" such sums as the President may require, but not more than $2,000,000, to facilitate the participation of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras in regional meetings and negotiations to promote peace, stability, and security in Central America.

(2) Funds transferred under paragraph (1) shall remain available for the same period of time as such funds would have been available under the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1985 (Public Law 99-88), but for the enactment of this title.

(e) The Congress reaffirms its support for the establishment of a Central American Development Organization, authorized by section 464 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as an effective forum for dialogue on, and the continuous review and advancement of, Central America's political, economic, and social development, including the strengthening of democratic pluralism and respect for internationally recognized human rights. Toward this end, not less than $750,000 of the funds transferred by this section should be used to establish the Central American Development Organization and its administrative apparatus so as to ensure that Central American development objectives are encouraged.

SEC. 7. (a) The Secretary of State (or his designee) shall be responsible for policy guidance, coordination, and supervision of United States Government activities under this title.

(b) Any agency to which funds transferred under section 6(a) are allocated shall establish standards, procedures and controls necessary to assure that such funds are fully accounted for and are used exclusively for the purposes authorized by this title. Such standards, procedures and controls shall be developed in consultation with the Comptroller General and the appropriate committees of the Congress, and shall include such safeguards as segregation of accounts, monitoring of deliveries, and requirements for the keeping of complete records available for audit by authorized representatives of the United States Government.

FUNDS FOR HUMANITARIAN ASSISTANCE

SEC. 8. (a) Of the amounts transferred under section 6(a), $30,000,000 shall be available only for the provision of humanitarian assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance.

(b) Of the $30,000,000 made available only for purposes of subsection (a), $3,000,000 shall be available only for strengthening programs and activities of the Nicaraguan democratic resistance for the observance and advancement of human rights.

APPLICATION OF EXISTING LAWS

SEC. 9. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this title, funds transferred under section 6(a) shall be available for the purposes described in section 105(a) of the Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1986, and all the requirements, terms, and conditions of such section and sections 101 and 102 of such Act, section 502 of the National Security Act of 1947, and section 106 of the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1985 (Public Law 99-88), shall be deemed to have been met for such use of such funds.

(b) The use of funds made available under this title is subject to all applicable provisions of law and established procedures relating to the oversight by the Congress of operations of departments and agencies.

(c) Nothing in this title shall be construed as permitting the President to furnish additional assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance from funds other than the funds transferred under section 6(a) or otherwise specifically authorized by the Congress for assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance.

(d) No limitation or restriction contained in section 10 of Public Law 91-672, section 8109 of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1986, section 502 of the National Security Act of 1947, or any other provision of law shall apply to the transfer or use of funds transferred to the President under this title.

USE OF FUNDS AFTER A PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT

SEC. 10. If the President determines and so reports to the Congress that a peaceful settlement of the conflict in Central America has been reached, then—

(1) the unobligated balance, if any, of funds transferred under section 6(a) shall be available for the purposes of relief, rehabilitation, and reconstruction in Central American countries in accordance with the authorities contained in chapter 4 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (relating to economic support fund assistance);

(2) the President shall terminate any economic embargo of Nicaragua then in effect; and

(3) the President shall take such further actions as are appropriate to carry out the policy described in section 2(a)(1) of this title with respect to all Central American countries, including Nicaragua.

INCENTIVES FOR A NEGOTIATED SETTLEMENT

SEC. 11. (a) Assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance under this title shall be provided in a manner designed to encourage the Government of Nicaragua to respond favorably to the many opportunities available for achieving a negotiated settlement of the conflict in Central America. These opportunities include the following proposals:

(1) Six opposition Nicaraguan political parties on February 7, 1986, called for an immediate cease-fire, an effective general amnesty, abolition of the state of emergency, agreement on a new electoral process and general elections, effective fulfillment of international commitments for democratization, and observance of implementation of these actions and commitments by appropriate international groups and organizations;

(2) President Reagan on February 10, 1986, offered simultaneous talks between the Government of Nicaragua and all elements of the Nicaraguan democratic opposition in Nicaragua and between the Government of Nicaragua and the United States Government;

(3) President Jose Napoleon Duarte of El Salvador on March 5, 1986, offered an additional dialogue between the Government of El Salvador and the insurgents in El Salvador if the Government of Nicaragua would simultaneously engage in a dialogue with all elements of the Nicaraguan democratic opposition; and

(4) The United Nicaraguan Opposition on May 29, 1986, reiterated its support for the six-party proposal described in paragraph (1) as a means to achieve national reconciliation and democratization.

(b)(1) In furtherance of the objectives set forth in subsection (a), and except as provided in subsection (e), assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance under this title shall be limited to the following:

(A) humanitarian assistance (as defined in section 722(g)(5) of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985);

(B) logistics advice and assistance;

(C) support for democratic political and diplomatic activities;

(D) training, services, equipment and supplies for radio communications, collection, and utilization of intelligence, logistics, and small-unit skills, tactics and operations; and

(E) equipment and supplies necessary for defense against air attacks.

(2) The assistance described in paragraph (1) shall be limited, by type and value, to the matters specified in the classified annex to the communication from the President to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate dated June 24, 1986.

(3) No weapons or ammunition shall be delivered under this title to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance prior to September 1, 1986.

(c) On and after October 15, 1986, an additional $20,000,000 of the funds transferred under section 6(a) may be made available for obligation and expenditure for assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance 15 days after the President determines and reports to the Congress that—

(1) the Central American countries have not concluded a comprehensive and effective agreement based on the Contadora Document of Objectives;

(2) the Government of Nicaragua is not engaged in a serious dialogue with representatives of all elements of the Nicaraguan democratic opposition, accompanied by a cease-fire and an effective end to the existing constraints on freedom of speech, assembly, religion, and political activity, leading to regularly scheduled free and fair elections and the establishment of democratic institutions; and

(3) there is no reasonable prospect of achieving such agreement, dialogue, cease-fire, and end to constraints described in paragraphs (1) and (2) through further diplomatic measures, multilateral or bilateral, without additional assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance.

(d)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, on or after October 15, 1986, funds transferred under section 6(a) may be obligated or expended only if the President determines and reports to the Congress that the Nicaraguan democratic resistance groups receiving assistance under this title have agreed to and are beginning to implement—

(A) confederation and reform measures to broaden their leadership base;

(B) the coordination of their efforts;

(C) the elimination of human rights abuses;

(D) the pursuit of a defined and coordinated program for achieving representative democracy in Nicaragua; and

(E) the subordination of military forces to civilian leadership; and

(F) the application of rigorous standards, procedures and controls to assure that funds transferred under section 6(a) are fully accounted for and are used exclusively for the purposes authorized by this title.

(2) In making his determination under paragraph (1), the President shall take into account the effectiveness and legitimacy of the political leadership of those Nicaraguan democratic resistance groups receiving assistance under this title, including the ability of that political leadership—

(A) to reflect the views and objectives of the internal and external Nicaraguan democratic opposition;

(B) to function as the spokesman for the Nicaraguan democratic opposition with Central Americans, international organizations, and the United States Government;

(C) to represent the Nicaraguan democratic opposition in dealing with the Government of Nicaragua;

(D) to provide command and control for the military forces of all resistance groups receiving assistance under this title and to establish the goals for their military operations;

(E) to determine the distribution of and maintain accountability for assistance provided under this title; and

(F) to provide the legal mechanisms necessary for the enforcement of standards of conduct applicable to all members of the resistance groups receiving assistance under this title.

(e) On and after February 15, 1986, the restrictions in subsection (b) shall cease to apply and the remaining funds transferred under section 6(a) may be made available for obligation and expenditure for assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance 15 days after the President determines and reports to the Congress that—

(1) the Central American countries have not concluded a comprehensive and effective agreement based on the Contadora Document of objectives;

(2) the Government of Nicaragua is not engaged in a serious dialog with representatives of all elements of the Nicaraguan democratic opposition, accompanied by a cease-fire and an effective end to the existing constraints of freedom of speech, assembly, religion, and political activity leading to regularly scheduled free and fair elections and the establishment of democratic institutions; and

(3) there is no reasonable prospect of achieving such agreement, dialog, cease-fire, and end to constraints described in paragraphs (1) and (2) through further diplomatic measures, multilateral or bilateral, without additional assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance, unless the Congress has enacted a joint resolution under section 12 disapproving the provision of additional assistance (other than assistance described in subsection (b)(1) within the limits of funds previously made available).

(f)(1) Notwithstanding subsection (e), no assistance (other than the assistance described in subparagraphs (A) through (C) of subsection (b)(1)) shall be provided at any time to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance under this title if—

(A) the President determines that—

(i) the Central American countries have concluded a comprehensive and effective agreement based on the Contadora Document of Objectives; or

(ii) the Government of Nicaragua is engaging in a serious dialog with representatives of all elements of the Nicaragua democratic opposition, accompanied by a cease-fire and an effective end to the existing constraints on freedom of speech, assembly, religion, and political activity leading to regularly scheduled free and fair elections and the establishment of democratic institutions; or

(B) the Congress enacts a joint resolution under section 12 disapproving the provision of additional assistance (other than assistance described in subparagraphs (A) through (C) of subsection (b)(1)).

(2) The prohibition contained in paragraph (1) shall not apply—

(A) with respect to assistance described in subparagraph (D) of subsection (b)(1) if the Government of Nicaragua fails to observe an applicable cease-fire; or

(B) with respect to assistance described in subparagraph (E) of subsection (b)(1) if the Government of Nicaragua acquires additional equipment or materiel to carry out air attacks.

CONGRESSIONAL PRIORITY PROCEDURES

SEC. 12. (a)(1) A joint resolution described in subsection (e) of section 11 shall be one

(3) references in such paragraphs to the eighth day and to fifteen calendar days shall be deemed to be references to the fifth day and to five calendar days, respectively.

(c) The provisions of this section are enacted—

(1) as exercises of the rulemaking powers of the House of Representatives and Senate, and as such they are deemed a part of the Rules of the House and the Rules of the Senate, respectively, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in the House and the Senate in the case of joint resolutions under section 11, and they supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent with such rules; and

(2) with full recognition of the constitutional right of the House and the Senate to change their rules at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of the House or Senate, and of the right of the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives to report a resolution for the consideration of any measure.

(1) with respect to any request described in section 722(p) of such Act submitted by the President to the Congress on or after the date of enactment of this title, and

(2) with respect to any request by the President for additional economic assistance for the Central American democracies to carry out recommendations contained in the report required by section 5(c)(1)(B) (in which case references to a joint resolution in subsections (s) and (t) of section 722 of such Act shall be deemed to be references to a joint resolution without a preamble, the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "That the Congress approves the additional economic assistance for the Central American democracies that the President requested pursuant to title of the Military Construction Appropriation Act, 1987.", except that, for purposes of consideration in a House of Congress of a joint resolution under subsection (s) or (t) of such section, amendments to such a joint resolution may be in order but only if such amendments are germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] will be recognized for 30 minutes and a Member opposed to the amendment will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to correct a clerical error in my amendment.

On page 24 of House Report 99-653, in section 11(e), the line reads: "1986"; it should read "1987".

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER] if the gentleman is seeking recognition for the purpose of opposing the amendment.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, yes, I am opposed to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman qualifies. The gentleman will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], the minority leader of the House.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, those in the twilight of their careers in this House may not be around to see the ultimate result of what we do today.

But younger Members of the House will. If we make the wrong decision today, they are the ones President Reagan said will be faced with "bad choices followed by worse choices."

In recent weeks I have spoken to some of these younger Members. I'm talking about such distinguished younger colleagues as OLYMPIA SNOWE and ROBIN TALLON, ROD CHANDLER and RICHARD RAY, CONNIE MACK and AL BUSTAMANTE. They went to Central America recently. They went there with an open mind.

These Members came back and told of the fierce unyielding opposition to the Sandinistas by the four Presidents of the Central American democracies.

These Members came back supporting economic aid to the region and effective, timely military, and humanitarian aid to the Contras.

Mr. Speaker, let's face it—I love you personally and I respect your office—but on this issue you have a mind-set.

You haven't budged 1 inch from the original opinion you held 3 years ago.

I am reminded of the words of Mark Twain who said:

Loyalty to petrified opinion never yet broke a chain or freed a human soul.

Will, these younger Members have shown us older Members what an open mind can do.

Yes, I have always wanted to send military aid to the Contras. I, too, haven't changed on this point.

But after listening to these younger Members, I agreed that we should also have an economic aid package to the region, something I originally opposed.

I agreed to a September 1 date for sending arms, something I originally opposed. I listened and I learned from firsthand discussions about the Contras—their good points and their bad points.

Out of those discussions came a new consensus reflected in the bipartisan amendment offered by MICKEY EDWARDS and IKE SKELTON and ROD CHANDLER and RICHARD RAY.

These are the voices of true bipartisanship, voices of openness and reason and dialog.

Today we have to choose. Let's end the vacillation about our commitment to freedom and to the security of this hemisphere.

Systematic delay is not policy—it's paralysis.

The difference between our two approaches, Mr. Speaker, is that we want bipartisan consensus. But you want one-party conformity.

The bipartisan amendment speaks for those who cannot speak—the persecuted Roman Catholic Church, the persecuted Miskito Indians, the Jews forced to flee the Nicaraguans robbed of their heritage by Communists. The young men, some only in their early teens, who have left everything they hold dear to join the freedom fighters.

Their voices cry out to us: "Help us. Help us regain our freedom, our dignity, our country."

The McCurdy amendment turns its back on these people and says: "We don't trust you. We want yet another vote."

Well, we've got the only vote we need right here, right now.

Let's have the guts to nurture democracy and fight communism in our hemisphere. Today. Not tomorrow. I say, today, Mr. Speaker, so that during the next few years, our younger colleagues won't be "faced with bad choices followed by worse choices."

You and I are old war-horses, Mr. Speaker. We've fought the good fight. In a while, we'll be gone.

But I'm not going out as someone with calcified and petrified opinions.

I want principled consensus the genius of our form of Government. The bipartisan amendment gives us this consensus.

And I would plead with you one more time to give out truly bipartisan approach a chance to succeed.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, and for purposes of response, I yield to the chairman of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES].

Mr. BARNES. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to respond quickly to the comments of the gentleman from Ohio just a few moments ago in which he said that there is no evidence with respect to the diversion of funds that were provided last year to the Contras.

We have here on the floor some of the evidence—not all of it, some of it is available in the subcommittee—and anyone who would like to see it, although we have not made it public to the press, anyone who would like to see what we have would find us happy to share it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BEDELL].

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to funding for the Contras.

Mr. Chairman, I shall limit my remarks with respect to the issue of the President's funding request for the Contras because many of you know exactly how I feel about this particular issue. I have been and remain opposed to this funding request, and shall continue to oppose this funding request throughout the remainder of my tenure in office.

I am often amazed at the lack of a sense of history that permeates our debate on Nicaragua. In 1972 when I originally sought the opportunity to serve in this esteemed body, I questioned our Nation's involvement in the Vietnam war. That engagement, while valorous, remains one of the more tragic episodes in modern American diplomatic history. Today, some seem desirous of repeating that episode, or worse, proving that with shorter military supply lines and a more finely tuned publicity campaign that America is back, riding tall in the saddle, and capable of defeating a Marxist horde in our own back yard. Well I don't buy it and I don't think the American people buy it either.

Exactly what are our objectives in Nicaragua? It seems to me that our objectives are, or at least ought to be, a commitment to working with our hemispheric friends and allies in promoting the cause of democracy in Central America, and that as a democratic nation, we realize the best way in which to achieve this aim rests with finding solutions to the problems that induce the socio-economic inequities that permit the Soviet Union the opportunity to exploit such inequities to their geopolitical gain. It seems to me that our objectives are, or at least ought to be, to deter Soviet-Cuban influence and adventurism through a commitment to developing with our hemispheric friends and allies the democratic institutions that protect the people of Central America from the tyrannies of either the political left, or the political right. Finally, it seems to me that our objectives are, or at least they would appear to be, a commitment to achieving these aims through a reliance upon diplomatic alternatives, not coercive covert or overt military force as applied by the proxy American forces known as the Contras.

It seems to me that we need only to use our sense of history to recall that continued support for the Contras spells a repeat of the errors of our Vietnam experience. How long can the Contras sustain themselves before Americans are dragged into the Nicaraguan conflict by accident or design? Who will train the Contras to utilize heavy weapons if they are permitted the opportunity to purchase such weapons, and where will such training take place? Under such circumstances, how long can we expect to await receipt of Gulf of Fonseca resolution requesting the deployment of American troops in Central America? When are we going to open up our eyes and see that what we are really being asked to endorse is an exorcism of President Reagan's Vietnam trauma and that the prescription for this exorcism is a good old dose of vintage John Wayne celluloid leading yet another charge against our enemies wherever they may be? When are we going to realize that our enemies in Central America are not the Nicaraguan people, but in fact, are poverty, hunger, disease, malnutrition, infant mortality, lack of education, lack of opportunity, lack of development, lack of hope, lack of dreams, and lack of confidence and trust in a United States that once served as a beacon of hope, but today, a United States that serves as a merchant of death.

Mr. Chairman, the Nicaraguan people are not the allies of the Soviet Union. They have nothing in common with the Soviet Union. The allies of the Soviet Union in Central America are poverty, hunger, disease, and lack of hope for a better life. These are the problems that our Nation retains the strength, vitality, and know-how to cope with. These are the enemies that our Nation has consistently defeated and continues to defeat decisively. These are also the allies that the Soviet Union consistently seeks out and exploits to their advantage. These then are the enemies we must seek to confront, isolate, and defeat.

I have listened to my colleagues assert that the moneys requested for the Contras are already appropriated funds, available to us from our Nation's defense budget and available to the Contras for their crusade against social injustice and economic inequity, but is $100 million enough to let them get the job done or will we be asked again in the near future to infuse another $100 million, $200 million, or worse, to infuse American blood in a campaign doomed to failure. I say if the $100 million is available, it would be better spent against poverty, hunger, and disease. It would be better spent in restoring the traditional American image of a true and dependable hemispheric friend and ally—a friend and ally that is part of the solution and not the problem.

Mr. Chairman, as I prepare to leave from office, I think of the incentives that brought me here. These incentives were a keen desire to use history as an education tool that protects us against our past mistakes. Today, that tool is available to us. United States national security interests in Central America lie with the application of social, economic, and political solutions to social, economic, and political problems not with a flexing of United States military might. Mr. Chairman, I pray we heed the lessons of history and sustain our position against military aid to the Contras.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, as a part of my remarks I am including in the RECORD the GAO report on its investigation of the Contra corruption.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal of folksy philosophy today. As I listen to the well-intended and sincere remarks of my colleagues, and I do not question either, I am proud to use the down home philosophy from my home State of Arkansas which goes like this: "You can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear."

That is what we are trying to do with the Contras. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES] in his report notes that Congress gave the Contras $27 million in February of this year, and now the administration is coming back to Congress, asking for $100 million more. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES], chairman of the Western Hemisphere Subcommittee has revealed that of the $27 million, most of it has not gone to the Contras. Most of the United States taxpayers money has gone to freedom fighters in other places like Florida, the Bahamas, the Cayman Islands, and Honduras. Even after a GAO—General Accounting Office—investigation we do not know where all of the $27 million has gone.

Please read the report of the investigation.

Much of the money has gone to foreigners without a clear connection to the Contras. The investigation reveals that $1,500,000 went to members of the Honduran Air Force; a Honduran general received $450,000; $3.8 million has been spent with a Tegucigalpa grocery store owned by colonels of the Honduran Army.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. If I have time I will yield to the gentleman. As I stated the grocery store is owned by Honduran colonels; $4.4 million went to four brokers of the Contras, of which $3 million has gone to Florida and Caribbean bank accounts.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. If I have time I will yield.

There are 15,000 to 20,000 Contras. The GAO reports that 62,120 belts were purchased, and 53,526 pairs of boots. The inventory sounds more like Imelda Marcos' closet than a revolutionary army inventory.

Corruption and mismanagement is the product of an investigation by the General Accounting Office.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. If I have time, I will yield to the gentleman.

The report is here for anyone to see. I will put a copy of the investigation in the RECORD for all of the world to see.

The administration's policy is not advancing democracy in Central America, it is helping private enterprise in Florida, in the Bahamas, in the Cayman Islands, and in Honduras. The Contra connection is not fighting for the cause of freedom. They are working for the Yankee dollar.

The report follows:

STATEMENT OF FRANK C. CONAHAN, U.S. GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS, SUBCOMMITTEE ON WESTERN HEMISPHERE AFFAIRS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES ON HUMANITARIAN ASSISTANCE TO THE NICARAGUAN DEMOCRATIC RESISTANCE

Mr. Chairman, Members of the Subcommittee:

I am pleased to be here to discuss GAO's continuing review of the $27 million in humanitarian assistance authorized for the Nicaraguan democratic resistance.

Our previous testimonies before this subcommittee focused on our concerns about the controls exercised over this program by the State Department's Nicaraguan Humanitarian Assistance Office (NHAO). Overall, we have concluded that the State Department does not have sufficient procedures and controls to ensure that program funds are being used for purposes intended by law.

NHAO does not have the ability to observe delivery and use of procured items to ensure that the items are not being diverted, bartered, or otherwise exchanged. Moreover, for items brought in the region, NHAO does not have the ability to validate invoice and receipt documents. We are generally satisfied with controls over payments to U.S. suppliers. However, NHAO does not have procedures to assure that all funds made available based on invoices and receipts from suppliers in the region are actually used to pay these suppliers.

Today I would like to concentrate on our most recent efforts to track expenditures for purchases made in the region—i.e. the results of our examination of bank records subpoenaed several weeks ago at the request of this subcommittee. But first I will briefly describe how State has been paying for the non-U.S. purchases.

NHAO obtains invoices and receipts as documentation of purchases made in the region. These documents are obtained by NHAO through the United Nicaraguan Opposition (UNO) in Miami. Before it authorizes payment, NHAO reviews them to ensure that the items are allowable under the program. However, because NHAO does not have a presence in the region, it is not able to verify the validity of the documents—that is that they are legitimate records of transactions, and that items indicated are being delivered to the resistance forces.

After NHAO approves the invoices and receipts, it issues a payment voucher, and the U.S. Treasury then transfers the funds. Because of the sensitivities of governments in the region to this program, State adopted a policy of not making payments directly to suppliers in the region. Instead the Treasury sends the funds to designated U.S. bank accounts mostly in Miami.

There are two types of accounts: (1) accounts owned by suppliers and (2) accounts owned by brokers authorized by suppliers in the region to act as their agents to receive payments. The brokers are, in turn, expected to pay these suppliers for the goods and services shown on the invoices and receipts provided NHAO. According to NHAO, some suppliers selected brokers to receive their payments because the suppliers did not maintain their own U.S. bank accounts.

As of May 10, 1986, Treasury paid a total of $14.1 million to these accounts, including $7.8 million paid into six accounts owned by suppliers, and $5.7 million into six accounts owned by brokers acting as agents for about 50 suppliers. In addition, two accounts owned by United Nicaraguan Opposition (UNO) organizations received payments of $583,000 for administrative, medical and other expenses; some of which were incurred in the region.

NHAO does not have specific information on the disbursement of funds deposited in these accounts. Its position is that the Treasury payments were made into the accounts for goods and services as shown in the invoices and receipts it obtained, and that it has no authority to trace the funds further.

On May 8, 1986, at this subcommittee's request, the House Committee on Foreign Affairs approved issuance of subpoenas on 14 U.S. bank accounts which had received funds under the humanitarian assistance program—the six accounts owned by suppliers, the six accounts owned by brokers, and the two accounts owned by UNO organizations.

At the subcommittee's request, we are examining the account records. As of June 9, 1986, we had reviewed the records of 8 accounts covering $12.2 million of the $14.1 million, which Treasury had deposited as of May 10 in those accounts. Our examinations have raised a number of questions.

For example, under a broker arrangement, one would expect to find disbursements from the account to the region in amounts roughly equal to Treasury deposits—either payments to specific suppliers or block payments to the region for further distribution there. However, we did not find this pattern with regard to most of the funds in the four accounts we analyzed. As of May 10, 1986, the Treasury paid about $4.4 million into these four broker accounts. However, we can trace only $785,674 as being paid into Central America by these brokers and only $185,434 of this amount being paid to identified suppliers. Instead, most funds in these broker accounts were disbursed in the United States or offshore banks. A significant portion of one broker account was not paid out and remained in the account.

At this point, I would like to describe in some detail the activity in several of the accounts we examined and to raise some concerns that we have based on our review.

BROKER A

Treasury paid one broker account about $654,000 based on invoices and receipts received from three suppliers in the region. Prior to these payments, the account had a $4,400 balance; no other funds have been deposited in this account since Treasury started making payments. Thus, virtually all the funds in this account are traceable to U.S. Treasury payments.

The bulk of these funds have not been sent to the specific suppliers, or into the region. As of the subpoena date, over $422,000 remained in the account, drawing interest. Partial payments were made to two of the three suppliers; the third supplier received no payments. In total, only $185,000 of the $654,000 deposited by Treasury was transferred to suppliers in the region. This account raises key questions: Why are humanitarian funds remaining in brokers' accounts? Why are partial or no payments being made to identified suppliers in the region?

BROKER B

Another broker account has received about $3.3 million from the Treasury since October 1985. At the time of the first Treasury deposit, the account had a balance of $68,700 and from October through May 1986 received deposits from other sources, totaling $659,581. Thus Treasury deposits comprise over 80 percent of the account's funds.

The Treasury payments to this account were based on invoices and receipts from 22 different companies or individuals. We could match none of the disbursements from this account to these companies or individuals. The records indicate that only about $150,000 was paid from this account to accounts in Central America. The other disbursements from the account, totaling $3.8 million, consist of payments to companies and individuals in the United States ($3.4 million) and to offshore accounts in the Cayman Islands and the Bahamas ($380,000).

Essentially, funds in this account are flowing from bank account to bank account, in the United States and offshore, and to individuals and companies which do not appear to be suppliers in the region. Since broker accounts were supposedly set up to assist in getting payments to these suppliers, this account raises questions about why so few payments are being sent into the region.

BROKER C

On November 4, 1985, a third broker account received a Treasury payment of $243,750 based on invoices and receipts from a commercial supplier for uniforms. At the time of this deposit the account had a prior balance of about $49,000. On November 6, 1985, the broker issued checks to the armed forces of a country in the region in the amount of $113,750 and $130,000 totaling $243,750—the exact amount of the payment by Treasury. The account records show only two payment to the supplier represented by the broker totaling about $52,000. These payments were in July, 1985—before the assistance program began. We question the basis for these payments to the armed forces.

SUPPLIER A

Turning now to a supplier account—that is, a company in the region which maintains an account in the United States and, thus, receives payments directly from the U.S. Treasury. This supplier has received payments from Treasury of about $6.6 million from November 1985 through May 10, 1986. These payments were based on company invoices and receipts furnished to NHAO. The only other deposit to the account during this period was for $32,000. Thus, virtually all payments made from this account were funds provided the company by the Treasury.

Treasury made its first payment to the company of $896,122 on November 16, 1985, and on November 18, 1985 a payment of $742,939 was made from this account to the armed forces of the country of the supplier. Again on January 8, 1986, a Treasury deposit of $411,974 was followed by a payment on January 10, 1986 of $450,000 to the Commander-in-Chief of that country's armed forces. Without Treasury's payments, there would not have been sufficient funds in the account at the times of these transactions to cover the amounts of the payments.

The invoices and receipts on which the Treasury payments to the account were based show they were for food and other consumables. A question is thus raised as to the basis for these payments to the armed forces.

In summary, the examination of the bank records has for the most part only raised more questions. Moreover, there is enough evidence to be concerned that humanitarian assistance may not be reaching the intended beneficiaries. Without adequate controls—and by that I mean mechanisms to validate invoices and receipts, trace payments to suppliers, and verify deliveries and use—that concern will remain.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, we will get around to the accounting when the Barnes amendment comes up. Suffice it to say that the investigation would have been better run by Inspector Clouseau. It was a hoax. They have not permitted the State Department and the GAO to sit down and talk together and exchange information and answer questions even today. So it is a fraud, it is a witch hunt, and we will get to that.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. I will yield if the gentleman will get me the time from the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] or somebody. Will the gentleman get me some time?

Mr. BARNES. I will be happy to try to get the gentleman some time so I can respond to the gentleman's outrageous statement.

We have been willing to provide the State Department everything we have.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] has the time.

Mr. HYDE. I have heard Members of the Democratic leadership say that if a Soviet base is ever started in Nicaragua and gets underway, we will take care of that. We will send our troops down there. One of their leaders said, "If it's war they want, they'll get war."

Well I hope they never, never have to eat those words, but I want to recall to the Members, if time permits, what the President said yesterday, because I am sure that many of the Members did not get to hear it.

Here is what he said:

> Think again how Cuba became a Soviet air and naval base. You will see what Nicaragua will look like if we continue to do nothing. Cuba became a Soviet base gradually over many years. There was no single dramatic event * * * that captured the Nation's attention. And so it will be with Nicaragua.
> The Sandinistas will widen and deepen another port while we debate: is it for commercial vessels or Soviet submarines? The Sandinistas will complete another airstrip while we argue: is it for 707's or Backfire bombers? A Soviet training brigade will come to Nicaragua. Half will leave and half will stay. And we will debate: are they soldiers or engineers?
> Eventually, we Americans will have to stop arguing among ourselves. We will have to confront the reality of a Soviet military beachhead inside our defense perimeters—about 500 miles from Mexico. A future President * * * will then face nothing but bad choices, followed by worse choices.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I think that one thing we probably all agree on is that we are tired of this issue and tired of the rhetoric, and very frankly as tired and confused as the American people. I hope that at least by the end of this day we have resolved this issue one way or the other, but somehow I doubt it.

I think the worst position of all is for the United States to have a confused policy with regard to Central America. I guess that is the one question I have to keep asking. What is our policy in Central America with regard to the Contras? Is it to overthrow the Sandinistas? Is it to put pressure on them? Is it to interdict arms?

I have heard all those arguments and the fact is that it is not clear.

What exactly is our policy with regard to Central America? It is not clear.

So in the absence of a policy, then I am left with a very simple test in weighing these measures and the test is this: Is the money that we are spending at the present time working? Is it doing anything? Is it accomplishing anything?

We spent almost in excess of $100 million, if not more. What are we getting? Have the Sandinistas been weakened? No.

Have they been overthrown? No.

Have the Contras interdicted arms? No.

Are the Contras an effective fighting force? No.

Have they gained the support of any other Central American or Latin American country in terms of their policy? No.

Not only have these goals not been achieved, but in addition to that, we find out that $14 million has been diverted away from humanitarian assistance and is used for a number of other goals that do not relate to the purposes for which they were designed.

Now, based on that record of failure, we are being asked to provide another $100 million and $300 million in addition to that.

There is no other program that deserves to be funded based on that kind of record and this program does not deserve to be funded on its kind of record.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAY].

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to carefully consider the merits of the Skelton-Edwards amendment and to compare it with other amendments that are being introduced today. In doing so, I believe that you will be favorably impressed with the arguments you have already heard and will hear today, arguments which I hope will lead you to vote for the bipartisan amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as mentioned earlier, on March 20 of this year I worked to defeat the Contra legislation which would have provided $100 million in aid.

This was an extremely difficult vote for me, but I am convinced now that it was correct. It has caused those of us who support Contra aid to take a long look at that organization, and what can be done to improve it.

I personally have devoted many hours to becoming more knowledgeable on this issue.

Recently, I traveled to Miami, FL, where I met with the Contra leaders, Mr. Calero, Mr. Cruz, and Mr. Robelo, and visited with them for 2½ hours.

I came away from that meeting impressed with the UNO leadership and the mechanisms they have put in place to make sure that the civilians are in control of the military. I firmly believe that they are well on the way to becoming a government in exile. They are presently, an organization-in-exile.

I then went into the jungles of Honduras and actually visited the Contra troops and their families. I came away absolutely convinced that we must give them military and humanitarian aid now. That is one reason the House should accept our bipartisan amendment and reject the McCurdy approach.

I visited their hospital areas and talked at length with their doctors, their military commandos, their troops, their wounded, and the families of the thousands who have followed their husbands into exile.

These young patriots and their families have fled from their homes in Nicaragua, and elected to live in plastic covered leantos, huts, and tents in some of the most rugged jungles and mountains that I have ever seen.

The fact that these young men and women were here impressed me, but the fact that many of their wives and children, their mothers and fathers were with them—living in these primitive conditions—impressed me even more.

I am convinced that Americans in the majority do not understand the very serious and dangerous situation which is going on in Central America.

But I believe that even the most naive individual would be convinced that something is wrong when 250,000 Nicaraguans turn up in refugee camps in Costa Rica, 150,000 in Honduras, and more than 20,000 are willing to fight to their deaths to send a message to Daniel Ortega that they want a political change in their homeland.

Why are the Contras willing to pay such a price? Because the Sandinistas have a cruel and cold-blooded plan for establishing their power base in Nicaragua.

As the Sandinistas have consolidated their power, the middle class of citizens simply dissolved and political figures fled into exile. They are ignoring the middle aged and the elderly, and pouring much of their resources into brainwashing the young. Health care has all but vanished. Somoza had only 1 prison—the Sandinistas have 11. All this for a country which has a population no bigger than Atlanta, GA, or the Speaker's hometown, Boston, MA.

There is not much time—the Sandinistas have been in power for 7 years—the Marxist influence is in the schools, including the parochial schools. The block captains are in place, the secret and security police are brutally doing their enforcement job—more than 36 members of the political parties who worked for free elections in 1985 have disappeared or are in prison.

Children who were 7 or 8 years old when the Sandinistas took power are now 15 and and probably already under the influence of the Marxist philosophy.

The resistance movement is running out of food in the jungle while we debate and talk about second votes.

The Sandinistas are cruelly crushing all dissent in their country while they brainwash these children and young people.

Mr. Chairman, today is the day when we will decide whether we are willing to pay the price to keep this hemisphere free. The young men and women I met in the jungle are willing. Today, we must stand with them.

The hour of decision is now—not October 15, not next February 1 or some time in the future—we must stand up and be counted.

I urge your support for our amendment.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR].

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, we have before us, in the Edwards-Skelton amendment, essentially the same proposal for $100 million in aid—most of it direct military aid—to the Contras, that we dealt with, and defeated, last March.

Today, we have more reasons than ever to vote against it. The American people recognize this. Today's ABC News poll shows that Americans oppose giving additional military or other assistance to the Contras by an overwhelming 2-to-1 margin.

The Contra program has been rotten from the start—out of control, ineffective, a waste of tax dollars and a shame on our Nation's proud heritage.

Just last week, as he laid down his arms, refusing to fight with the Contras, Eden Pastora warned us, "the Contras have no chance of military or political victory * * * their military and political tactics are Somocista * * * their commanders are Somocistas."

Now, more than ever before, this House should stand firm and oppose all aid to the Contras in face of growing evidence of Contra corruption—drug smuggling, gun running, and the diversion of funds.

The GAO has found that millions of dollars intended for so-called humanitarian aid to the Contras has ended up unaccounted for in banks in Miami, the Bahamas, and the Cayman Islands. Some has ended up in the personal bank account of the commander-in-chief of the Honduran Armed Forces. Millions more has been diverted to individuals and companies in the United States who have had nothing to do with supplying the Contras.

The problem of Contra corruption cannot be dismissed as a side issue, or as Sandinista propaganda. We have seen the checks, we have subpoenaed the bank accounts. There is no doubt—corruption is the lifeblood of the Contra program.

Is it any wonder that the Contras have not sparked a popular, democratic movement in Nicaragua? That they have not been an effective tool to pressure the Sandinistas?

You cannot fight for freedom with funds that are sitting in a Miami bank account. You cannot promote democracy, when you spend your time smuggling drugs and running guns!

The American people have a right to know how their tax dollars are being spent. I say to my colleagues who have supported the Contra aid program, you may think the American people will overlook the violations of international and domestic law in the Contra program. But you are wrong, the American people are outraged.

You may think that they will overlook the Contras' terrorist tactics, but you are wrong. The American people are outraged.

Now, when the American people find out how their tax dollars have been squandered, how they have subsidized Contra corruption, they will demand an end to Contra aid.

The story on Contra corruption is just beginning to unfold—and it's a horror story. When it's over, the American people will want to know—did you vote with the overwhelming majority of the American people, or did you vote to send $100 million more to drug dealers, gun-runners, and embezzlers!

That is the issue before us today. I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the Edwards-Skelton amendment.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE].

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, this is not an easy vote for me, because I voted against aid to the Contras just 90 days ago, but I do not regard this as just another vote to aid the Contras.

This amendment provides aid to our allies, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras as well. These countries want and need our aid. In the 90 days since the last vote, the Sandinistas have declined every opportunity for a peaceful outcome of the problems of Central America. They have driven 10,000 Miskito Indians from their country.

Right after the last vote the Sandinistas invaded Honduras and Ortego walked out of the Contadora process.

I voted no because I could not get good answers on what had happened to the money we had already sent. There were reports of generals lining their pockets, bank accounts in the Cayman Islands and drug peddling. I am now persuaded that a lot of that talk was unfounded.

The amendment before us has very strict accountability provisions, more comprehensive than anything before established. I believe the amendment supports the peace negotiating process, supports the four democracies in Central America, supports the democratic resistance movements in Nicaragua and now we know for sure where the money will go.

I think the whole process of negotiating since the last vote on March 20 on what the President wants and what he is willing to accept has been helpful in understanding our problem in Central America and now I will support the Edwards-Skelton amendment.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, we have not been exactly sitting idly by. The United States has been spending some money in this part of the world. I would like to point out to the Members that the cost of the United States presence in Honduras. Since 1983, we have conducted a series of joint military exercises in Honduras. These exercises, according to the Department's long-term construction plan for the Central American region are planned to continue through at least 1991 and according to a recent GAO study. The cost of the United States military presence in Honduras has been at least $195 million through fiscal year 1985. If we continue this presence, we will spend between now and 1991 some $342 million in this area. So we have not been sitting idly by.

Our people would be incensed if they knew there was a threat that humanitarian aid was being diverted to anybody's bank account. If these accusations are true, I think everybody would want to get to the bottom of it, and find out how this aid has been spent and it is going to be spent.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEVINE].

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Chairman, here we are to debate yet again the issue of whether to fund the Nicaraguan Contras. We have been here before. We will be here again. I have opposed aid to the Contras in the past, and I oppose it now.

Mr. Chairman, this for some time has been a vital foreign policy issue to the Congress and to the country. The foreign policy issues have not changed over the course of the recent past with regard to this debate.

This has been an effort, a pursuit, a dogged pursuit by this administration to provide additional resources in support of a failed policy and in support of a fighting force which is ragtag at best, filled with incompetence, clearly incompetent and not able to do the job; but beyond the foreign policy issues and the military issues and the facts on the ground that have not changed in the recent past, what has changed?

The foreign policy issues have not. Even the Contras own field commanders have recently accused the FDN leadership of quackery in their conduct of the war against the Sandinistas.

The President said yesterday that there were 20 times as many Contras as there were Sandinistas, when the Sandinistas took power, and yet the Contras cannot point to a single major victory even today.

But what has changed has been the issue of accountability, the issue of fiscal responsibility, the issue of what has occurred with the $27 million that has already been spent.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that if my distinguished colleagues on the other side of the aisle found that a poverty law office funded with public funds, a community redevelopment project or a program for the handicapped could not account for every single penny of its expenditures, these essential domestic programs would be cut to the bone.

We would be voting to cut off funds for programs for the handicapped, for programs for education, for programs for people who need them. But here, in a situation where we have demonstrated through an independent agency that over half of the dollars that have already been sent cannot be accounted for, here we wish to send an additional $100 million to support a failed policy.

Mr. Chairman, we are all aware of the arguments on both sides of this issue, so I will not reiterate them at this time. There is one area I do want to address, however, and that is the nature of the Contras themselves.

At the time the House last considered this issue, the FBI, the U.S. Customs Service, and the Miami attorney general were all investigating the Contras for illegal gunrunning and importing cocaine and other illegal drugs into this country to finance their military operations.

Now an investigation by the respected General Accounting Office has revealed the diversion and misuse of the $27 million in so-called humanitarian assistance for the Contras approved last year.

According to investigations by GAO and the press, the State Department is unable to verify how more than half of the $27 million has been used. Much of the money appears never to have reached the Contras, having been placed in bank accounts in Miami, the Bahamas, and the Cayman Island. The GAO concluded the funds were being sent from account to account, and that almost none of the funds went to legitimate suppliers in Central America.

In effect, millions of U.S. dollars appear to have been illegally diverted to uses other than Contra aid. Since February, GAO has reported three times to Congress that the administration has failed to set up the verification mechanisms required in law to monitor Contra aid.

According to GAO, at least $1.5 million has been been transferred from various accounts directly to officers of the Honduran Army, including a $450,000 check for the commander of the armed forces. Press reports state that Honduran military officers are using commercial outlets to siphon off funds meant for the Contras.

And what has been the administration's reaction to these findings? It has denounced GAO's report as "concocted" by congressional opponents of Contra aid and has denounced congressional inquiries as motivated by purely partisan politics. The administration has refused to permit GAO investigators to go to Central America to follow the money trail, has attempted to frustrate an investigation by the Western Hemisphere Subcommittee by denying information and by attempting to classify the information, has told GAO that there was no point in looking at bank documents from Miami banks with Contra accounts, and has blocked State Department officials from testifying about the GAO's report on bank documents subpoenaed by the Western Hemisphere Subcommittee.

Mr. Speaker, it is reprehensible that the administration would obstruct congressional attempts to carry out its responsibilities. If there is no misuse of funds, then what are they afraid of? The administration and the Contras must be held accountable for the dispensation of funds meant for the Contras. The administration has been arrogant and obstructionist toward congressional efforts to obtain the facts, and it is inconceivable that Congress provide even one more nickel without having a full account of where the money went.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, we have all heard about the ineptitude of the Contras—this rag-tag group that the administration claims to be some 20,000, but is probably far smaller in number.

The Contras have won no major victories. They control no territory. Gen. Paul F. Gorman, former commander in chief of the U.S. Southern Command, has testified that no matter how much aid we give the Contras, they cannot possible dislodge the Sandinista regime. Other military experts agree with this assessment.

So to whom are we giving this money? The President has claimed that our borders are being threatened. He has claimed that not giving aid to the Contras will result in a Red tide lapping at our shores. But what logic is it that would lead us to conclude that this rag-tag group would even remotely be able to stem this tide that the President and his administration so vividly imagine?

For all these reasons, I strongly oppose aid to the Contras. It is a gross and irresponsible misappropriation of taxpayers' money. It would far better serve our own national interests and the interests of our allies in this hemisphere if we used our scarce resources to help democracy to continue to blossom and flourish in the region.

Mr. Speaker, funding the Contras is so patently a bad idea. No good can come from it. It will accomplish nothing.

I urge my colleagues to vote against aid to the Contras.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, recognizing that there is no new money in this appropriation, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUSTAMANTE].

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Edwards-Skelton amendment. As one Member who has been deeply concerned about our policies in this hemisphere, I have tried to study Central America and Nicaragua closely. I have voted against military aid to the Contras in the past because I did not feel we had any coherent policy with respect to the Central America republics. This amendment brings us closer to coming to terms with the region and its problems. For the first time, we are addressing the root cause of instability—poverty and a lack of economic opportunity. The aid to the Central American democracies is essential to the development of a policy. Without aid to these democratic governments, the Sandanistas will continue to cause uncertainty and instability in the region.

I have the highest respect for the author of the title to which this amendment is attached, my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY]. We traveled together to the five Central American countries 3 weeks ago. During that trip, we met with the Presidents of each country. After a series of conversations, I came away with the strong feeling that we need to continue to pressure the Sandinistas. I continue to hope for a negotiated settlement. So do Presidents Arias, Azcona, Cerezo, and Duarte. But I also believe that the Sandinistas intend to delay and to stall for time, playing on public opinion in this hemisphere and in Europe.

The question is not whether the Sandinistas will yield so long as we pressure them. The question is whether they will stop threatening to subvert the region. I am convinced that without military pressure, and it cannot be military pressure alone—it must be accompanied by diplomatic pressure from the democratic governments around Nicaragua. And that is why its important to help the four democratic governments in the region.

I have spoken recently to Mr. Ortega—what he says is simply at odds with the reality in Nicaragua. The miles and miles of slums and the long bread lines are not a consequence of the U.S. embargo. They are the consequence of government policies which place revolutionary ideology and militarism above hunger, health, and education.

This amendment is not a final solution. But it accomplishes two things. It provides support to the four democratic countries in the region. without whose support no policy can be successful. Second, it underlines the simple fact that there will be no place in Central America until internal reform is forced upon the Sandinistas. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN].

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, let me first say that I spent part of last evening reading some of the evidence, including the GAO report, on what is happening to the money that was sent to Central America.

I know there are folks who want to dispute whether or not the GAO report is accurate or correct, but let me say that the GAO has testified before the Barnes subcommittee and indicated that the State Department itself blocked part of the audit trail that they were looking for to trace what has happened to these funds.

Let me also suggest, for purposes of this discussion, that those who take the microphone when they get their time, answer this:

Here is a report from an office down at the State Department that spent the money, and they said that they spent $16,764 at the Farmacia Upala, a small drugstore in Costa Rica. This is a drugstore, incidentally, that does not sell food. Of that $16,764, $15,907 went for food. This is a one-room drugstore. So the person who owns the drugstore was interviewed. Let me describe what she said. The owner of the one-room drugstore said:

Well, if I had written receipts for millions of colons—

Which is the Costa Rican currency—

I would not be here. Several Contras stopped in over a period of several months and bought some Rolaids and some cold medicine, but they paid cash and they bought very small amounts.

Mr. HYDE. Does the gentleman want an answer?

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I would be happy to have the gentleman get some time and answer. I hope he does answer it.

I ask you: What happened to this money? What happened to the money when they spent $15,000 for clothing in a store that does not sell clothing. That does not make any sense to me, and there are dozens of examples like it.

My point is, and the point of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES] and others, is that a great deal of the taxpayers' money is being wasted. The GAO has documented that waste, and you folks who act like Sherlock Holmes in tracking down an extra $3 of alleged waste for some senior citizen in this country, and now when confronted with waste of money sent to the Contra soldiers you act like Mr. Magoo. You see nothing, you hear nothing, you seem to have no interest in tracking down that wasted money.

I think you ought to be concerned about what you are going to do with $300 million you now want to throw at a problem in Central America. You are all too eager to waste the taxpayers money.

Now let me add some more general conclusions about this serious policy question.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose military aid to the counterrevolutionary guerrilla fighters—Contras—seeking to overthrow the Sandinista government of Nicaragua. I do not reach this conclusion lightly or without regard to some very troubling developments in Central America.

CRAFTING THE RIGHT POLICY

The President is absolutely right about one thing. We can't allow Sandinista-run Nicaragua to become the military sanctuary for Soviet fighters, bombers, missiles, or warships. Such a development would pose a grave threat to American security and we would have to prevent such a threat with all the military might at our disposal.

Let me be the first to say I would support a Presidential action to eliminate or remove such hostile forces from Nicaragua.

But we do not now face such a threat. We do face a hostile neighbor which has a dismal record on human rights, freedom of press, religion, and minorities; which may be foolish enough to cozy up to the Soviets and thereby cut itself off from its democratic neighbors.

Accordingly, I endorse economic sanctions against Nicaragua—as I do against South Africa and other human rights violators—to pressure the Sandinistas to bargain in good faith for a regional peace settlement. I support vigorous diplomatic pressure on the Sandinistas, especially in concert with the Contadora nations as part of a concerted effort to bring peace in the region.

Let me also say that the United States can play a major role in whether or not such sanctions and pressure bring results. To the extent that we do things like mine the harbors of Nicaragua, shun the authority of the International Court of Justice, and bargain with a closed mind, we disserve our cause. By contrast, a forceful, multilateral, and constructive approach can produce tangible gains in our foreign policy. I would urge the administration to pursue that high road to determine whether regional peace can be achieved without further bloodshed and civil war.

So there is no disagreement about the goal of policy toward Nicaragua. It is to prevent Soviet and Cuban military expansion, to advance the cause of freedom and human rights in Nicaragua, and to promote a peace in the region.

THE CONTRA-DICTION

Because the Sandinistas seem to edge toward a Soviet influence in our hemisphere, I can even see a potential role for military pressure against them. Such pressure would be like the Afghan resistance fighters who seem to be true champions of freedom and true soldiers of the people.

Unfortunately, such cannot be said of the Contra forces. On too many occasions they have misused American military aid as the means for terrorizing their own people. America's Watch and Amnesty International have carefully documented that the Contra human rights record is as bad or worse as the Sandinistas—a record littered with proven cases of rape, murder, and torture.

For the United States to arm those Contras in the name of freedom is certainly the ultimate foreign policy contradiction.

Nor do the Contras command popular support. They have yet to win and hold a single town for any length of time. Most Contra forces still operate outside the borders of Nicaragua, using the sanctuaries of camps in Honduras and Costa Rica for hit-and-run raids into Nicaragua. Not surprisingly, many Nicaraguans reject loyalty to the Contras, since their high command is rife with the hated followers of ex-dictator Somoza.

Equally disturbing is that the United States has provided some $150 million in Contra aid in the past 5 years with such meager results. For some time, the Reagan administration has argued that it needs $1 per day to field a Contra soldier. Assuming the generous administration estimate of 20,000 Contras, we should be able to support this fighting force for about $7 million a year. This is only one-fourth of the overt aid provided by the American taxpayer last year—let alone the private and secret aid which our Government has sanctioned or permitted.

So if the Contras truly are freedom fighters and if we have provided more than enough aid, where's the beef? It would seem that we are throwing good money after bad. And here is where the President is dead wrong.

WHERE DID THE CONTRA AID GO?

As a matter of fact, the administration now seeks a 400-percent increase in Contra aid at a time of tight budgets, ineffective Contra action, and alarming questions about what happened to the $27 million appropriated for the Contras last year.

I understand that funding a guerrilla war is not like approving the local school board budget. Providing cover for people threatened by violent opponents is understood.

Nevertheless, the General Accounting Office has painted a picture of lax accountability, disappearing money, profit skimming, and questionable diversions when it comes to this year's $27 million in Contra aid. In fact, the GAO could account for less than half of this supposedly critical aid.

For example, GAO found that $1.5 million was paid to officers of the Honduran Armed Forces, including a single payment to the commanding general. Of another $4.4 million deposited into four brokers' accounts in Miami, only $0.8 million was spent in Central America, and of that sum, only $185,000 went to identified suppliers of aid to the Contras. The remainder drifted into American and Caribbean bank accounts. Such evidence suggested to GAO that accounts had been set up only to receive Contra aid payments, not to reimburse legitimate suppliers.

Among the most ridiculous stories on this trail of untabbed money is a small, neighborhood grocery store in the Honduran capital of Tegulcigalpa. The Super Medcado Herman Pedro has been paid some $3.8 million since last fall by the State Department for nonlethal supplies. Press reports indicate that this store was set up as a front for Contra aid by the Honduran military in order to skim off huge profits. These reports note that the store adds a 20 percent carrying charge to its Contra bills. One Miami Herald report charges that a $400,000 payment for uniforms never materialized as delivered goods for the Contras.

Similarly, press reports indicate that brokers and suppliers in the Contra aid chain make profits of up to 50 percent by trading dollars on the local currency black markets. It would seem that some of the Contras purported best friends are its worst enemies.

As a result of such scams, the GAO concluded that:

The State Department does not have sufficient procedures and controls to ensure that program funds are being used for purposes intended by law.

It went on to say, in recent testimomy, that funds in the Contra accounts were:

Following from bank account to bank account, in the United States and offshore, and to individuals and companies which do not appear to be suppliers in the region.

A New York Times article by William Buzenberg properly asks why President Reagan is not concerned about finding out the answer and I will include his searching analysis at the end of my remarks.

In response, the State Department has stonewalled the issue and refused to answer questions about this flaming paper trail. So the unanswered $64,000 question remains, "what happened to the $27 million in Contra aid?"

On top of this, the administration wants to funnel another $300 million in economic aid to four neighbors of Nicaragua in Central America. More than likely, Costa Rica, Honduras, Guatemala, and El Salvador need aid—if it is the right kind. But the administration backed amendment doesn't specify what kind of economic aid it is or which country gets how much? Is this simply the cover for more security aid, or the means of tackling the poverty, hunger, and ill-health which riddle the region? We have no answers to these questions, because the proposals sprang from a last-ditch lobbying effort, not the careful oversight of congressional hearings?

INSURING WISE INVESTMENTS

Since 1980, the United States has sent $5 billion in aid to Central America, including $1 billion in military aid. But money alone obviously is not solving all of Central America's problems. Without greater stability in the region, it will remain an economic basket case. Before we pump millions more into the region, it seems to me that we need to make sure that these are wise investments in food, education, health, and enterprise.

Finally, we need a frame for the aid canvas. What is the policy which governs aid? Unless we use military aid as a last resort instead of as a first resort, we will repeat the "gringo" mistake which has made all of Latin America suspicious and skeptical of U.S. motives. As sorry a crew as the Sandinistas are, we should exhaust every possibility for a regional peace settlement through the Contadora peace process, which enjoys the total support of all nations in the area. Only if that fails should be turn to arming genuine defenders of freedom, not fighters of freedom on whom the administration would mistakenly lavish the treasure of the American taxpayer.

[From the New York Times, June 19, 1986]

WHO GOT $27 MILLION INTENDED FOR CONTRAS?

(By William Buzenberg)

WASHINGTON.—Before Congress votes for more assistance to anti-Sandinista rebel forces, the Reagan Administration needs to provide answers to a number of serious questions being raised about what happened to the $27 million in tax dollars appropriated by Congress for that purpose last year.

At the request of a House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee, the nonpartisan General Accounting Office subpoenaed Miami bank records to follow the paper trail of that $27 million. The money, in the form of Treasury checks, was deposited into accounts of the rebels' suppliers and brokers in Miami. The G.A.O. contends that most of that money never went to Central America.

Under the State Department-administered payment plan, the money was intended to cover receipts and invoices for the rebels' food, medicine, clothing or other nonlethal assistance. Instead, the General Accounting Office found that only a fraction of the money went to the region to cover those receipts, and that most of it went to private rebel bank accounts in the Cayman Islands or the Bahamas, to private individuals or corporations in the United States and to the Honduran armed forces.

By law, the funds were supposed to be used for so-called humanitarian purposes. But because much of the money appears to have been siphoned off to other accounts not related to the receipts approved by the State Department, the G.A.O. believes it could have been used illegally for weapons or to line the pockets of rebel leaders.

The General Accounting Office and some members of Congress would like to know, for example, why the commander in chief of the Honduran military received a check for cash from one account for $450,000, and why a total of $1.5 million went to the Honduran armed forces. Was that for weapons, or for some other special arrangement between the rebels and Honduras?

The Administration's response to these disclosures has been troubling. First, it opposed the G.A.O.'s effort to subpoena Miami bank accounts, then tried to keep the information confidential. Now that the information is public, the Administration has yet to respond, insisting instead that it does not really matter where the money went after Miami as long as the goods were getting to the rebels. But some rebels groups have complained they aren't getting all of their supplies, and they themselves have blamed corrupt leaders.

Perhaps the best way to find out what has happened to the money is to follow this paper trail of the Miami accounts and compare that with the delivery of actual goods in Central America. That's what the G.A.O. wanted to do, but the State Department blocked it from pursuing leads in the region.

Various news organizations that have tried to follow this trail have made inquiries at small, storefront pharmacies and groceries that supposedly had done thousands of dollars worth of business with the rebels. Yet the store owners say they've never made out receipts for that much merchandise for the simple reason that their stores have never contained that much. Some former rebels even admit they collected blank receipts and falsely billed the State Department for payment.

This seems to be a common system used to enrich rebel leaders, but apparently it doesn't bother the Administration. When officials have been asked about these potential illegalities, they say Congress is to blame because it stipulated that the money could not go through the Central Intelligence Agency. The Administration seems to be saying that if only the funds were hidden, no one would know if money was missing or went to buy guns or bribe the Honduran armed forces—as if everything would be all right if no one knew what was happening.

It is a serious matter when the Administration ignores apparent violations of law in order to continue to carry out a policy of assistance to anti-Sandinista rebels. It is equally foolish to contend, as the Administration does, that those who want to know where the money has gone are merely playing politics. If the Administration now wants a fresh infusion of funds, it has an obligation to join Congress in trying to find the answers. In Watergate, the biggest crime was the cover-up of a smaller crime; in "contragate," the word "cover-up" is just now beginning to surface.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROEMER.]

Mr. ROEMER. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, there is a lot right with the McCurdy provisions, and the credit for that should accrue to that gentleman and his team. I like the regional approach. I like the emphasis on economic assistance for Central American democracies.

What I do not like about the McCurdy provisions is the fact that while McCurdy claims a solid regional policy of both external economic aid to the region and internal pressure on the Sandinistas, the internal military pressure is only a promise, not a commitment. In fact, there is no military assistance in McCurdy until we have a second vote in October. McCurdy talks up, but it does not put up.

If McCurdy passes, my colleagues know what will happen. The Sandinista propaganda pundits will begin a so-called peace initiative in September and the regional politicians will publicly proclaim a need for 90 more days. Meanwhile, the freedom fighters will continue to fight a war without bullets. Not only will they lose, but freedom in Nicaragua will be dead and the regional democracies will be threatened.

We cannot let that happen. As Senator BILL BRADLEY says, "We must give democracy in the area a chance to grow." McCurdy has helped a great deal by requiring the administration to focus on a regional policy. The administration has responded, and DAVE MCCURDY gets a lot of the credit for that from me.

The fact remains, however, that McCurdy delays military assistance, requiring yet another 90 days and a second vote before any bullets are provided, a second vote, by the way, just 5 weeks before your next election, and that is the difference here.

Both McCurdy and Skelton espouse the exact same philosophy, a regional policy with internal and external pressure on the brutal Sandinista dictators, but McCurdy then proceeds to delay military aid for at least 90 days and another vote. What kind of commitment is that? Where is the strong message for freedom in that? McCurdy makes the case for military aid; then refuses to deliver. McCurdy makes the case for a regional policy of bullets and butter, and then eliminates the bullets.

The bipartisan approach, Skelton-Edwards, holds the McCurdy good points, and there are many, but goes him one better, a commitment now, a commitment to freedom in Central America now. Remember, this region is absolutely vital to long-term American interests. As the world grows smaller and in some real sense more dangerous, we must extend a cooperative, helping hand to our neighbors to the South. To allow another Cuba a foothold in Central America shows an incredibly dangerous lack of resolve on America's part.

The Sandinista dictatorship in Nicaragua is just that kind of dangerous government. Surrounded by democracies, it preaches revolution in the region. It practices repression within its own borders. It allows its country slowly but surely to become a staging area for Soviet military and diplomatic mischief.

We cannot play the ostrich. America in this region must be the eagle, freedom's eagle.

Are the Contras perfect, many ask? Of course not. But Skelton-Edwards holds them accountable on the issues of human rights, funding, drugs, and organizational disunity. No, they are not perfect, but neither are we.

The only time I hear the word freedom associated with Nicaragua is with the Contras, the freedom fighters.

Skelton-Edwards does not commit American troops in this fight. In fact, it prohibits their use because there are Nicaraguans anxious to fight for freedom in Nicaragua. They just need our help, not our blood. Make the commitment now. It would prevent a much more difficult and dangerous commitment somewhere down the not-too-distant dusty road.

In our Nation, a great nation, a free nation, we have learned the painful lesson that freedom does not come free.

We fight for freedom at the ballot box, in the halls of the legislatures, and, occasionally, on the battlefield.

There is a fight for freedom going on in Central America. We are being asked to play a special, difficult, risky role. It is not a role that we want, but it is one that we ignore at our own peril.

Vote for Skelton-Edwards. It is a good plan. It can work, beginning now.

Vote for Skelton-Edwards.

Is it a tough vote? The toughest.

Is it a big vote? The biggest.

Is it the right vote? I believe it with all my heart.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, how much time do we have remaining on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER] has 15 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] has 9½ minutes remaining.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the aid to the Contras and in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON].

Mr. Chairman, this is the third time in the session this House has taken up the issue of Contra aid. Twice previously, the House has rejected the administration's request for aid in favor of a more sound policy toward the region. In the past, we have argued the merits of military aid versus negotiations. We have argued the need for long-term benefits in lieu of the short-term satisfaction which may be brought to some by military assistance to the Contras. We have discussed those issues, and I do not believe any Member had changed on this issue.

But Mr. Chairman, other factors have come to light which have further muddied our policy goals toward the region. First, the General Accounting Office report to the Congress on the mismanagement of funds provided last year. Last year, the Congress agreed to the President's request for $27 million in nonlethal aid. Now we are told that the money cannot be accounted for by the Department of State. What we have been told is $1.5 million went to the Honduran high command, and many millions are stowed away in Caribbean banks.

My constituents are consistently wary of foreign aid. They understand the needs for such aid, but when they see abuse, they cry foul. When they read about Imelda Marcos and her thousands of pairs of shoes, they see red, not the red the President sees in Central America. When they see the tinhorn dictator of Haiti drain the central bank and flee to a swank French resort to a life of luxurious exile, they get mad.

Mr. Chairman, whether you call it military assistance, human assistance, or aid to freedom fighters, you can't hide the fact that it's foreign aid. In Pecos, TX, it's foreign aid, in El Paso, it's foreign aid, and in Sierra Blanca, it's foreign aid. And my constituents along the great lands of west Texas ask me why? Why do we continue to say "no" to the farmers, "no" to the school children, and "no" to the war on drugs—the real threat to our society, and at the same time we are able to find $100 million to throw down a hole. We have spent $927 million up to this date. And, when I go back and tell them that our State Department cannot tell us whether those funds were ever spent for assistance to the Contras, Mr. Chairman, they see red, not in Central America, but in Washington, DC.

Mr. Chairman, another issue which has come to light is the involvement of the Contra forces in narcotics smuggling. Every Member is aware of this activity and it has been acknowledged by many members of the administration. I find it an outrage that we would even consider a request for more funds for a group infiltrated with dope smugglers, while at the same time, the administration would ask us to consider cutting the customs service by 1,547 positions. The parents in El Paso, Van Horn, Valentine, TX, see no merit in our foreign aid, their tax dollars, going to finance the drug smuggling activities of anyone. They would rather see their money spent stopping those drugs.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, as many Members are aware, yesterday I introduced a resolution of inquiry to determine whether or not the White House and the National Security Council may have deliberately violated Federal law with secret assistance to the Contras during last year's ban on directly or indirectly aiding the Contras. Recent news reports have surfaced information that NSC staffer Lt. Col. Oliver North provided military direction to the Contras. To date, the administration has rejected inquiries into these allegations, yet Contra leaders and supporters have substantiated the charges. This charge, perhaps the worst of all, brings with it the premise that the administration deliberately violated the letter of the law.

Mr. Chairman, before you vote today on this issue consider these three new factors which have muddied the waters of our policy in Central America. Consider that we have no accounting of the last funds provided the Contras. Consider that elements within the Contras are involved in drug running. And, consider the possibility that the administration violated the law. These too, are important issues which effect our policy goals. These are issues which must be reviewed before another dollar of the taxpayer's money is spent in Nicaragua.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4½ minutes.

Mr. Chairman, what IKE SKELTON and I have placed before you, along with ROD CHANDLER and RICHARD RAY, is a bipartisan compromise designed to help preserve democracy in Central America, and, by so doing, to help preserve the security of the United States.

It is a compromise. It is the result of weeks of meetings in which Republicans and Democrats sat together for hours and hammered out differences in order to bring to this floor a proposal which not only will help further the twin goals of peace and democracy, but which we think the majority of this House will support. It is a package which we believe will help bring the Sandinistas to the bargaining table with the democracies of Central America.

And it is bipartisan. In the debate that you've just heard, you heard our case presented by as many Democrats as Republicans.

You've heard two themes emphasized, because they are the central focus of our case. Both the language in the bill and the Edwards-Skelton amendment provide improved accountability—our amendment, in fact, more so than the McCurdy language. Both provide for pressure to improve human rights. Both provide economic assistance to the Central American democracies. Both provide nonmilitary assistance to the freedom fighters in Nicaragua. Both provide for Presidential findings of a lack of progress in reconciliation and negotiations before heavy weapons can be provided to the Contras.

But there are two very important differences.

First, only our amendment provides any military assistance to the Contras. The McCurdy language does not provide one dime of military assistance, not one nickle of military assistance, not one penny of military assistance. It says: We'll think about it—maybe we'll decide to do something about it in the future.

And because only our amendment sets out a clear policy—a clear commitment to help the Contras militarily—only our amendment sends the message to the Contras, to the Sandinistas, and to the neighboring democracies in Central America, that it is the policy of the U.S. Government that we will give the Contras the help they need to bring the Sandinistas to the bargaining table.

Without this amendment, if we leave only the McCurdy language, we also send a clear message—a message that we have not really decided whether we'll give the Contras the help they need. The McCurdy language reaffirms to the world that we just don't know where we stand. And that, too, is a message that will be heard by the Contras, by the Sandinistas—and by the democracies in Central America.

Mr. Chairman, 10 years ago, Central America was a sea of oppression. From north to south, the people of Central America lived under dictatorships. A few people owned the land. A few people had the power. A few people had opportunity.

We are about to restore the flame of the Statue of Liberty. What the lady has said for so many years, and what she should still say today, is that we believe in freedom and democracy and opportunity for everybody. Not just if you're white. Not just if you live in North America. Not just if you speak English. But everybody.

And what we are being asked to say today in Central America is that everyone has a right to seek democracy and freedom. Hispanics, Indians, non-Yankees have a right to seek freedom and opportunity in their own countries. And they have a right to be protected against subversion from powerful forces in neighboring countries.

This is not a subtle question. We are not dealing with subtle allegations of hidden Communist sympathies among some lower level Sandinistas. We are talking about people who proclaim their communism, who are armed by the Russians and the Cubans, who travel to Moscow for Communist Party congresses and who try to overthrow the democracies which replaced those old dictatorships in the rest of Central America.

What we are being asked to do is to provide modest amounts of help so we can pressure that threatening government to sit down in good faith with Nicaragua's neighbors and agree to leave them alone to enjoy their freedoms and their new opportunities.

The French helped us. We helped the British in World War II. These people are not Europeans. But they, too, long for freedom, and it is in our power to help them achieve it. The McCurdy amendment does nothing—it gives neither the solace of a decision nor bullets for their guns—only the bipartisan Edwards-Skelton-Chandler-Ray-Huckaby-Stenholm-Lloyd-Robinson-Darden-Tallon-Bustamante-Roemer amendment can help. I urge you to support it.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ].

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the McCurdy amendment.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, once again, the House is called upon to vote for the President's request for $100 million in military assistance to the Contra rebels who are attempting to overthrow the Government of Nicaragua.

There is no constituency for this policy.

The American people, by a margin of 2 to 1, oppose the President's plan.

Our major European allies oppose military aid to the Contras.

And nearly every nation in Latin Americ believes that additional American arms will destabilize the newly flourishing democratic governments of the region and rekindle the flames of anti-Americanism.

In fact, the only real constituency for this military aid, other than the Reagan administration and its supporters in this body, are the Contras. And now, thanks to the General Accountin Office, we have a pretty good idea why they are so enthusiastic about the administration plan.

The GAO looked at the $27 million in nonmilitary aid which was provided to the Contras last year for food, medical supplies, clothing, and nonlethal equipment. Lo and behold, GAO has found that little of that money ever went to Central America.

Instead a substantial amount of that money ended up in private bank accounts in the Cayman Islands and the Bahamas. Some of the money went to private individuals and corporations in the United States. Substantial sums were used to make "purchases" from small, local stores—at levels which exceeded the inventory of those stores many times over. And hundreds of thousands of dollars went to the Honduran Armed Forces.

As William Buzenberg recently noted in the New York Times, there is another shocking aspect to this misuse of taxpayer money—the indifference of the administration to these abuses.

In fact, the administration fought to keep GAO from subpoenaing Miami bank records that document the bizarre paper trail of this scandal.

These allegations come from those who know the Contras best—former Contra commanders who allege that the money does not find its way to the Contra troops. According to these former leaders of the FDN, Contra troops have been denied adequate supplies while their leaders live "a high life."

And these are not the only serious charges leveled by one-time Contra supporters.

Eden Pastora, known as Commander Zero, has denounced his former allies by linking them to the hated ex-dictator Somosa.

"Their commanders are Somocista," Pastora charged. Their military and political tactics are Somocista. They employ 'criminal strategies.'"

In support of the Contras, supporters of the President's request are using a form of "Newspeak" to deceive the American people. They refer to the Contras as "freedom fighters," when their tactics are those of terrorists—murder, assault, and kidnapping.

The President has gone so far as to compare the Contras to our own Founding Fathers. That tactic may work well as a rhetorical flourish, but it severely distorts American history.

In fact, the President's comparison was denounced by the Organization of American Historians last April.

I would like to include in the RECORD a copy of the OAH resolution, as well as a policy statement signed by Prof. Leon F. Litwack, president of the OAH and the Pulitzer Prize-winning historian, two past presidents, Arthur Link and Ann Scott, and other leading scholars.

The resolution follows:

RESOLUTION

Whereas President Reagan has called the Nicaraguan contras "The moral equivalent of the Founding Fathers": Resolved:

That the Organization of American Historians deplores the President's invocation of the historical prestige and legacy of the Constitution's framers in order to promote the Administration's foreign policy and to impugn the patriotism of those who oppose that policy.

STATEMENT SIGNED BY 14 PRESENT AND PAST OFFICERS OF OAH

As professional historians and past and present officers of the Organization of American Historians, we deplore President Reagan's distortion of history for political purposes in describing the Nicaraguan contras, whose systematic abuse of human rights has been documented by independent observers, as "the moral equivalent of the Founding Fathers," condemn the policy of aid to the contras as a continuation of a long history of U.S. intervention in the internal affairs of Central America and Caribbean nations, and urge Congress to reject all requests for financial or military aid to the contras.

Leon F. Litwack, Daid Phelan, Nell Painter, Lawrence Levine, Kathryn Kish Sklar, Eric Foner, Mary Beth Norton, Charles Rosenberg, Cullom Davis, George Frederickson, and Richard Blackett.

Mr. Chairman, every Member of this House knows what would happen to a bill which tried to quadruple support for a program which was as riddled with fraud as the Contra aid program. Anyone searching for the model program illustrating waste, fraud, and abuse—in addition to generous violations of human rights and international law—need look no further than the administration's Contra aid request.

This bill demonstrates the administration's decision to reward deceit with a 400-percent increase in funding.

How ironic that a President who spent much of his career lambasting waste in government now calls for taxpayers to spend $100-million for a group which is essentially looting the taxpayers?

Where is the administration's much-vaunted insistence on accountability? Or is accountability only required for domestic programs which serve our people, but not from Nicaraguan guerrillas who use our constituents' money to line their own pockets?

Corrupt policies are being financed corruptly. The Congress should put an end to it, today, by defeating the request for aid to the Contras.

Let us get on about building a policy of trust and cooperation with the nations of Central and South America. Sending tens of millions of dollars to corrupt and discredited Contra leaders ill serves our own Nation and our future relationship with our neighbors in this hemisphere.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. It seems to me that the issue before us this evening is not whether we are for or against the spread of communism in Central America. Even President Reagan now acknowledges that all of us, Democrats as well as Republicans, share the administration's concern over the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua.

The issue before us this evening is how best to deal with the Communist threat in Central America, and whether we have a better chance of resolving it on the battlefield or at the negotiating table.

To answer that question, it seems to me that it is important to be clear about what are our objectives vis-a-vis the Sandinista regime. Here I think that most of us would agree that we have both security concerns on the one hand, and political concerns on the other.

From a security point of view, we want to prevent the establishment of Soviet military bases in Nicaragua. We want to secure the withdrawal of East bloc military advisers from that country. We want to bring to an end the interference of the Sandinistas in the internal affairs of their neighbors, and we want to facilitate the establishment of an acceptable balance of military power in Central America.

From a political point of view, on the other hand, our primary objective is to bring about the emergence of genuine political pluralism in Nicaragua, with all that means in terms of freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of assembly, and freedom of religion.

How can we achieve these two very different but also very important objectives? The administration says that force and diplomacy go hand in hand, and that only by providing assistance to the Contras can we put enough pressure on the Sandinistas in order to reach an agreement at the negotiating table that will satisfy our security and political objectives.

I say to my colleagues in the House, pressure for what? If the purpose of the pressure is to get an agreement on the security issues the fact is that the Sandinistas have already indicated a willingness to preclude the presence of foreign military advisers, to forgo the establishment of Soviet military bases, to agree to an acceptable balance of power in the region, and to refrain from interfering in the internal affairs of their neighbors.

So if we want an agreement on these security issues, helping the Contras is not only not necessary, it is counterproductive.

Supposing the purpose of the pressure is to achieve our political objectives, to bring about real democracy in Nicaragua. Here I would say that it is naive to think that the Sandinistas would agree at the negotiating table to the establishment of a genuine democracy in their country.

The Sandinistas are not democrats; they are revolutionaries, and if we want to bring about the establishment of genuine democracy in Nicaragua, the only way to do it is to overthrow the Sandinistas; but virtually everybody agrees that with or without American assistance, there is no way the Contras can achieve that objective.

The only way to overthrow the Sandinistas is to send the Marines down there in order to do it; and not even President Reagan is in favor of that. He understands that if we were to send American troops to Nicaragua it would fan the flames of anti-Americanism throughout the hemisphere; it would be enormously divisive here at home; it would produce severe strains in our alliance, and it would bog us down in a prolonged military conflict in Central America.

So I submit that our policy is counterproductive and ought to be rejected.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present and ask unanimous consent that there be a call of the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection a call of the Committee is ordered.

Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The CHAIRMAN. Four hundred thirteen Members have answered to their names, a quorum is present, and the Committee will resume its business.

The Committee will rise informally in order that the House may receive a message.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE) assumed the chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will receive a message.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4420) "An act to amend title 10, United States Code, to revise the retirement system for new members of the uniformed services, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee will resume its sitting.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1987

The Committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the Chair how much time we have on this side and how much they have on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER] has 8 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to aid to the Contras.

Mr. Chairman, once again I rise to oppose the President's policy toward Nicaragua. I ask my colleagues to examine and to question this policy. How can we ask our constituents to give $100 million to fight a war in Central America? What do we say to the hungry and homeless in our Nation? Why do we seek to feed, clothe, shelter, and arm the Contras when we need it so badly here? What do we say about the Contra atrocities—the raping and murdering of innocent women and children? Do we merely tell our constituents that it is war, and that bad things will happen? Or do we explain to them that they are taught to commit such atrocities by our very own CIA?

How many millions of dollars have we already spent on the Contras? And where has it gone? To bank accounts in Miami and grocery stores in Honduras? Make no mistake my colleagues, if Ferdinand Marcos and "Baby Doc" Duvalier were here today, they would tell you to keep the money coming, that they are fighting communism, and that they need as much money as we are willing to send. When will we learn? The best way to fight communism is not by throwing money at every anti-Communist who requests funds, but by fighting poverty, hunger, ignorance, and injustice. Let us move forward to a policy that not only protects our Nation, but that our Nation can stand behind and be proud of.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 seconds to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MRAZEK].

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this debate for several hours now, and fully appreciate the sincerity of Members on both sides who believe that their position will lead to democracy and freedom in Nicaragua. I can only confess to you that what I am about to say is probably heretical to bring up on this floor tonight, because I believe in the separation of church and state.

Nevertheless, I would address this brief statement to my fellow Christians in this body, and I would simply ask you the question: What would Jesus Christ, our Savior, tell us in relation to supplying $70 million in lethal aid—in surface-to-air missiles, machine guns, and howitzers—in an effort to bring democracy and liberty to the people of Nicaragua?

I can only tell you that I think the kernel of hope is in the McCurdy alternative, because it provides hope—the developmental resources to people in this pain-wracked region that may enable their children someday live in a world free of violence and of hunger. It's my belief that they will have an opportunity to live that life, if we support an approach that relieves the poverty, ignorance, and misery. Thank you.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the Edwards amendment and I would like to point out five fallacies in my opponents' arguments.

No. 1, there is an urgency in their voices bordering on panic. They want the aid now. I suggest it is at least partly their own fault because all of them voted for the Hamilton amendment this spring. We would have had a lethal aid vote by now.

They say it is a top military priority. Where do they want the money from? From DOD? No. From African famine relief.

No. 3, they say they are for democracy. Do they trust the four Central American democracies? No. They do not even treat them like adults, and they do not want us to have a vote on lethal aid in October.

No. 4, they say they are for peace. Their only real enthusiasm is for lethal aid. They have enforced virtually every peaceful initiative.

No. 5, they say they want to control policy and not a slippery slope to Vietnam. Their vote of disapproval would turn over the issue to the vote of 34 Republican Senators.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT].

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Chairman, this bill offers a sensible compromise. For those opposed to military aid, or lethal aid, we withhold aid for 90 days, and make it subject to a second vote. For those who demand aid now, we provide aid now, $30 million, which surely is enough money for the next 90 days to sustain the Contras as a force; it's enough to clothe them, feed them, train them, give them intelligence and communication gear—all of which is permitted; but it's not the sort of aid that will change the character of the conflict—not at least in the next 90 days. For during that short period, we say in this bill to all the parties: negotiate in earnest.

On our trip this month, we talked to all Presidents of the five countries in Central America. All five told us that a treaty embodying the Contadora objectives could be achieved in 90 days, provided the parties genuinely want a treaty. So, that's what our provisions will test: the will and intent of the parties. Secretary Shultz has told us that we implore him to negotiate, but give him no chips to take to the table. Well, here are the chips: $30 million down, $70 million to come in 90 days, or on October 1.

In 90 days, if there is no prospect of a treaty, we will vote again. But before we do, we will have the benefit of counsel; we will have advice from our commission on the status of negotiations, the sticking points, the prospects for a treaty. And that's a critical difference between the bill as is and Edwards-Skelton-Ray.

Edwards-Skelton-Ray picks up our idea of a congressional commission, but for what purpose? If there is no second vote after the commission reports, we can receive the report, and consider their advice; but we can't act on it, if we forgo the second vote, we give up our control.

Some will say this bill is cumbersome. And I admit: indeed, it is. It's a short leash, and it's meant to be. Why? Because those of us who support this bill are not confident at all that the Contras are the answer. We have been told the Contras will clean up their act; we want to see it happen. But above all, if a negotiated solution is our objective, as the President said yesterday, before we step up conflict, let's try one last time to find a negotiated solution by negotiating.

This is a well-crafted policy; it is a well-crafted compromise; it accommodates concerns on all sides of this issue. I urge that we adopt it as is.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE].

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Edwards/Skelton amendment that will provide military and economic assistance to the democratic resistance in Nicaragua. The time for debate is long since over; the need for immediate action is absolutely essential to reverse the further consolidation of power in Nicaragua by the Soviet-backed dictators.

In the last few months, Nicaragua's Communist regime has stepped up censorship, entered Honduras to strike at the Contras, and forced thousands of Miskito Indians to seek refuge in Honduras by bombing their villages in Nicaragua. Despite these most recent examples of hostilities perpetrated by the Sandinistas, many of my colleagues will believe that Daniel Ortega can be reasoned with. Meanwhile, the Nicaraguan army gets stronger, the repression of human rights in Nicaragua continues, and the task of the Contras gets stronger.

Over the last 7 years, the armed forces in Nicaragua have increased from 14,000 under Somoza to 120,000 under Ortega. This Sandinista military force is larger than the armies of all the other Central American countries combined. The Sandinistas have received between $400 and $500 million in military hardware from the Soviet Union and other east bloc countries in the last 5 years. New Soviets deliveries include tanks, MI–24 helicopter gunships—considered to be the most advanced in the world—MI–8 troop-carrying helicopters, armored vehicles, heavy artillery, anti-aircraft weapons, and multiple rocket launchers. At the Punta Huete airfield, landing strips capable of handling the most advanced and the largest aircraft in the Soviet inventory have been completed. Sophisticated fighters that would further upset the military balance in the region could arrive at any time.

To support this massive influx of Soviet arms, there are over 3,000 Cuban and 100 Soviet military advisors in Nicaragua. This unilateral military build-up is not in response to outside aggression, but instead, is part of a plan to destabilize Central America through brute force. There is irrefutable evidence that the Government of Nicaragua is the greatest single source of insurgency, subversion, and instability in Central America. Better than 80 percent of the arms and munitions sent by the Soviets and the Cubans to the Salvadoran terrorists pass through Nicaragua, and until such time as the Sandinistas are willing to bring an end to this activity, I think it is imperative that at the very least we make it difficult for them to do so. If that means providing the democratic resistance with much needed weapons to combat this aggression, I firmly believe that we owe it to the future of freedom and democracy in the region to take these measures.

The Sandinistas have also played host to terrorists from Libya, the PLO, Spain, Argentina, Chile, Italy, Germany, and Syria. In 1980, the PLO gave the Sandinistas a $12 million loan, and also helped them get a $100 million loan from Libya. The PLO has an embassy in Managua, and the Sandinistas were trained as far back as 1969 under PLO supervision in Lebanon and Libya. Surely the aims of a government that keeps company with the infamous list of terrorist groups previously mentioned are not to foster peace in Central America.

Although one could easily argue that our objectives are to protect Nicaragua's neighbors and help Nicaraguans reach democracy, how can we expect the resistance to deal with the Soviet-backed Sandinistas when we do not provide them with the means to do so. As the strongest democracy in the Americas, it is in our moral and strategic interests to help in the fight against Communist aggression. This is especially true when our part of the fight only consists of supplying the weapons, and not the active involvement of American combat forces.

Ideally, every one of us would like to see a peaceful settlement to the situation in Nicaragua. On numerous occasions, the democratic resistance has offered a cease-fire if the Sandinistas would negotiate a reconcilation. A process of internal reconciliation based on competitive elections, freedom of the press, and individual rights are all that the Contras are asking for before they lay down their arms. But being interested in dictatorial power rather than democratic pluralism, the Sandinistas have always refused these peace offerings. By delaying action on the President's aid request, the House of Representatives has given the Sandinistas every incentive to avoid serious negotiation and to step up repression.

As Violeta Chamorro of Managua's La Prensa realized after sharing power with the Sandinistas for nearly a year, "Without freedom first, there will never be peace." The longer we ignore the problem in Nicaragua, the less likely that a peaceful transition to democracy will occur without massive U.S. military aid, and possibly even direct military intervention. The time to act for peace in Nicaragua is now.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WORTLEY].

Mr. WORTLEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Skelton-Edwards-Ray-Chandler amendment. This proposal addresses several of the criticisms of previous aid proposals. It is a fair and balanced compromise that deserves the bipartisan support of my colleagues.

There has been a great deal of discussion in recent weeks about the GAO report on the $27 million in humanitarian aid we approved last year. I am disappointed by the way in which this report has been handled. Instead of providing the State Department with a copy of the report so that it could respond to the GAO's concerns, only summaries and the testimony of GAO investigators have been available until just recently. This unequal approach has not promoted a considered and constructive review of the way in which the funds were dispersed so that problems can be identified and corrected. But then that was not the intention of the GAO report sponsors, who opposed the aid program in the first place.

This House bears its share of responsibility for the difficulties in accounting for funds dispersed from last year's assistance program. We gave the responsibility of dispersing these funds to an agency that does not have the infrastructure in Central America to ensure accountability. In fact, we specifically barred agencies with that capability from having anything to do with the program.

Rather than throwing the baby out with the bath water, we should learn from our mistakes and move to correct them. This is the kind of constructive approach taken by the Skelton-Edwards-Ray-Chandler amendment. By specifying stricter accounting procedures, it addresses current flaws in program administration and legislation.

The amendment before us also provides incentives and time for the Sandinistas to negotiate a political solution. A portion of the assistance would be available immediately to the democratic resistance forces, but only light weapons would be supplied until February of next year. This maintains our commitment to forces fighting for a free Nicaragua, but is also allows time to negotiate. In addition, the impending delivery of additional military assistance in February would give the Sandinistas incentive to agree to a real treaty that protects the interests of all Nicaraguans and the security of the Central American countries.

In today's debate, we are focusing on assistance to the Nicaraguan armed opposition. However, we should not lose sight of the internal opposition that bravely struggles for the rights of the Nicaraguan people. This group includes opposition parties, labor unions, human rights workers, La Prensa, and the Catholic Church, among others. In the face of harassment, threats, and imprisonment, these people continue to work against Sandinista repression.

Although there is no direct link between the internal and the armed oppositions, each acknowledges that it could not exist without the other. The armed opposition deflects the Sandinistas' attention away from the internal opposition, making it enemy No. 2 instead of enemy No. 1. The internal oppositions's valiant efforts on behalf of freedom and democracy give the armed opposition hope of success in reforming or removing the current Sandinista regime.

Some people have pointed to the "Peoples Church" as evidence that the Sandinistas aren't really repressive. But allowing a favored church to operate does not indicate freedom. It indicates manipulation. Freedom allows all churches to serve their congregations without fear and threats. The great majority of Nicaraguans belong to the Catholic Church, but the Catholic Church is not allowed to minister freely to its members. Moravian churches have been destroyed, evangelicals tortured and killed, and Jews harassed until forced to flee.

Sandinista repression is not limited to religion. It also extends to free labor unions, the press, and the Permanent Commission on Human Rights, as well as the general population. These are the very groups that fought against Somoza's repression and were instrumental in forcing Somoza to leave the country. The people in these organizations fed, supported, and protected the Sandinista leaders. Now they are the target of the Sandinista's machine to suppress independent voices in Nicaragua.

The combined efforts of the internal opposition, the armed resistance forces, and regional negotiators offer the only real hope of the Sandinistas ever acquiescing to a free and democratic society in Nicaragua. If this body fails to provide real support to the armed resistance, the efforts of the other two will be disastrously undermined. I urge my colleagues to take a stand and vote for the Skelton-Edwards-Ray-Chandler amendment.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Maine [Ms. SNOWE].

Ms. SNOWE. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Skelton-Edwards amendment.

I do so because it's time for the Congress to take decisive action on behalf of democracy in Central America. Since my first term in Congress 7 years ago, we've been waiting for the Sandinista Government to create a democratic process in Nicaragua. Presidents Carter and Reagan provided aid, in fact, to assist what we hoped would be a democracy growing out of the Sandinista revolution.

Well, it hasn't happened. Nicaragua is no more a democracy today than when the Sandinista revolution took power. And, after having met with President Ortega, having met with the Presidents of the four democratic countries of the region, and recognizing the tens of thousands of military personnel in Nicaragua I have little confidence that the Sandinistas currently have any intention of allowing self-determination in their country.

If this were a problem exclusive to the internal operations of Nicaragua, we wouldn't be having this debate today. But it's not. Nicaragua currently threatens the very fragile, emerging democracies of the region. As President Arias of Costa Rica said,

There will never be peace in Central America as long as there is a Marxist regime in Nicaragua with the characteristics of the nine commandantes.

We heard this message repeatedly during meetings with the four democratic Presidents—three of whom were only elected in the last 7 months. And we should pay particular attention to their message, because, for the very first time, they have taken their destiny into their own hands and are negotiating directly with Nicaragua. No longer is the peace process one directed from outside the region—those with the most at stake are now fully engaged in negotiations.

At the same time, these countries are struggling mightily, against substantial odds, to prove to their citizens the great lesson of our own country: That only through democracy will they enjoy the treasures of freedom, growth, and prosperity. But that is difficult to accomplish when they are forced to divert precious resources to defend against the Sandinistas.

Our goal—no, our responsibility—is to help them prove that democracy will lead to peace, stability, and prosperity. That means taking two steps right now. First is to provide direct economic aid to the four Central American democracies, so that their pursuit of freedom will have a greater opportunity to succeed; and, second, to apply pressure on the Sandinistas to negotiate a treaty which would allow a democratic process and self-determination in their land.

Aid to the Contras can provide a dimension of that pressure. Make no mistake, however—they aren't the ultimate solution to the problems in Central America. They simply can play a part in an overall policy designed to compel the Sandinistas to bargain with the same spirit shared by the democracies.

Now, some of my colleagues will point to President Ortega's weekend offer, made with little subtlety on the eve of the House vote, as a sign that Nicaragua is willing to sign an treaty which is in the best interests of the region. That would be an inappropriate suggestion to make. It ignores the fact that the democratic countries have serious concerns with the treaty language on issues such as troop size, verification, and the guarantees of a democratic process.

More fundamentally, however, President Ortega has had extraordinary opportunity to implement a democratic process. After all, it's been 2 years since any American military aid went to the Contras. It's been 3 months since this House last voted down military aid.

Given that record, does anyone believe the Sandinistas' latest proposal will embody genuinely free and open elections? Or that it will embody an effective end to all censorship? Or that it will provide a realistic guarantee of freedom of worship?

I doubt that it will. As do the leaders of the four democracies, I doubt that we will see any change for the good under a regime that has admitted having its own version of democracy—unless pressure is brought to bear upon the Sandinistas.

We must make our decision now whether or not we're willing to apply any pressure. My friends, if we can't make the decision now on military aid, we're certainly not likely to do so in October. In fact, by delaying the decision, you only serve to remove what little incentive which may exist for the Sandinistas to bargain. The Sandinistas already have been provided ample time by this Congress to show a spirit of true conciliation and compromise.

Even still, under the Skelton-Edwards amendment, no military aid can be delivered until September 1. And, as the leaders of the democratic nations told us, if negotiations aren't successful by about that point, success will not come for a long time.

Make no mistake about it, those four countries don't have a long time to wait. They are surviving today, scratching for ways to keep the pulse of democracy strong in their own lands. They have a singularly impressive will to lay a foundation of liberty for the future of their countries, to bring the blessings of freedom upon their children and grandchildren.

And so, my colleagues, this is why I will vote today for regional economic aid, and for military aid to the Contras for the first time. This is a critical juncture for peace in Central America, the democracies, though in a delicate position, are willing to negotiate. Their future is inextricably linked to negotiating political freedoms and a democratic process in Nicaragua. Yet the Sandinistas have shown no willingness to proceed in good faith.

With those thoughts in mind, we have little choice but to maintain pressure on the Sandinistas. This could be, in fact, our last and best hope for democracy to take strong root throughout Central America. We cannot forget that the political landscape has changed significantly for the better in the past year, but will not remain so if left unaided. By helping other nations to spread political freedom, the United States can also help keep our hemisphere strong and United against totalitarian forces; and reduce potential threats to our citizens and our country.

Given the fragility of democracy in the region, given Mexico just to the north of the region contending with massive earthquake damage on top of their host of other problems, we cannot afford to have Marxism as the dominant force in Central America.

For, my colleagues, if we fail to help sustain democracy in the region, and if we fail to do so now, we are going to have a lot more than Nicaragua to worry about.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON].

Mrs. JOHNSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Skelton-Edwards amendment.

I hope the American people are listening today, because if they are they will see that a new consensus has developed in the matter of American policy in Central America.

Both Republicans and Democrats are now committing to the level of economic aid the Jackson-Kissinger Commission recommended. Economic aid acknowledges that a regional policy that addresses the cause of Central America's problems is critical to both peace and prosperity in that important area of our hemisphere.

And second, both the Republican and Democratic proposals now acknowledge that without some kind of support for the Contras the fragile democracies of Central America are in jeopardy and democracy in Nicaragua a hollow dream.

We in Congress have come a long way—we agree on the need for additional economic aid to the region; we agree on the need for immediate aid to the Contras; we even agree to provide weapons in timeframes only a month apart, and under the Democrats' plan highly lethal weapons could be provided after October 1, sooner than under the bipartisan Skelton-Edwards proposal.

The last step we must take together is to make clear that we mean what we say, that we are committed to our policy. That means no second vote, because that second vote returns us to a maybe-yes, maybe-no posture in regard to our own policy.

Furthermore, a second vote just before the election is pure politics, sheer theater, not policymaking. The Sandinistas know that and we must be straight about it here.

Remember, if we clearly adopt a broad, regional policy as we have the opportunity to do today by supporting the Skelton-Edwards amendment, and if thereafter, the nations of Central America reach a clear and verifiable agreement as they want to do, we have the power to redirect funding in response to direction from our allies.

In other words, if we need successive votes, we can have successive votes, as the Skelton-Edwards amendment clearly allows, but to require yet another vote so soon is to demonstrate that we are uncertain, uncommitted, and unreliable. Ask yourself, does Cuba and the Soviet Union so vacillate? Absolutely not.

Let's act. Let's act clearly and decisively. We are a democracy and can adjust our policy should circumstances change. But let us set our course and clearly side with democracy.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in the strongest possible support of the President of the United States of America and support the bill.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BOULTER].

Mr. BOULTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Edwards amendment.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. ROWLAND].

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, like many of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, I have grappled with the issues of Central America. I voted against aid in the past in the hope of seeing movement by the Sandinistas. But tonight's vote is really a turning point. It is a turning point for a possible solution in Nicaragua.

Tonight, we must decide whether we really want to do something in Nicaragua or whether we merely want to walk away in disgust. Do we merely take the easy, political way out by supporting the McCurdy proposal or do we support a comprehensive, regional plan?

Like many, I had given the Sandinistas the benefit of the doubt time and time and time again. I think we have come to the test. At this point we must decide whether to fish or cut bait.

Mr. Chairman, unfortunately our Nation cannot afford to walk away. To our President we thank you. We thank you for bending over backward on this proposal and we thank you for working with us to develop a logical, rational, regional approach to solving this very difficult situation.

I urge the Members' support for the Skelton-Edwards amendment.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, to close debate in opposition to the amendment, I yield my remaining time to the distinguished majority whip, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY].

Mr. FOLEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I have served in this body for a little over 20 years, that is not as long as some and longer than others. In that time I can recall a number of occasions that, in retrospect, were truly historic. This may well be such an occasion.

Tonight, the House is faced with a choice that divides people of good will and strong patriotic commitment as to what our policy should be for peace and reconciliation in Central America, for the protection of democratic values and for the interests of the United States.

Yesterday I think the President approached the issue of the good will of people on both sides of this question in the proper tone and sense.

This body has no unpatriotic Members. And the Members of this body seek to advance democratic values and seek to uphold tradition that gave our country birth and made us a voice for liberty, independence, and human rights throughout the world. All of us can share in the great pride of that reputation and that undertaking.

What we decide tonight is not whether we agree with the Government of Nicaragua; it has no supporters in this body. I agree with the characterizations that have been made by the President, the Secretary of Defense, and others concerning the woeful, lamentable decline of respect for human values, for religious freedom, and for freedom of the press that are the sad, daily chronicle of the abuses of the Government in Managua.

The question is: How should our policy deal with that problem and that reality? We believe that it can be best dealt with and contained by a policy of support for those countries that surround Nicaragua; those countries that have come to a full blossom of democratic values and practice; values and practices and for which we share a great enthusiasm, common effort, and support.

Many of us do not believe that embarking on a virtually unprecedented action of a proxy war against a government, however cold and disdainful it is in respecting the rights and traditions of its citizens is a policy consistent with our national interests.

Since the end of World War II it is unprecedented for the United States to openly undertake the overthrow of a government with which we maintain, for whatever reason, diplomatic relations. With respect, that is what we are talking about tonight. Bringing this government to the bargaining table is the officially stated objective of the administration, but the fact is that the administration also says that no Marxist-Leninist regime has ever willingly come to the bargaining table.

If you believe that the Contras can bring this government down, I suggest you support the Edwards amendment. If you believe that we can solve the problems in the region by the use of military force, I suggest you support the Edwards amendment.

But if you believe there is a better way, a way of diplomacy and common action between all of our allies, a way in common with those voices in Central and South America that call upon us to support the continued efforts of the Contadora countries; if you believe that by supporting democratic values instead of attempting to overthrow this government, however bad, by force, then I ask you tonight to vote against the Edwards amendment.

This House is being asked to decide on a policy in Central America that could become irretrievable and irreversible should we adopt the Edwards amendment.

It is my dread belief that once we embark on a course of military power and force, we will be committed to it, for months and years ahead and ultimately, to the introduction of American troops.

I accept the President's word that he has no present intention to use American troops in Central America. I also accept his judgment that it would be a tragic, devisive, and irreversible mistake to do so.

Therefore, vote against the Edwards amendment; vote for a chance for peace, diplomacy, reconciliation, and the expression of the highest values of our country.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOWERY].

Mr. LOWERY of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Edwards-Skelton amendment.

Mr. Chairman, today, once again, the House of Representatives considers the important issue of aiding the democratic resistance in Nicaragua. The crux of the issue—whether or not to aid rebels who are attempting to restore their stolen revolution—has not changed in the past few months. However, several ancillary matters have been raised today which, intentionally or not, have obfuscated the issue at hand.

Reaffirming my support of the resistance forces in Nicaragua, I am voting for the Edwards-Skelton amendment which provides the best and most sensible aid package to the Contras and the surrounding region. Few now doubt the intentions and tactics of the Sandinistas who have repressed the church, press, labor groups, and opposition parties. Sandinista prisons are bulging with political prisoners, far more than were ever incarcerated during the Somoza years.

The military buildup, the single most alarming aspect of Sandinista rule, has reached astounding levels. With 60,000 men in arms and another 50,000 ready for speedy mobilization, the Sandinista forces dwarf those of neighboring Honduras—21,000 troops—and Costa Rica, which has no army, and bodes ominously for the security of the entire region. Their weapons arsenal, including Hind helicopters and 300 missile launchers is equally forbidding.

Since last May, the Soviets have stepped up their involvement in supporting the Sandinistas. Specifically, the Soviets are running advanced spy-plane overflights in the region, gathering information on the location of the resistance and other regional security positions. In addition, a Soviet harbor base is in the process of being completed. I, for one, am not excited with the prospect of having a Soviet base between the United States and the Panama Canal. In short, the threat is real and, regrettably, increasing.

The Skelton-Edwards package includes $100 million for the resistance in Nicaragua with at least $30 million reserved for humanitarian uses. The funds would be released in three increments—$40 million upon enactment, $20 million on October 15, 1986, and $40 million on February 15, 1987. No heavy weaponry may be delivered until the second installment, and all military aid may be cut off by a joint resolution of the Congress.

Moreover, this package earmarks an additional $300 million in economic assistance to Guatemala, Costa Rica, El Salvador, and Honduras. While preferring to address general foreign aid measures separate from the security debate in Nicaragua, I nonetheless appreciate the increased pressures being felt by these "front-line" countries arising from the Sandinista-Contra conflict.

If the United States is committed to security and democracy in this hemisphere, then we must address the Sandinista menace in a forthright and coherent fashion. The aforementioned Edwards-Skelton package achieves this goal best. It aids both the surrounding fragile democracies, and the resistance forces within Nicaragua. Lip service to the freedom fighters in Nicaragua is not enough. Humanitarian assistance to the freedom fighters is not enough. We must provide the democratic resistance with the support necessary to attain a victory.

As I have stated before, I am not naive enough to believe that with this $100 million the Contras will defeat the massive Sandinista army—they certainly will not win without any military support. However, they can win in the way the Sandinistas won in Managua—not by rolling over the Sandinista army, but by controlling the countryside, gaining popular support, and forcing the Sandinistas to recognize that their oppressive and subversive policies are untenable.

A viable resistance force, ever ready for negotiation but also willing to fight, is the best hope for convincing the Sandinistas that a negotiated settlement is in their interest. It is naive to believe the Sandinistas will come to the peace table without the impetus of a viable Contra force. Strength of U.S. resolve in this matter is critical.

As alluded to earlier, additional issues have been raised this round—specifically, mismanagement of Contra funding—which cloud the fundamental issue at hand. Nonetheless, the issue of funding accountability is an important one and deserves comment. I will not support the Barnes/Panetta amendment—prohibiting further funding of the Contras until the last disbursement of $27 million is fully accounted for—for several reasons.

First, the State Department has assured Members of Congress that past Contra aid is fully accountable. The accusations of drug running and corruption by leaders of the United Nicaraguan Opposition [UNO] are unsubstantiated. Second, I find the timing of these "revelations" disquieting to say the least. Coming on the eve of this Contra debate, these fraud allegations are tinged with political overtones.

Nevertheless, it is important that legislators ensure that limited Federal resources are spent for their intended purpose. This is true of any Government program be it welfare or national security programs. Accordingly, I am pleased the Edwards-Skelton proposal contains stricter accounting provisions which should ensure that this money is spent in compliance with congressional intent.

Mr. Chairman, the issue at hand is critical to the democratic hopes of the Nicaraguan people, the security of surrounding countries, and the vigilance of the United States. I urge my colleagues to support the Edwards-Skelton proposal as the most coherent response to this issue.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I rise in support of this bipartisan foreign policy amendment.

During this debate my colleagues on the other side of the aisle have continually referred to a recent poll which showed that by a 2-to-1 margin the American people do not support aid to the Contras. What my colleagues have neglected to discuss, however, are other findings of the poll that reveal very different attitudes.

For instance, that same poll found that by a 2-to-1 margin the American people believe that the situation in Nicaragua is a threat to the security of the United States. This view is certainly not shared by my colleagues on the left who constantly ridicule the idea that Nicaragua could possibly be a threat to our country.

The poll also found that half of the Americans polled think that the United States should take all steps including the use of force to prevent the spread of communism in Central America. Moreover, when asked "Which would you rather see happen: for Nicaragua to become another Cuba in terms of its relations with the Soviet Union, or for the United States to go to war with Nicaragua to try to prevent it from becoming another Cuba" most respondents—37 percent—answered they would rather see the United States go to war with Nicaragua.

Mr. Chairman, the only thing these polls show is that the American people have varying views on the subject and either side can find some comfort in their results. My colleagues on the left habitually ignore the numerous polls showing that the American people are against tax increases and for Federal Government spending reductions to reduce the deficit by huge margins. They talk instead about leadership. Well that is precisely what our job is all about. Again it is time to do the job we were elected to do and make a tough decision. Do we want another Cuba on our doorstep? Or will we stand with the democratic resistance—the freedom fighters?

PUBLIC STRONGLY BACKS LIBYAN ATTACK BUT OPPOSES AID TO NICARAGUA REBELS

(By Peter Begans)

Americans strongly back President Reagan's recent military actions against Libya in the Gulf of Sidra, according to the latest ABC News poll.

But the survey shows Americans are four times more likely to think our actions against Libyan forces will increase terrorism rather than decrease it.

Methodology.—The ABC News special poll on Libya was conducted Mar. 25, 1986, by telephone among 530 men and women in the continental United States. The margin of error for the poll is plus or minus five percentage points.

Approve.—The public clearly supports Reagan and the U.S. military in the latest run-in with Libya. Two-thirds of the public (67 percent) say recent U.S. military actions against Libya have been just about right. Sixteen percent say we have been too tough and 12 percent say we have not been tough enough.

And Americans strongly approve of the way Reagan is handling the situation—66 percent approve while only 23 percent disapprove and 11 percent don't know. And there are indications Reagan's actions in the Mediterranean may increase support for his proposal to aid the anti-communist rebels of Nicaragua.

Not belligerent.—The public does not believe Reagan and the U.S. Navy have belligerently sought to teach Libya a lesson as Arab nations and the Soviet Union have charged. Only 27 percent of the public believe the Reagan administration ordered the Sixth Fleet into the Gulf of Sidra to pick a fight with Libyan leader Muammar Khaddafi, while two-thirds (66 percent) disagree with that.

And 86 percent of the public believe U.S. naval forces have a right to be in the disputed Gulf of Sidra that Libya claims as its territorial waters.

However, about a third of those people feel we should have avoided military exercises there because of the risk of a military clash with Libyan forces. Overall, 58 percent of the public says we should have held the Sixth Fleet's manuevers there, while 34 percent say we should not have.

Withdraw.—Despite the feeling that the U.S. has the right to be in the Gulf of Sidra, 69 percent of the public think we proved our point and should withdraw, something the Sixth Fleet did soon after. Only 15 percent say we should consider Libyan military actions against our fleet as an act of war and invade Libya with the goal of overthrowing Khaddafi.

In fact, there appears to be little sentiment for seeking vengence against Khaddafi. By 57 to 39 percent, the public disagrees that "It's time to teach Khaddafi a lesson even if it means risking a larger war." And only 20 percent of the public say, "The U.S. should see to it that Libyan leader Khaddafi is killed by whatever means available before he becomes even more powerful."

Terror.—However, a large group of Americans think this week's incidents in the Gulf of Sidra may have planted the seeds for future terrorist attacks against Americans. Forty-five percent of the public say our destruction of Libyan boats and missile bases will lead to more terrorism, while only 10 percent believe it will cause less terrorism. Thirty-nine percent believe it won't make a difference one way or the other.

Despite that, three out of five (61 percent) Americans disagree with the statement that Reagan is taking too many risks in the Libyan situation.

The poll was completed before the terrorist bombing April 1 in which four Americans died traveling aboard a TWA jetliner en route from Rome to Athens.

New York.—On the night of Mar. 25 ABC News asked the same questions from our national poll to New York City residents for WABC-TV and the New York Daily News. New Yorkers had virtually the same feelings as the public at large, strongly backing Reagan but unwilling to get into an offensive war with Libya.

A majority of Americans continue to oppose President Reagan's controversial $100 million aid package to the Contra rebels of Nicaragua.

But polling by ABC News shows Nicaragua's invasion of Honduras and Libya's attacks on the U.S. Sixth Fleet seem to be boosting public support for Reagan's position.

The public also approves of Reagan giving $20 million in emergency aid to Honduras, but opposes using American helicopter pilots to ferry Honduran troops to battle against Nicaragua.

Three polls.—ABC News conducted three national telephone polls in March focusing on aid to Nicaragua and Honduras. The first and most extensive was conducted March 6. The second was taken immediately after Reagan's speech to the nation on Nicaragua March 16. The third poll, conducted March 25, focused mainly on Libya but included several questions on aid to Honduras and the Contras. All three polls have a margin of error of plus or minus five percentage points.

Latest.—The most recent poll shows the public continues to oppose new military aid to the Contras, although by a smaller margin than earlier in March. Fifty-three percent oppose President Reagan's aid package to the rebels and 42 percent approve of it, a difference of 11 points. On March 16 the gap was 24 points—54 percent opposed to aid compared to 30 percent favoring it.

The March 25 poll was conducted on the day the U.S. Sixth Fleet destroyed Libyan gunboats in the Gulf of Sidra and U.S.-ally Honduras battled invading Nicaraguan troops. Judging from past experience, the "rally 'round the President" effect probably boosted support for the Contra aid proposal.

The Senate subsequently passed the Contra aid proposal and it now goes back to the House where it was narrowly defeated in mid-March.

Difficult.—Reagan has clearly had a hard time winning public support for Contra aid. In our March 6 poll, 52 percent of the public said they disapproved of the United States being involved in trying to overthrow the Nicaragua government, while only 32 percent approved.

And by 50 percent to 36 percent, Americans said the danger of getting entangled in Central American problems exceeded the danger of having communism spread in that region if the U.S. does nothing to stop it.

Disapproval.—In turn, the public has given Reagan poor marks on his handling of the Nicaraguan situation so far. On March 6 only 37 percent approved of the way Reagan was handling the situation there, while 47 percent disapproved. His address to the nation 10 days later did not improve his standing with the public (36 percent approved, 48 percent disapproved).

His marks on Nicaragua are nowhere near Reagan's very positive overall job approval rating which in the March ABC News/Washington Post poll was a remarkably high 65 percent.

Threat.—But despite disapproval of his Nicaragua policies, it appears Reagan made some headway in identifying the Sandinista regime as a threat to the U.S. in his nationwide speech. Immediately afterward, the percentage of Americans believing Nicaragua was a threat to the United States rose to 56 percent, up from 49 percent 10 days earlier. And the number saying Nicaragua was not a threat slipped from 43 percent to 31 percent.

Twenty-nine percent called the Marxist regime a major threat to the U.S. and 27 percent said it was a minor threat.

Audience.—The March 16 poll showed Reagan's address reached 38 percent of the public. Those who heard were more favorable to Reagan's argument that $100 million in U.S. aid is a worthwhile anti-communist investment, although even a plurality of them did not support Reagan's position.

Vietnam.—Public officials opposed to Contra aid have used their own rhetoric, much of it evocative of the Vietnam War, to block Reagan's aid package. But a two-to-one majority of Americans do not see us replaying the Vietnam War south of the border, according to our March 6 poll. Only 30 percent think the U.S. is headed for the same kind of involvement in Nicaragua as it had in Vietnam, while 61 percent think the U.S. will avoid that kind of involvement this time.

That may be because only 37 percent of the public would fight to prevent Nicaragua from becoming a Soviet satellite, while 28 percent are willing to let it become another Cuba if the U.S. can avoid war. The other 35 percent think there are other options or have no opinion.

Sex.—Reagan's major opponents on Contra aid turn out to be women. Women are just as likely as men to feel that Nicaragua is a threat to the U.S., but they are less inclined to support the overthrow of the Sandinista regime.

Women oppose Reagan's Contra aid proposal by 57 to 21 percent, according to the March 16 poll. Men are more closely split, opposing the aid package by 50 to 41 percent. Women also oppose overthrowing the Sandinista government by more than two-to-one, while men are only slightly opposed to it.

And by more than two-to-one, women disapprove of the way Reagan is handling Nicaragua. Men narrowly approve.

Party.—The polls show the issue of Contra aid has taken on a partisan coloring across the nation as well as in the halls of Congress. Republicans favor the new military aid to the Contras while Democrats and independents strongly oppose it.

Knowledge.—Raising the rhetoric on Nicaragua has increased public awareness of the situation to an all-time high. Fifty percent of the public know that we are supporting the rebels against the government there. In 1983 only 24 percent of Americans knew which side we were on. And as late as a year ago, only 37 percent knew we were supporting the Contras. Sixty-six percent of men know we are on the Contras side; only 35 percent of women do.

Nearly three-quarters say they have heard about the fighting between the Sandinista government and the Contras.

Honduran aid.—The most recent ABC News poll also shows a majority of Americans (54 percent) approve of President Reagan's decision to send $20 million in emergency military aid to Honduras. Honduras asked for the aid after Nicaraguan troops crossed over the Honduran border March 22 in pursuit of Contras forces which have their base camps in Honduras.

However, only 41 percent approve of using American helicopters and American pilots to transport Honduran troops to battle staging areas as Reagan agreed to. Fifty-five percent of the public oppose using American pilots and helicopters to support Honduran troops.

New York.—A separate WABC-TV/New York Daily News poll conducted March 25 found that New York City residents to be less supportive of Reagan's proposal to aid the Contras and Reagan's emergency aid to Honduras than the nation as a whole is.

Only 35 percent of New Yorkers favor the $100 million in new aid to the Contras while 60 percent oppose.

And New Yorkers are split on the $20 million in Honduran aid with 49 percent favoring it and 46 opposing it, while the nation favors it.

In addition, New Yorkers are more opposed to using American helicopter pilots to transport Honduran troops than the nation as a whole is.

A slim majority of the public want other over-the-counter drug manufacturers to follow Johnson and Johnson's lead and stop making over-the-counter medicines in capsule form because of the recent cyanide poisoning in New York.

The reason, according to a special ABC News poll: seven in 10 believe the Tylenol poisoning will lead to copy-cat crimes, and one out of three fear they or their families will fall victim to tampered medicine.

The poll also shows two-thirds of the public believe the Tylenol poisoning is the work of a mentally disturbed individual and not a terrorist conspiracy.

And an overwhelming 99 percent of the public say they have heard about the poisoned Tylenol death in New York.

Methodology.—ABC News conducted the special Tylenol poll for World News Tonight on Feb. 18, 1986, by telephone among 507 men and women nationwide. The margin of error for the poll is plus or minus five percentage points.

Approve.—Eighty-seven percent of the public approve of Johnson and Johnson's decision to stop making Tylenol products in capsule form. Only nine percent disapprove and five percent have no opinion.

From now on, the drug giant will make Tylenol and other medicines that used to be in capsules in the form of "caplets"—coated pills. It is estimated the changeover will cost Johnson and Johnson at least $100 million.

And 52 percent say other makers of over-the-counter medicine should follow Johnson and Johnson's example and stop making their products in capsule form. Meanwhile, 40 percent say those manufacturers should continue to make encapsulated medicine.

No blame.—It is clear the public does not blame Johnson and Johnson for the Tylenol poisoning, the second such crime in four years. Three-quarters—76 percent—say the company has done enought to insure that its products are not tampered with. Only 15 percent say Johnson and Johnson could have done more.

And two-thirds of the public (67 percent) feel the poisoning in New York is the act of a mentally disturbed person who wanted to murder someone at random. Only 20 percent think the poisoning is a terrorist conspiracy.

Fear.—But even though most people believe this latest crime was purpetrated by a lone individual, 71 percent of the public think the New York Tylenol death will cause others to try to poison people in the same way. And 36 percent say they fear that they or someone in their family will be hurt by taking tampered medicine.

Further, 41 percent are afraid that someone in their family will accidentlly take food or some other product that has been tampered with. Overall, 46 percent of the public—nearly half—say they fear that either the medicine, food or some other product they bring home from the store may be contaminated.

Change.—It appears Americans will be changing their habits because of the latest tylenol poisoning. Three out of five Americans say in the past they have taken nonprescription medicine in capsules. But only two in five say they will take such medicine in the future.

Saturation.—News of the New York Tylenol death has reached almost everyone in the country. Ninety-nine percent of the public—a staggering figure—have heard the story. That is nearly the same as four years ago when 100 percent of our survey heard about the Tylenol poisonings in Chicago.

In comparison, last December only 61 percent of the public said they had heard or read about the Gramm-Rudman-Holling tax bill that had just passed Congress. In November, 83 percent had heard of Star Wars which President Reagan and Soviet leader Gorbachev were discussing in Geneva.

METHODOLOGY

The ABC News poll on Libya and Nicaragua was conducted March 25, 1986, by telephone among 530 men and women in the continental United States. The same poll was conducted simultaneously in New York City among 505 city residents for WABC-TV and the Daily News.

The ABC News poll on Reagan's Nicaragua speech was conducted March 16, 1986, by telephone among 511 men and women in the continental United States.

The ABC News poll just on aid to the Contras was conducted March 6, 1986, by telephone among 543 men and women in the continental United States.

The ABC News poll on the Tylenol poisoning was conducted Feb. 18, 1986, by telephone among 507 men and women in the continental United States.

A sample of telephone exchanges is selected from all the exchanges in the continental United States. The exchanges are picked to guarantee that each region of the country is proportionately represented. Telephone numbers are formed by adding random digits to selected exchanges enabling interviewers to reach both listed and unlisted phones.

Survey responses are weighted by age, sex, education and race using the latest U.S. Census figures.

According to sample theory, you can be 95 percent sure that the results for the five polls are plus or minus three percentage points, the same as you would get in interviewing every adult in the population. The margin of error for the March poll plus or minus 3.5 percentage points. Additional inaccuracy may occur from the wording of certain questions or the order in which they are asked.

ABC's policy in its press releases is to present full results of poll questions in the order they are asked. We also provide complete trend. However, it is not possible for us to include demographic results or cross tabulations. Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, before I yield to our final speaker, I would like all Members to join me in welcoming back to the House Chamber for this vote our colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. GEORGE O'BRIEN.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Chairman, I will not take long. It is such an honor to be one of you. You are wonderful people, and I note that there is a certain sense of fraternity irrespective of views, irrespective of party, that transcends all the other differences we have.

Today and tonight that is demonstrated by your demonstration of affection for Mary Lou and me. Thank you very much.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, to close the debate on our side, I yield 4 minutes to the cosponsor of the Edwards-Skelton amendment, the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. IKE SKELTON.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, the presence of our friend and colleague from Illinois not only makes this a historic occasion, but makes it a grand one.

The gentleman from Washington said that this is a historic time. There have been other historic times in this body. There was the time during the era of Henry Clay when this House supported independence and freedom in all of Latin America from the colonial yoke of the Europeans, on a bipartisan basis. There was the time during the era of Harry Truman when this House supported freedom and democracy in Western Europe on a bipartisan basis. There was the time during the period of John F. Kennedy when this House supported the free world and resisted the spread of communism on a bipartisan basis.

Then Vietnam came, and the sadness of those days caused this House to be divided. But since that time we have seen the continuing spread of communism, this cancer that has gone to the corners of the world: Afghanistan, the continent of Africa, and now in our hemisphere, in Central America—Central America, our own backyard.

It takes me just as long to fly from Washington, DC, to Kansas City, MO, as it takes to fly from Miami, FL, to Central America. I hope all of us when we go back to our dwellings tonight will get out the atlas and see that this is really very close to home—truly our backyard.

Mr. Chairman, tonight there is an opportunity once again in this body to speak as a bipartisan group for freedom and to stand for democracy and to stand against communism.

What is the issue before us this evening? The issue is not whether to choose one plan or another; the issue is not whether to adopt one issue or another amendment; but the issue is whether we will make a decision as a body.

Our amendment—the Edwards-Skelton-Ray-Chandler amendment—is the only decision that will be made and can be made tonight. The alternative is no decision; as a matter of fact it is what we do not want; prolonged indecision. We want a solid, decisive vote tonight. We ask this for our amendment.

You know, there was a time that history recalls, and it was a very little noted vote in this very Chamber in 1939, when this body voted down the armaments and fortification of Guam. No one paid much attention to it except the Empire of Japan, and they calculated and felt that as a result of that, America would not defend its interests in the far corners of the world.

That was a decisive move here that sent the wrong signal. We cannot afford to do that tonight. We must make a decision and send the right signal. Tonight we will decide whether we will recognize and act for our national security's interest, or to put that decision off. Tonight we will decide whether we will recognize and act on behalf of the democracies in our hemisphere, those four budding democracies, or put that decision off. I ask the Members to vote for our amendment, the Edwards-Skelton-Ray-Chandler amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS], as modified.

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 221, noes 209, not voting 3, as follows:

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HAMILTON

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAMILTON: Strike out title II (as added to the bill pursuant to House Resolution 481) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

TITLE II

UNITED STATES POLICY IN CENTRAL AMERICA

SEC. 201. (a) The primary objectives of United States policy in Central America should be—

(1) to preserve the security of the United States;

(2) to prevent the Soviet Union and its allies from seeking to destablize the region or to develop or deploy an offensive military capability which directly threatens the United States;

(3) to achieve peace and reconciliation;

(4) to promote stability and economic development;

(5) to promote the observance of human rights and the strengthening of democratic processes; and

(6) to live at peace with Nicaragua so long as Nicaragua lives at peace with its neighbors.

(b) United States strategy for achieving the objectives stated in subsection (a) should include—

(1) an emphasis on seeking a negotiated, regional settlement;

(2) respect for the independence and territorial integrity of all nations;

(3) a clear commitment, through appropriate types and levels of military and economic assistance, to assist the nations of Central America in building and sustaining viable, democratic societies capable of withstanding aggression and subversion and of providing their people with an opportunity for better lives; and

(4) consistent diplomatic support on behalf of the observance of human rights by groups and governments, and support for democratic institutions throughout the region, in recognition of the fact that subversion feeds on repression.

(c) In furtherance of the objectives stated in subsection (a), United States policy with respect to Nicaragua should include the following:

(1) A commitment to preserve the security of the United States by preventing the Soviet Union and its allies from developing or deploying an offensive military capability in Central America that directly threatens the United States.

(2) A commitment to protect the security and territorial integrity of any nation of Central America in conformance with the Charter of the Organization of American States and the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance, which provide for collective action.

(3) Pursuit of a regional settlement through all diplomatic avenues, including—

(A) effective support for the Contadora process, which is addressing the questions of peace and security (including mechanisms for verification and enforcement) and internal reconciliation and political pluralism;

(B) giving priority to obtaining a ceasefire in Nicaragua;

(C) renewing bilateral talks with Nicaragua; and

(D) encouraging direct talks among the parties to the conflict in Nicaragua.

(4) The provision of incentives to Nicaragua if the Government of Nicaragua agrees to a ceasefire with its opponents, removes foreign military advisors, agrees not to provide material support for insurgencies and agrees to appropriate monitoring procedures under Contadora auspices to verify such agreement, respects human rights and the independence of the media, and makes progress toward national reconciliation and a pluralistic democratic system. Incentives should be structured to enable the United States to respond to positive steps by Nicaragua. These incentives could include—

(A) the suspension of United States military exercises in the region;

(B) the termination of the national emergency with respect to Nicaragua which the President declared in Executive order 12513 on May 1, 1985, and termination of the United States embargo against Nicaragua instituted pursuant to that Executive order;

(C) the resumption of normal trade, including the resumption of nondiscriminatory trade treatment (MFN status), the restoration of benefits under the Generalized System of Preferences, and the restoration of Nicaragua's sugar quota;

(D) the provision of bilateral and multilateral assistance of Nicaragua and the provision of technical assistance, help in agriculture and health, and volunteer services; and

(E) the creation of a Central American Development Organization (in accordance with section 464 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961) in which Nicaragua could participate.

(5) The imposition of further sanctions against Nicaragua should it intensify or expand activities hostile to United States interests and to peace and security within Central America. Such sanctions could include obtaining the cooperation of our allies in Western Europe and Japan, now Nicaragua's largest trading partners, in—

(A) cutting trade with Nicaragua;

(B) stopping bilateral assistance and blocking multilateral assistance to Nicaragua;

(C) imposing comprehensive economic sanctions against Nicaragua;

(D) breaking diplomatic relations with Nicaragua; and

(E) working with our Latin American allies, especially those in Central America, to isolate Nicaragua in regional affairs.

Such sanctions can only be effective if taken together with our allies. Unilateral sanctions have not and will not be effective.

SUPPORT FOR THE CONTADORA PROCESS

SEC. 202. (a) The Congress reaffirms its support for the Contadora initiatives and processes, particularly the principles for peace outlined in the Document of Objectives of September 9, 1983, and the Caraballeda Declaration of January 12, 1986. These include termination of support for irregular forces in the region, termination of support for insurrectionist movements in the region, negotiated limits on arms acquisitions, negotiated limits on international military maneuvers, progressive reduction toward elimination of foreign military advisers, effective steps toward national reconciliation and observance of human rights, commitment by the Central American nations to avoid aggression, and promotion of regional integration and cooperation.

(b) In accordance with the Caraballeda Declaration of January 12, 1986 (which was signed by the foreign ministers of all four Contadora nations and all four Contadora Support Group nations), and the Guatemala Declaration of January 16, 1986 (which was signed by all five Central American nations), the Congress urges the President to resume without preconditions direct bilateral talks with Nicaragua, which were suspended by the United States in January 1985.

(c) The Congress calls upon the President, in order to show support for the Contadora process, to announce that when all five Central American nations have signed an agreement based on the Contadora Document of Objectives, the United States will respond by taking positive steps which could include—

(1) supporting and observing that agreement;

(2) limiting the scope, duration, and locale of United States military exercises in Central America to those allowed by that agreement; and

(3) terminating the national emergency with respect to Nicaragua which the President declared in Executive order 12513 on May 1, 1985.

ASSISTANCE IN SUPPORT OF THE REGIONAL PEACE PROCESS

SEC. 203. (a) The Congress urges the President to support the regional peace process in Central America with diplomatic and financial assistance.

(b)(1) The President is authorized and encouraged to use up to $5,000,000—

(A) to provide assistance to the Contadora nations of Mexico, Panama, Venezuela, and Colombia, and the Contadora Support Group nations of Argentina, Peru, Uruguay, and Brazil, to assist those nations in reaching agreement among the nations of Central America based on the Contadora Document of Objectives, including assistance for peacekeeping, verification, and monitoring systems; and

(B) to help implement any joint border commission agreement between Nicaragua and Costa Rica, or between Nicaragua and Honduras, which those nations enter into a furtherance of the purposes of the Contadora Document of Objectives.

(2) In addition to funds transferred pursuant to section 205, the $2,000,000 appropriated under the heading "ASSISTANCE FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF A CONTADORA AGREEMENT" by the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1985, may be used to carry out paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(c) In addition, the Congress urges the President, at such time as an agreement based on the Contadora Document of Objectives is signed by all five Central American nations, to request such funds as may be necessary to assist in the implementation of that agreement.

ASSISTANCE FOR HUMANITARIAN NEEDS AND RESETTLEMENT

SEC. 204. Up to $27,000,000 of the funds authorized to be transferred by section 205 may be made available for use as follows:

(1) Except for amounts used pursuant to paragraph (2), these funds shall be used to provide food, medicine, or other assistance for the humanitarian needs of those who have been displayed by conflict in Nicaragua, regardless of whether they have been associated with the Nicaraguan opposition forces. Assistance under this paragraph may be provided only through the International Committee of the Red Cross or the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and only upon that organization's determination that such assistance is necessary to meet humanitarian needs.

(2) Up to $15,000,000 of these funds may be used for the resettlement of members of the Nicaraguan opposition forces (and their families) who have terminated their military activities.

TRANSFER OF DOD FUNDS

SEC. 205. The President may transfer up to $30,000,000 of the funds appropriated by the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1986 (as contained in Public Law 99-190), for use in carrying out section 203(b)(1) and section 204 of this Act. The funds transferred under this section may include funds that have been made available for obligation beyond September 30, 1986, as provided by law.

REPORTS ON USE OF FUNDS

SEC. 206. No less frequently than once every 3 months, the President shall submit to the Congress a written report containing an accounting of any funds used pursuant to section 203 or 204.

NATIONAL COMMISSION ON CONTADORA

SEC. 207. (a) There is hereby established the National Commission on Contadora (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Commission"). The Commission shall—

(1) monitor and review the efforts of the Contadora nations to achieve a political resolution to the conflicts in Central America; and

(2) make recommendations with a view to building a consensus on United States policy toward Nicaragua.

(b) The Commission shall consist of an even number of members, such number to be determined jointly by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Minority Leader of the Senate, who shall each appoint half of the members of the Commission. A vacancy in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

(c) Not later than January 31, 1987, the Commission shall submit a report to the President and to the Congress with respect to its findings and recommendations. This report shall include—

(1) a detailed review of the status of the Contadora negotiations and United States support for those negotiations;

(2) a determination by the Commission of whether the Government of Nicaragua and the Nicaraguan opposition are facilitating the Contadora process;

(3) a recommendation on policies toward Nicaragua which the Commission believes represent a consensus that is sustainable and is supportable by the American people; and

(4) a recommendation on policies which the Commission believes will enhance peace and security throughout Central America.

(d) Members of the Commission shall receive no compensation on account of their service on the Commission, but while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of their duties on the Commission, shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703 of title 5 of the United States Code.

(e)(1) The Commission may employ experts and consultants in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

(2) Upon a request by the Commission, the head of any Federal agency may temporarily assign employees of that agency to the Commission in carrying out this section.

(f) Administrator of General Services shall provide to the Commission, on a reimbursable basis, such administrative support services as the Commission may request.

(g) Funds for the expenses incurred by the Commission in carrying out this section, including travel expenses, shall be provided by Secretary of State.

PRESIDENTIAL REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL AUTHORITY WITH RESPECT TO NICARAGUA

SEC. 208. (a) After considering the recommendations of the National Commission on Contadora contained in the report submitted pursuant to section 207(c), the President may submit to the Congress on or after January 31, 1987, a request for authority to take specified actions with respect to Nicaragua. The request must be accompanied by—

(1) the President's assurance that he has consulted with the Contadora nations and the Contadora Support Group nations concerning the proposed actions; and

(2) a description of the response of the Contadora nations and the Contadora Support Group nations to the proposed actions.

(b)(1) The provisions of this subsection apply, during the first session of the 100th Congress, to the consideration in the House of Representatives of a joint resolution with respect to the request submitted by the President pursuant to subsection (a).

(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term "joint resolution" means only a joint resolution introduced within 3 legislative days after the Congress receives the request submitted by the President pursuant to subsection (a)—

(A) the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "That the Congress hereby authorizes the President, notwithstanding any other provision of law, to take those actions with respect to Nicaragua which are specified in the request submitted to the Congress pursuant to title II of the Military Construction Appropriations Act, 1987.";

(B) which does not have a preamble; and

(C) the title of which is as follows: "Joint Resolution relating to Nicaragua pursuant to title II of the Military Construction Appropriations Act, 1987.".

(3) A joint resolution shall, upon introduction, be referred to the appropriate committee or committees of the House of Representatives.

(4) If all the committees of the House to which a joint resolution has been referred have not reported the same joint resolution by the end of 15 legislative days after the first joint resolution was introduced, any committee which has not reported the first joint resolution introduced shall be discharged from further consideration of that joint resolution and that joint resolution shall be placed on the appropriate calendar of the House.

(5)(A) At any time after the first joint resolution placed on the appropriate calendar has been on that calendar for a period of 5 legislative days, it is in order for any Member of the House (after consultation with the Speaker as to the most appropriate time for the consideration of that joint resolution) to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of that joint resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is in order even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to. All points of order against the joint resolution under clauses 2 and 6 of Rule XXI of the Rules of the House are waived. If the motion is agreed to, the resolution shall remain the unfinished business of the House until disposed of. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion is disagreed to shall not be in order.

(B) Debate on the joint resolution shall not exceed ten hours, which shall be divided equally between a Member favoring and a Member opposing the joint resolution. A motion to limit debate is in order at any time in the House or in the Committee of the Whole and is not debatable.

(C) An amendment to the joint resolution is not in order.

(D) At the conclusion of the debate on the joint resolution, the Committee of the Whole shall rise and report the joint resolution back to the House, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution to final passage without intervening motion.

(6) As used in this subsection, the term "legislative day" means a day on which the House is in session.

(7) This subsection is enacted—

(A) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the House of Representatives, and as such it is deemed a part of the Rules of the House, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in the House in the case of a joint resolution, and it supersedes other rules only to the extent that it is inconsistent with such rules; and

(B) with full recognition of the constitutional right of the House to change its rules to any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of the House, and of the right of the Committee on Rules to report a resolution for the consideration of any measure.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] and will manage the time on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] for 30 minutes.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment, which I offer on behalf of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON], the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES], and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS].

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is similar to an amendment I offered in April which passed the House overwhelmingly. This amendment emphasizes the need of a better United States policy toward Nicaragua, the need for negotiations and support for Contadora, the principle of nonintervention and the necessity of a ceasefire. It provides modest sums for refugees and resettlement, and modest financial support for the Contadora process. The amendment provides no aid to the Contras.

Mr. Chairman, this critical foreign policy issue has already been debated twice this year and five times in that past 3 years. So there is no need for extended discussion of this amendment today.

DESCRIPTION OF AMENDMENT

The amendment has six parts:

First, the amendment contains policy language which sets out what the primary objectives of United States policy toward Central America should be, then spells out a strategy for achieving those objectives and finally gives specific suggestions as to what should be the elements of United States policy toward Nicaragua. That policy should include:

A commitment to prevent the Soviet Union and its allies from deploying an offensive military capability in Central America that directly threatens the United States:

A commitment to protect Central American nations from attack;

Pursuit of a regional settlement through all diplomatic channels; and

A willingness to use, over the long term, incentives and penalties to respond to Nicaragua's behavior.

Second, the amendment reaffirms support for the Contadora initiatives and processes for establishing peace and security throughout Central America. In this section of the amendment, the Congress calls upon the President, in order to show support for the Contadora process, to announce that when all five Central American nations have signed an agreement based on the Contadora document of objectives, the United States will respond by taking positive steps.

Third, the amendment makes available up to $5 million, including the $2 million appropriated by the Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1985, for assistance to the Contadora nations to assist them in reaching a regional peace settlement. It also makes available assistance for peacekeeping operations to help implement any joint border agreement between Nicaragua and Costa Rica or Nicaragua and Honduras.

Fourth, the amendment makes $27 million available for those who have been displaced by conflict in Nicaragua, to be provided by the International Committee of the Red Cross or the U.N. High Commissioner for refugees upon that organization's determination of need for food, medicine or other humanitarian assistance. Up to $15 million of this amount would be available for resettlement of Nicaraguan opposition forces who terminate their military activities.

Fifth, the amendment creates a National Commission on Contadora to be appointed jointly by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Majority Leader of the Senate. The Commission shall report not later than January 31, 1987, with respect to its findings on the status of the Contadora negotiations, and shall make recommendations on policies toward Nicaragua which the Commission believes represent a sustainable consensus on policy toward Nicaragua, that will enhance peace and security throughout Central America.

In the final section of the amendment the President may, on or after January 31, 1987, request of Congress authorization to take further actions with respect to Nicaragua. A joint resolution authorizing the President to take action would be considered under expedited procedures.

THE CHOICE BEFORE CONGRESS

Mr. Chairman, the issue before us is not the potential loss of Central America:

The Congress is united on what the United States cannot tolerate;

The Congress is quite prepared to support any action that will repel Nicaraguan aggression against its neighbors;

The Congress will act to prevent the introduction of advanced weaponry or to prevent the use of Nicaragua as a base for Soviet and Cuban military forces. We will not let Nicaragua become a strategic base or a threat to its neighbors. We will support and strengthen the countries in the region that are trying to build democracies;

The choice before us in Nicaragua today is different: It is whether to try to pursue a military solution or to pursue over time a regional policy which addresses security issues first and democracy in Nicaragua over the long-term.

A military solution is going to require far more military aid to the Contras than $100 million and far more time than 1 year to enable the Contras to defeat the Sandinistas or to make them cry uncle, in the President's phrase—or it will require the introduction of U.S military forces.

A $100 million program for the Contras cannot accomplish the stated objectives of U.S. policy.

There are five important reasons for this conclusion:

First, there is no evidence that military pressure will work.

The heart of present policy is that military pressure will turn the Sandinistas into Democrats. There is no credible evidence that that will happen.

What is the evidence that pressure will work? Look at the record of the last 5 years:

The Sandinistas have consolidated their control over Nicaragua, increased internal repression, and have shown no interest in political pluralism or democratic reform.

The Sandinistas have increased the size of their military forces and the size of the Soviet and Cuban military presence. According to the administration, they are expanding the export of revolution throughout the Western Hemisphere;

Every trend of concern to us in Nicaragua has gone from bad to worse.

I asked a high administration official what evidence we have that our policy of military pressure has worked.

He told me that our policy has led to internal differences among the comandantes. I asked him if he could identify who the relative "moderates" were among the Sandinista leaders. He could not do so;

He also told me that a leader in a neighboring Central American country thought our policy of pressure would work;

This was the entire evidence he gave me.

So, our evidence that pressure works is the say-so of a Central American leader who is deeply dependent on American aid, and the fact that nine comandantes don't always see eye to eye. I submit to you this is not very compelling evidence of success on which to base a policy of military pressure.

All the evidence on the ground in Nicaragua demonstrates the opposite, that military pressure through the Contras is not working.

Second, present policy entrusts the American national interest to the Contras. They are a weak reed to lean on. They are an imperfect instrument with which to protect the U.S. national interest. Put me down as doubtful that aid for the Contras can be effectively translated into aid for our democratic cause.

Over the last 5 years, the Contras have received some $100 million in assistance, but they do not control a single town or village. There may well be some 27,000 Contras under arms but they control less territory today than ever before. They tend to stay primarily in safe haven in Honduras;

The overwhelming weight of American intelligence and military opinion is that the Contras have no chance of military victory in the foreseeable future. The outlook is for a prolonged, bloody stalemate;

The Contras have waged a war primarily against civilian targets, attacking buses on rural roads, agricultural workers, and civilian government officials. They attack Sandinista military units or other military targets infrequently. They have no credible presence in any urban centers;

Their human rights abuses and tactics of terror have been documented frequently by independent observers;

The Contras' principal political organization, UNO, is principally located in Miami and is little known inside Nicaragua. UNO is as much a creature of the CIA as it is a genuine resistance movement. The CIA has nursed it and rehearsed it.

UNO is better known today for press releases from Miami than for winning Nicaraguan hearts and minds;

Most Nicaraguans, rightly or wrongly, still identify the Contras as Somocistas, not freedom fighters. Few Nicaraguans know what UNO stands for; few know and trust its leaders;

There is strong evidence that assistance provided to the Contras in the last year cannot be accounted for. The GAO inquiry raised more questions than it answered. No one is able to verify how more than half the money has been used;

The Contra leaders have been more successful in Washington than they have been in Nicaragua.

Much has been made of the recent UNO meetings in Miami to forge greater unity and coordination inside UNO. Some progress may have occurred, but it is far too early to make any judgment about that. There are reasons for skepticism about the results of that meeting. The meetings were to last 2 days, but lasted 2 weeks. The United States engineered the meetings and heavily influenced, if it did not dominate, the proceedings. The key issue of civilian control over the military was not resolved. No personnel changes have been made among the top leadership of the military arm of the Contras controlled by the FDN. Mr. Calero retains control of the FDN, which continues as an independent political and military organization that forms part of the rebel front.

After 5 years and despite increasing discontent inside Nicaragua with the course of the Sandinista revolution, the Contras remain a question mark. There are simply too many questions about the Contras' political viability, adherence to democracy, military performance, respect for human rights and regional support for the United States to invest in them as guardian of the U.S. national interest in this area.

Third, the means proposed do not match policy ends.

Our rhetoric far outstrips our ability to perform—even with the $100 million. The President, for whatever reasons, is unwilling to ask for the resources needed to achieve his policy goals. He implies victory, but denies the resources for victory. There is, then, an ambitious goal, but very modest means to achieve it.

The most which has been claimed is that this package will lead to modest improvements in the Contras' military performance by the year's end.

Nobody sees the $100 million as the last request. This amendment is only a down payment on another request in early 1987. There are simply no good estimates today on how much time, how much money and how much training might be necessary to turn the Contras into a viable force. No one will answer the question what the United States will do if the $100 million does not work.

A highly placed adviser to the President admitted to me that $100 million may not be enough. My judgment is that this $100 million cannot do the job.

Fourth, the $100 million effort does not take into account the reaction of Nicaragua's Soviet and Cuban supporters to any United States military assistance. Experience suggests that when one side ratchets up the conflict, the other side responds in kind.

A high administration official told me that the Soviets would "back-off" if we supplied $100 million. If he is right, I will be surprised. My prediction is that if we provide more aid, so will the Soviets. The result will be more bloodshed, and a prolonged stalemate.

Our move in Nicaragua will not be the last move.

Fifth, the purposes of policy remain unclear.

The President supports $100 million for the Contras, but he has not made up his mind what it is we want to do with the Sandinistas. Is it to overthrow the Sandinistas, is it to pressure the Sandinistas to sign a Contadora agreement, or is it to pressure them to carry out internal reforms?

The President said in his 1986 State of the Union Message that we must provide moral and material assistance to those who wish "not just to fight and die for freedom, but to fight and win freedom."

The President said in February 1986, that it was United States policy "to promote a negotiated settlement in Central America and in Nicaragua based on the Contadora document of objectives."

The President also said in February that "substantial pressure" was necessary or the Sandinistas "will never embrace open, democratic norms."

These are completely different policies.

The President has not decided which it is he supports. He has been confused about his objectives and not clear about the role of negotiations in U.S. policy.

The problem with his proposal and its variants under consideration today is the same.

They are unwilling to make the fundamental choice the situation demands;

They go neither for a military solution nor a regional solution;

They will result in more bloodshed, more indecision and no solution;

They hope that a modest amount of additional military pressure on the Sandinistas will suddenly make conditions favorable, persuade the Sandinistas to have a miracle conversion, and force negotiations. But I see no evidence that the $100 million in aid or even another $100 million after it will make the Sandinistas come around. There is, so far as I can see, no evidence that the Sandinistas will change their stripes by reason of a modest amount of additional aid to the Contras.

The Sandinistas have no reason to negotiate with the Contras unless the Contras threaten their hold on power. The Contras pose no such threat with this modest amount of addition aid.

In sum, the low-level military pressure embodied by these proposals will get us nowhere.

The approach I propose is not, I acknowledge, problem-free. It is to let the Sandinistas exist—at least for the short-term—but stop their external conduct that threatens U.S. interests. This approach of isolation and containment of Nicaragua and pursuit of the Contadora process represents a better course than a half-hearted approach to a military solution.

I urge adoption of the Hamilton-Richardson-Barnes-Jeffords amendment.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not quite a perennial, but every time we debate the issue of the freedom fighters in Nicaragua, we are confronted by the Hamilton-Barnes amendment, which simply says to people in that area:

We will not help you defend the cause of freedom, free press, freedom of religion, but if you want to flee your country, if you want to become a refugee, we will try to give you some tents and some food and make it a little more comfortable for you.

That is really the choice that you are given today.

I really have a problem with this bill because it was up the last time and it passed the House overwhelmingly. Then, for some strange, bizarre reason, the leadership of the Democratic Party dumped the bill. They just terminated the proceedings; the committee rose; and it was never heard of again, except it has revived today. Once more, Easter is here and we have this concept of the refugee protection. Flee your home, we will give you clean tents and a blanket, and let the Sandinistas consolidate their Marxist-Leninist regime and we will pay you to leave your country.

Why was it not followed through last time when it passed overwhelmingly? I am the last person to question the sincerity of the chief sponsors of this amendment, because they keep offering it. They must like it, and they must mean it.

But I am at a loss to understand why the leadership, when it passed overwhelmingly, dumped it. They must not have wanted it, even though the sponsors did. But it is confusing, and I just express my bewilderment to you.

I assume the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES] is a cosponsor of this; am I correct?

The chief sponsor, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON], nodded in the affirmative, so I have that assurance.

I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention a contrast in philosophy from the cosponsor, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES] whose answer now to the Contras and to the Sandinistas is to create refugees in Honduras.

By the way, I wonder how Honduras would feel about creating refugee camps and inducing people to leave their homelands and come and settle in Honduras, or settle in El Salvador, or maybe in Costa Rica? I wonder if we are creating a problem for them? I wonder if we are giving enough money?

But in any event, to get back to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES], I was very much taken back in 1982, December 21, 1982, and I saved this. In fact, I carry it with me quite a bit.

It is a statement that the gentleman made on the floor and it is from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page E5369 (Daily Edition).

This is what the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES], chairman of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, said December 21, 1982, and I quote:

Nicaragua must now, unequivocally, choose the path of freedom, democracy, nonalignment, and respect of basic freedom for its people. Most recently, on September 29 I joined six other Members of the House in addressing a private letter stating these concerns to the Nicaraguan junta and directorate. That letter has not been answered.

Mr. Speaker, I must now say to the leaders of Nicaragua: What do we have to show for our efforts? What do we have to show for our forbearance? How much longer do you expect us to remain silent in the face of what seems to be the slow, but inexorable destruction of the ideals of your revolution?

I make this statement with full knowledge that it will be used by those who wish Nicaragua ill. But the seriousness of the situation demand it. Nicaragua must change course, and it must do so now.

1982. We are now June 25, 1986, and the gentleman's response to the consolidation of the Sandinista Communist-Leninist tyranny is "to-the-rear-march."

It is not to force these people to the negotiating table. It is to make refugees out of the people who love freedom.

Mysteries abound and some things are never made clear, but I just thought I would point that out to you and perhaps some day I will find why, in the gentleman's case, he has gotten more mellow toward the Sandinistas and most everybody else has gotten a little tougher.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has consumed 5 minutes.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS], one of the principal sponsors of the amendment.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, it is always a pleasure to follow the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] and I would like to point out to him that I was as shocked as he was, when the leadership pulled the bill after the Hamilton amendment passed, I thought it was my tremendous speech that I gave on the House floor that turned the body around and got a rousing vote for the Hamilton amendment last time. Then only to find, however, that that House's action was not followed through with, was, to say the least, disappointing.

I would point out that this is an extremely important amendment, notwithstanding the speech of my predecessor.

In fact will be the most crucial vote we have ever cast on U.S. policy in Central America. We've wrestled with this issue for much too long. But the course we set today will determine our relationship with our southern neighbors for decades to come.

Let's stop for a minute and ask what has occurred since our last vote. I would suggest that it was perhaps our vote last time that progress was made.

Because Congress held off on military aid to the Contras, the Contradora process has made great strides toward concluding a regional peace agreement. .

Yet, because we continue to support the Contras, our image in Central America is that we care more about overthrowing the Sandinistas than we do about helping the struggling democracies of the region.

We also are facing condemnation by the World Court for violations of international law by the CIA in the mining of Nicaragua harbors.

The question is: What should our Central American policy be? Today we will make a crucial and irreversible decision.

Nicaragua continues to abuse human rights, restrict basis democratic individual freedoms, and rely upon communist nations for military and economic support.

Our democratic friends in Central America are struggling to provide the basic economic necessities for their people and to institute social reforms.

Leftist insurgencies continue to threaten these democracies because people are discontent with the slow pace of real reform.

While the American presence is felt on the killing fields of Nicaragua, all of Central America is crying out for our help on the planting fields.

Today we must set our Nation on the proper course. As I have done so many times before, I urge my colleagues to reject all aid to the Contras. We must support a winning policy in Central America. We must approve the Hamilton substitute.

Once again we are being asked to hand over $100 million from American taxpayers to rebels who have abused their own people and who appear to have been abusing what money we have already sent them.

I am very concerned by the administration's inability to account for the $27 million we have already spent. When we are insisting on absolute accountability for all domestic programs, we can accept nothing less from foreign aid programs.

I am encouraged that the administration finally recognizes the value of providing economic assistance to other Central American countries. But this economic aid request deserves more consideration than it is now getting as an 11th-hour addition to the military construction bill. And tying it to a package of military support for the Contras is inappropriate and counterproductive.

Vermont's "Partner in the America's" is Honduras, and many people in my State have long been involved in direct aid development projects—the kind of economic assistance that is making a big difference in the lives of the Honduran people and building the infrastructure for democracy.

Vermonters involved in these projects have long recognized that a farmer's first concern is to have a plot of land and to be allowed to grow his corn. Any political system that can't meet basic needs such as this will be vulnerable to leftist insurrections.

By the same token, the success of democracy and economic development in any nation of the region will provide a stark example to the Nicaraguan people of what their government is not providing for them.

We are all concerned about the possibility of the Soviets gaining more influence in Nicaragua. Preventing them from doing so is a primary objective of the Hamilton substitute.

However, the Soviets have recently been looking for better relations with the United States. Their eagerness to reach some agreement on arms control and to maintain the SALT II limits centers around their economic need to prevent a costly arms race.

The Soviets are also unlikely to accept the drain on their economy that increased military and economic support for Nicaragua would require. Any improvement in Soviet-American relations would obviously be put at risk by a higher Soviet profile in Nicaragua.

If we provide military aid to the Contras, we effectively are forcing the Soviets to upgrade their own military involvement in order to save face by not letting down a regime which we have made dependent on them. However, without pressure from us, their own economic shortcomings will curtail their support for the Sandinistas.

Our Contra policy has so far gained us almost nothing and lost us a great deal. All we have succeeded in doing is to damage our image abroad and, in all likelihood, to bring down the condemnation of the World Court on us for our actions in Nicaragua.

If we want the world to see us as the defender of democracies—which we are—then we'd better start doing just that in Central America, or one day we may find no democracies down there at all.

I support the Hamilton amendment. I urge you to do the same.

□ 2050

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Chairman, I fear that this body has just made a mistake of truly monumental and historic proportions, a mistake which will come back to haunt us and our successors for many years to come. I think it may well be the historic equivalent of the Gulf of Tonkin resolution, and I fear there may be blood on the hands of this body.

Mr. Chairman, it has been 10 weeks since last we met to debate Nicaragua, but little has changed.

Diplomacy, not armed intervention, remains the policy favored by our democratic friends in Latin America. The leaders of the largest Contra group—the FDN—remain corrupt, politically ineffective and militarily inept.

The Nicaraguan Government—unified by our disunity—totters forward, scaring our adminstration, but not our people.

The arguments against voting $100 million in unrestricted Contra aid are also unchanged. Such aid would support a policy that is illegal, brutal, ineffective, historically ignorant, domestically and internationally unpopular, and that will deepen direct U.S. involvement in a war in which we cannot with honor participate and that we cannot win.

Let us remember that the majority of Nicaraguans are desperately poor. They were poor under Somoza; they are poor today. They cannot afford the designer eyeglasses of Daniel Ortega, but neither do they have condominiums in Miami or bank accounts in the Bahamas. Their enthusiasm is directed at neither the Contras nor the comandantes; they desire not rhetoric, but food and jobs and dignity.

It is to this majority that our policy toward Nicaragua should speak, and it is to this majority that this stale debate over Contra aid has been and remains stunningly irrelevant.

Mr. Chairman, it was true 10 weeks ago; it is true today—

You cannot blunt the appeal of Marx by giving millions more to the Contras; the Marx brothers of counterrevolution.

Better we concentrate on true Democrats and true democracy, seeking both not just in Nicaragua, but in Chile, in El Salvador, in Panama, and throughout the hemisphere. Better we refer back to our ideals, to the real Founding Fathers, to the time when those who governed America shunned privilege and did not fear the poor.

We can build democracy without, but not with, violence; if we offer not only elections, but also justice; and if we remember, despite our zeal to protect this hemisphere from foreign foes, to respect the national sovereignty and personal dignity of those we have in the past so often insulted and for all too long ignored.

Ten weeks have passed since last we debated Nicaragua; but the facts are the same and the choice is the same. Support the Hamilton substitute, oppose the Contra giveaway. Let us start over in Nicaragua, and this time, let us get it right.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, many of my colleagues today have alluded to the GAO report which came before our committee, the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, that made some innuendo and allegations that there might have been some corruption.

Much of that misunderstanding took place because the GAO was prohibited from sitting down and meeting with Ambassador Doomling and the Nicaraguan Human Assistance Office. Also, much of that occurred because the State Department was not notified of some of these allegations.

Yesterday, the State Department released, and I tried to gain some time from many of my colleagues today to refute their arguments but they would not yield, the State Department issued a report which, item by item refuted everything that the GAO alleged, and I do not think there is any doubt that most of the allegations were incorrect.

If there is any corruption, those who were involved in it should be prosecuted, and we should make corrections; but the bottom line is, there is a Communist menace in Central America that must be handled.

Now what does the Hamilton substitute propose, or the Hamilton amendment propose? Like many of my colleagues today, there really is not any tangible alternative. All he is doing is given $27 million in relief if the freedom fighters will declare themselves refugees and I guess head north.

I wonder if this amendment also provides money for preparing road signs saying, "This way to America." We already have a terrible problem at the Mexican-American border, with as many as 10,000 illegal aliens crossing the border a day, and with this type of an amendment, I'm sure that would turn into a virtual tidal wave.

We have a severe problem down there in stabilizing Central America, and this amendment does not do it. The people in this body, and I applaud the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY] as making a constructive recommendation on solving this problem, but the people of this body voted a few moments ago for a program that will help the Contras put pressure on the Sandinistas while also providing humanitarian and economic aid to Central America.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 additional seconds to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, already 400,000 of the 2.8 million people in Nicaragua have fled that country. If all we were to do was to give $27 million, as the Hamilton amendment suggests, as refugee relief, then we would see more people fleeing that country; there would be no stability.

I think we ought to stick with what we have done so far, and support to the end the legislation that we have already adopted.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN].

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, the saga of United States involvement in Nicaragua has more twists and turns than a Keystone Cops chase scene. Only it's not funny. The latest plan being bandied about calls for sending $400 million in U.S. aid to Central America—$100 million of that military aid to the Contras.

My constituents and I have got some better ideas about how to spend this money, if it must be spent at all. For starters, Congress could make sure the Coast Guard has the resources it needs to protect fishermen off the Oregon coast. We could invest in new infrastructure and roads in Washington County, OR—and reap the economic dividends for years to come. And Congress could say "no" to the budget wizards in the administration who keep telling us there isn't enough money to fund soil conservation or export programs for Oregon agriculture.

Spending $100 million on a mercenary army in Nicaragua has to be one of the bad investments of all time.

If Congress had assurances that this full $100 million would be spent to run the Contra army, this would still be a rotten idea. We don't have even that. According to an audit by the General Accounting Office, the State Department can't account for fully half of the $27 million in so-called humanitarian aid authorized for the Contras last year.

Of the money we do know about, precious little of it has reached its intended destination. One and a half million dollars has ended up in the hands of the Honduran Armed Forces. Other funds have been transferred to offshore banks in the Cayman Islands and the Bahamas. Ignoring these sleazy revelations, backers of the Contra army press ahead.

Advocates of the secret war against Nicaragua have come up with every wild plan imaginable to keep the Contras in business.

They've tried the under-the-table plan, where funds are shipped to the Contras through third parties and tax exempt foundations—sometimes in violation of U.S. law.

They've tried the circular funding plan, where humanitarian aid earmarked for the Contras wends its way to the Honduran military or offshore banks instead.

They've floated the installment plan, where military aid is to be doled out in small increments—as though that somehow makes the secret war more palatable.

Today they're trying the modified Marshall plan, where $300 million in economic development aid to Central America is used to cover a $100 million allotment to the Contras.

No matter how you package it, aid to the Contras is wrong. It draws the United States more deeply into a military conflict in Central America. It undercuts proposals for a regional peace treaty. And it hurts U.S. prestige around the globe.

And no matter what you throw in as sweetener, aid to the Contras is bad policy. Economic aid to Central America won't contain Nicaragua or lessen the hold of the military in Guatemala or El Salvador. In the absence of an administration seriously interested in diplomacy, it won't buy peace in Central America.

But, for 300 million pieces of silver, some have decided to vote for Contra aid.

This proposal will hurt U.S. security in more ways than one. The White House has proposed that the $300 million be foisted from ammunition accounts at the Department of Defense. That just doesn't make sense. Our ammunition stockpiles are already too low—some of our Armed Forces don't even have the supplies they need for basic training.

For 4 years Congress has grappled with the issue of aid to the Contras. The intransigence of both sides has prevented any diplomatic inroads. It's created a highly charged atmosphere that breeds further decay and further problems.

There are clear steps, short of open war, that the United States can take to force change in the Nicaraguan Government. We can cut off diplomatic relations. Impose more stringent economic sanctions. We can work with our European and Latin allies for a Contadora peace process that will work. These are options that should and could be explored.

There are a long list of reasons, military, political, and factual not to vote for Contra aid. Instead, the White House is following a script called "Rambo goes to Central America," hoping for a box office smash. They obviously haven't completed a market survey. The vast majority of Americans don't want to spend their tax dollars on such a show.

I urge the House to vote against all aid to the Contras so that we can put the issue of military aid to the Contras to rest—and move ahead with a plan that can bring some measure of stability to Central America and economic development to the United States.

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Hamilton amendment. I oppose aid to the Contras for two reasons: First, because of who the Contras are, and second, because of who we are.

In the words of one former Contra officer, the Contra leaders "have clean boots and dirty hands." Many of them are former members of the vicious Somoza regime. Some of them are violent abusers of human rights who terrorize their own countrymen and countrywomen. Others have been occupied with financial abuses and graft. We may never receive a full accounting of the millions they have already received.

Now, President Reagan has pledged to correct these abuses. Frankly, I do not believe this can be done; I do not believe we can exert sufficient influence on the Contras. But even if we could induce the Contras to clean up their act, aiding them would still be wrong.

We are a country founded on the rule of law. We believe that democracy can work. The values we stand for are the highest aspirations of humankind—individual liberty, freedom, justice. We should not diminish our leadership in the world by underwriting a violent conflict with $100 million. That money can only continue a no-win situation.

The administration's policy in Nicaragua is simply wrong—politically, militarily, but above all, morally. It is a march of folly that takes us further from, not closer to, our goals in Central America.

It is time to halt this march of folly, before we find ourselves marching to war. The Hamilton amendment would do that, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE].

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, the first observation I would make is that you don't have to bribe boat people to leave their country. What we ought to be considering if, perish the thought this amendment were to pass, is the amount of money for relocation in this country, as my colleagues from Indiana had earlier suggested.

The second point I would make is that pacifism is a long and honorable tradition; but so, too, is St. Augustan's concept of the just war.

Finally, I would say to those individuals that embrace this concept, instead of giving timely support to those who are fighting on behalf of freedom, democracy, human rights, the right to freedom of religion and freedom of association, freedom of the press, freedom of elections, to let those people participate in tonight's proceedings.

I think it would be very revealing, because we have heard eloquently presented the Neville Chamberlain argument, and I think those people would have reminded us what Winston Churchill attempted to tell the British people on the eve of the war.

Winston Churchill said,

If you will not fight when victory is sure and not too costly, you may have to fight with all odds against you and only a precarious chance of victory.

He said,

There may even be a worse fate, you may have to fight with no chance of victory because it is better to perish than to live as slaves.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES], one of the principal cosponsors of the amendment.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Hamilton amendment.

I take this time, Mr. Chairman, to respond to my friend from Illinois who correctly quoted me earlier. What I would point out to the gentleman is that he is absolutely correct in noting that for years I, and many of us here who are supporting Mr. HAMILTON's amendment this evening, have been just as critical of the actions of the Nicaraguan Government as the gentleman from Illinois and others who are in opposition to Mr. HAMILTON's amendment. Our view, however, is that the military policy that the United States has pursued in Central America and apparently will pursue more vigorously after tonight is actually helping the spread of communism in the hemisphere rather than retarding it. My personal view is that the actions of the Contras are about the best thing that the Sandinistas have got going for them.

As the foreign minister of one of the Contadora nations said to me recently, the toughest thing for the Sandinistas to take would be 6 months of peace.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support a policy for returning democracy to Nicaragua and peace to Central America. For the past 2 years, the House has decided against "Contra aid" in favor of giving the Saninistas the benefit of the doubt.

Like it or not, the Contadora process has been the policy choice of the U.S. Government. For the past 2 years, we have given the Sandinistas every opportunity to come to an agreement on regional security and domestic reconciliation without the threat of military aid. And to what end?

Mr. Chairman, I can't say we haven't made any progress during the history of this debate. At the very least, we are no longer arguing that the Sandinistas are "boy scouts" or representatives of the 1979 revolution which pledged basic, democratic freedoms. In fact, the past several years have confirmed our worst impressions about the Sandinistas. I challenge my opposing colleagues to deny the totalitarian nature of the Sandinista regime which they have defended in the past. Fortunately, we no longer have to explain the Sandinista plans for subjugating the country's church and press. And fortunately, for all the hundreds of million dollars in military aid and thousands of East bloc advisers, we no longer have to exhibit the Sandinistas' blueprint for strategic alignment with the Soviet Union.

My distinguished colleagues from the other side of the aisle have repeatedly harped that the administration's policy in Nicaragua is a failure. I admit that Nicaragua represents a failed policy, but it's not the administration's policy. The administration's policy was one of negotiation and military aid. We haven't given any military aid to the Contras for the last 2 years. This is a policy of the House. This is the failed policy of the House.

Mr. Chairman, we've all patiently waited for the Sandinistas to negotiate a peace and return to the pledges of the 1979 revolution. We all know the Contras have been patient. This was a movement characterized as artificially created by the CIA doomed to extinction without U.S. support. And yet, the Contras have survived and even grown, as we saw so well when the Nicaraguan Communists moved into Honduras. I believe we have a very strong policy here which was very clearly stated as the gentleman from Illinois pointed out here. I would like to state it very clearly. In 1961 it was President Kennedy in his inaugural address who said, let every nation know whether it wishes us well or ill, that we shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to assure the survival and success of liberty.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH].

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as a Member of Congress I recognize that in foreign affairs the benefit of the doubt should be given to the President; as a Republican I believe it should be given to the leader of my party.

But the Contra aid issue should not primarily be considered in a partisan context; nor as reflective simply of philosophical differences between Members of Congress and the administration. Fundamentally, the issue at stake is the constitutional process and the role of law, domestic as well as international.

Today Congress faces an awkward and largely unprecedented dilemma. In the case of Vietnam Congress abdicated to executive discretion both in the appropriations process and in the Tonkin Gulf resolution. But in the case of Nicaragua, Congress passed a resolution, which with Presidential signature became the law of the land, specifically prohibiting United States efforts to overthrow that government.

Now it is faced with a problem of responsibility. Given the preemptive executive decision to commence without congressional sanction a civil war in Nicaragua, Congress is placed in the difficult position of having to determine which is a greater misdeed: pulling the rug out from under armed mercenaries who were trained and equipped in violation of U.S. law and who are currently marauding a countryside in violation of international law; or pulling the rug out from under the values we cherish as profoundly American: the sanctity of law; the rights of others to determine their own destiny in their own way; a decent respect for the opinions of mankind.

Every American citizen, however incensed he or she may be at the leftward lurch of the Sandinistas, should be concerned that the law of the land which the executive is obligated to enforce, and the law of nations as reflected in treaties and covenants to which our country is party, is being cavalierly disregarded.

Under article 94(1) of the United Nations Charter, the United States has a commitment "to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party." On November 26, 1984, the Court determined, pursuant to paragraph 36:6 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, that the United States is a party to the case of Nicaragua versus the United States.

In this pending litigation the Court on May 10, 1984, issued interim measures ordering the United States and Nicaragua to refrain "from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity of the political independence" of each other, to respect "the duty not to intervene in matters within the domestic jurisdiction" of each other, and to "ensure that no action of any kind is taken which might aggravate or extend the dispute submitted to the Court."

On Friday of this week the World Court is expected to issue a definitive opinion updating its interim orders. At issue is whether the United States is in violation of customary international law and specifically its commitments to the UN charter, the OAS charter, the Bogota Pact, the Law of Neutrality, and a Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation with Nicaragua.

From the perspective of domestic law, at issue also is whether the executive has violated the so-called Boland amendment and encouraged violation of the Neutrality Act.

It is the judgment of this Member that the policies of the executive jeopardize our commitment to the rule of law.

So embarrassingly illegal have they become that the administration has been forced to attempt to withdraw from the jurisdiction of the World Court on this and similar political disputes and thus backtrack on an almost century-old U.S. commitment to utilization of an international tribunal for dispute resolution.

Here, it should be stressed that as far back as the administration of William McKinley, the United States supported the principle of international dispute resolution before an international tribunal and that even under the umbrella of an anti-League of Nations bias during the administrations of Harding and Coolidge we maintained our commitment to utilization of the then-established international court.

Today the fundamental issues of world politics are, in the first instance, how we contain and constrain weapons of mass destruction and, in the second, how we can best advance the rule of law. To refuse to submit disputes to the World Court and abide by arbitration decisions of that body is to deny our heritage.

What this country lacks at this time is not just a sense of the importance of law but a sense of political philosophy and history.

Thomas Jefferson, we should recall, basically borrowed his philosophy of revolution from John Locke. Locke argued, and Jefferson accepted, the notion that the distinction between a state of nature and civilized society is that civilization requires rules and third-party arbitration.

For civilization to survive in the nuclear age we have a responsibility to pay heed to rules, to expand the rule of law, to build up, not tear asunder, institutions of conflict resolution. Otherwise, the law of the jungle will prevail and, in Robbies' terms life itself will be "nasty, brutish and short."

From a historical perspective we must recognize that there is simply no evidence that America is very good at running a civil-war-oriented foreign policy. On the other hand, there is evidence, as recently provided in the Philippines and Haiti, that despots cannot stand for long when their policies don't serve the interests of their people.

The Sandinistas have fallen victim to a kind of ideological corruption. But instead of allowing the weight of their own mismanagement to sink their intemperate revolution, the administration leaped precipitously into the fray and backed a force that has helped unite rather that divide the people. The Contras have proven adept at escalating violence but totally incapable of winning either the hearts and minds of the people or the civil war itself.

Our intervention has proven counterproductive, helping solidify an irrationally leftist government. We have chosen to aid groups whose leaders are themselves corrupt, who have squandered taxpayers' dollars, who have caused thousands of their original followers to become so disdainful of the counter-revolutionary model set by their own leadership that they have broken out of their barbed-wire camps and emigrated to the United States.

The time has come to reconsider an ill-chosen path. Liberals may have erred by believing the Sandinistas wouldn't opt in the direction of police state controls. Nevertheless, our country has an obligation to stand by the side of law and a constitutionalist foreign policy, with the understanding that not only do procedural concerns matter but that adherence to proper rules in the long run is more likely to produce proper results.

If order is to be carved from the chaos that characterizes our time, the rule of law rather than the primeval urges of the jungle must guide policymakers.

As the premier lawmaking assembly of our time, Congress has an obligation not to undercut the worth of law itself. It is the rule of law and the constitutional process, not a particular policy, which above all is on trial today.

The only conservative, the only constitutionalist option the House has today is to cease providing illegal assistance to illegal groups advancing an illegal foreign policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH] has consumed 2 minutes.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time remains on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will advise the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] that the gentleman has 17½ minutes remaining and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] 13½ minutes remaining.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I have never heard the distinguished majority whip speak with more eloquence than he did today. I took down some of Mr. FOLEY's words. He said everyone in this House is interested in the protection of democratic values. And I accept that. He said today, June 25, that no one in this House will defend the government in Nicaragua. And I believe that has come to be in this distinguished Chamber, but such was not the case when I left here in 1982 and they were being described as Boy Scouts.

On one occasion, mercifully, a former Member ran out of memory on his Boy Scout oath after "kind, obedient, thrifty, trustworthy," he did not get to "reverent," mercifully, because of the persecution of the church that we see down there now.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY] said the sad daily chronicle of abuses by that government in Nicaragua is awful. He talked, Reverend, about the cold implacable government, Reverend. I have here 12 mint sets of the pictures of the glag concentration camps that the religious left in this country never talks about. I will save you a set, Reverend. I have a set for you, Mr. Speaker. The detail is incredible. The Zona Franca prison has at least 1,000 people in it. There is a picture here of the hated Somoza's only prison, Tipitapa. It is now five times as large in land mass, three times as large in physical buildings and structures. Somoza at his peak, according to Amnesty International, whom I respect most of the time, and America's Watch, one of the stronger voices on the political left in this country, they claim that Somoza at his worst had 500 political prisoners, 500. There are now 11,000 political prisoners. Amnesty does not argue with me on that figure. A little simple arithmetic means that the figure is 22 to 1, people who are suffering as prisoners of conscience because of their beliefs in Nicaragua over what the hated oligarch Somoza did to his own country.

I have 12 sets of these photographs. I would love to get rid of them tonight. I have my mint copy back in my office. Of course, I would have brought out the big blowups, but the cameras never do them justice here. They do not have the fine detail of our KH-11 imagery that most of the time we only see here in top secret session. Those missions run by the SR-71's and the U-2's, keep in mind there is a rumor that Castro himself pushed the button.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, could I get a mint copy?

Mr. DORNAN of California. You can get a mint copy, Mr. STRATTON, one of my heroes on the other side of the aisle.

The U-2 pilots that risked their lives to overfly these Communist nations, remember Rudolph Anderson was killed bringing to this Congress the U-2 information.

There is a story accepted by some in the intelligence community that, when the Soviet SAM batteries were set up in Cuba to protect their intermediate-range ballistic missiles that had nuclear warheads, they were, some of them, already unloaded and others were coming this way and President Kennedy was looking at the U-2 photographs. There is a story, I repeat, accepted by some in the intelligence community that Castro asked one of the Russian officers controlling the SAM battery, "How do you fire that thing?" They showed him how they were tracking Major Anderson's U-2 at that moment. The Russian said, "It is all ready to go. You press this button." And Castro himself reached over and pressed the button and murdered Major Anderson, who won the Distinguished Flying Cross posthumously.

Hopefully, we do not have to see SAM sites, Bear bombers, submarine bases arming Nicaragua to the teeth the way Cuba is armed. We already suffer one Communist Soviet colony in this hemisphere, and I think that the last vote was the right vote for this House. As much as I admire, truly respect my chairman on several committees, Mr. HAMILTON, I think it would be best if we pressed on from here and accepted the earlier vote.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS].

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, this truly is an awful day in our history. If the vote that was taken a half hour ago stands, this Nation is headed down another long tragic path toward war. I hope that decision still is reversible. I want to pay my respects to the distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives, without whose efforts over these long past 5 years we would have found ourselves at this point a long, long time ago. It is quite clear that this administration has intended the road to war rather than the road to negotiated peace as its policy in Central America all along. And it is only the sense of right and decency exercised by the Speaker which has prevented the President from having his way a long time ago. Today's decision is especially tragic because the people of the United States are not blundering into this position; we are, over their strong opposition. So why are we, their Representatives, so hell-bent on taking this country to war? It is beyond my comprehension or understanding. Mr. Chairman, instead of proceeding to a final vote this evening on the final package, we ought to allow the American people to have their voices heard overnight. Let us vote for the Hamilton amendment and then stop until tomorrow. Then after the American people have had a chance to react we can have a vote on final passage.

Mr. Chairman, 3 months ago the American people opposed President Reagan's policy in Nicaragua by 54 to 30 percent. Today, that margin of opposition has increased. Now only 29 percent favor Contra aid, and 62 percent oppose it. After all the hype, all the distortions, and all the misleading claims by this administration, the American people are more opposed to the war than ever.

The administration says it wants the money to set up a democracy in Nicaragua. And they've chosen a rare collection of drug smugglers, gun runners, mercenaries, embezzlers and murderers to play the role of founding fathers. But maybe we should pay more attention to democracy here at home. The American voters, the people we are pledged to represent, don't want another nickel of their money spent on this war. This November, they'll have a chance to make this message abundantly clear.

Later this week, the International Court of Justice will rule on Nicaragua's suit against the United States. Does anyone think the United States will win that case? The Reagan administration knows it will lose—it's the first American Government in 40 years to cut and run from the World Court.

Legally, this administration hasn't got a leg to stand on. It's illegal to organize an army to attack another country, it's illegal to mine harbors, it's illegal to hire people to terrorize civilians. If we're serious about the rule of law, let's build a policy which is consistent with the law.

One thing about this policy is clear: it is getting more expensive all the time. Last year the price tag was $27 million in so-called humanitarian assistance. Who wound up with the cash? The Honduran military got $1½ million; banks in the Cayman Islands got some of it; crooked suppliers apparently skimmed off a great deal of it. Now 12 months later, the administration wants to put $100 million—a fourfold increase—into this promising enterprise.

But that's only the beginning. The administration package appropriates $300 million in aid to be divided among four Central American countries; Guatemala—a country whose military is still killing civilians at the rate of 60 per month; El Salvador, a country which still lacks a free press or a functioning judicial system; and Honduras and Costa Rica as well, all without committee consideration or hearings.

Where is this policy really leading us? A Pentagon study released last month foresees possible expenditures of $9.1 billion or more every year, and a commitment of 100,000 ground troops in addition to air and naval forces, to contain Nicaragua. If we continue on the present path, that is just where we will wind up. The Contras cannot win. Their leaders steal supplies and embezzle funds destined for the troops. The troops commit atrocities against civilians, and destroy whatever chance they may once have had of winning the hearts of the Nicaraguan people. If we continue to pursue military victory at any price, we will have to do it with the lives of young Americans.

Negotiations are a viable alternative to this grim scenario, if we let them succeed. In September of 1984, Nicaragua accepted a draft Contadora package, whereupon the administration pressured our allies to withdraw their support. The same thing has happened again in recent days. Once again Nicaragua has expressed support for the latest Contadora draft, after much difficult negotiating, and once again it is United States allies Honduras and El Salvador which have expressed objections. At other times the reverse has been true. What is clear is that a negotiated accord is possible, if we have the political will to see it through.

The Hamilton substitute charts a constructive course in this difficult area. It will facilitate the achievement of a workable, enforceable regional peace treaty. It spells out legitimate American interests in the region and sets forth a range of means, consistent with international and domestic law, for securing those interests.

Furthermore, it provides up to $27 million in resettlement and relief assistance for Nicaraguans displaced by the conflict. It specifically allows up to $15 million for resettlement of Contra troops who cease military activities. This is perhaps the most important single provision in this legislation. It will assist in the process of demilitarization and reconciliation. And it will assuage the very real concerns of the Hondurans, who fear the effects of a long-term Contra presence in their territory.

Before we step into the quagmire which stands before us, let us pause to consider the consequences of continued escalation. We do not have to repeat one of the worst chapters in our history. We do not have to step into this quagmire. I urge my colleagues to vote for the Hamilton substitute.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR].

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, let me put this debate in its starkest terms. The issue before us is whether we will have war or peace in Central America and whether, in that war option, American forces will be committed.

We are voting tonight to decide the fate of a region and the fate of Americans in the future.

This administration does not want peace in Central America. They do not want the Contadora process to work, because they do not want a Nicaragua with a Sandinista government in place. The administration wants that government overthrown. They cannot do that if the Contadora process works. They want the military option, and pursuing the military option means, ultimately, American forces committed 19th-century style to military overthrow of the Sandinista government of Nicaragua.

One after another initiative toward peace has been stopped by this administration, pushed aside, ignored. The White House in fact even pulled the rug out from its own negotiator, Mr. Habib, when one of their own officials called his description of the situation in Central America as imprecise and in error.

Ultimately we will need in the neighborhood of 100,000 United States troops to contain Nicaragua, and funds escalating far beyond the $100 million the administration is asking of the American people and of this Congress.

We are wrong to pursue the administration's policy, even this bifurcated process of first providing nonlethal and then military assistance. We are wrong to take that step because it is an irretrievable movement toward war in Central America involving American forces engaged once again in Nicaragua. I urge your support for the Hamilton substitute.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Hamilton amendment.

Mr. Chairman, once again, the House faces a vote on aid to the Contras in Nicaragua who are seeking to overthrow the government of that country. Over the past 4 years, the House has consistently voted against military aid to the Contras. So-called humanitarian aid passed by a very narrow margin. These votes reflect the consistent opposition of the American people to a military approach to the problems of Central America. Public opinion polls and mail to congressional offices confirm that opposition. The American people are opposed to a military approach to Central America's problem because it is simply a bad idea, one that has been exacerbating problems instead of solving them. Many accounts of Contra atrocities and excesses, as well as the fraudulent use of American aid to their movement demonstrate not only the ineffectiveness of the military approach, but also its immorality and wastefulness. The House has repeatedly been asked to ratify a policy the American people reject and the House has repeatedly refused to vote for military aid to the Contras. We should again reject the policy of aiding the Contras and finally turn to a policy that has a chance of succeeding.

The current regime in Nicaragua has serious flaws and shortcomings. Its ideology and practices are offensive to most Americans. That does not mean that war is the only or the best approach we can take. Above all, no one should interpret a vote against war as an endorsement of the Sandinistas. That tendency on the part of some is offensive and unfair. No less an authority on Sandinista practices than the U.S. Catholic Conference recently issued a statement that says, "Pressures and attacks against leaders and institutions of the Catholic Church in Nicaragua have reached alarming proportions over the past year." The Catholic Conference continues, however, by rejecting military aid to the Contras. "Such aid merely intensifies and prolongs the conflict * * *" the document states.

Nicaragua's neighbors have also spoken out against a military approach to the regional problems and continue to support the Contadora process in pursuit of peaceful and rational solutions. Our European and Canadian allies have taken similar stands.

Nicaragua is s small country of fewer than 3 million people. Two-thirds of its economy is in the private sector. Political, religious, and social organizations continue their work despite the Sandinistas. The country is firmly within America's cultural orbit. Radio and television broadcast American movies and songs. Young Nicaraguan baseball players dream of playing in the major leagues in the great ballparks of the United States. These factors should be the foundation on which we built a policy. We should be working to strengthen the private sector in Nicaragua, instead of undermining it with sanctions and economic sabotage. We should be cooperating with the countries in the region to bring success to the Contadora process. We should coordinate with our European and Western Hemisphere allies to enhance private sector efforts to address poverty and illiteracy in Nicaragua and elsewhere in Central America. Above all, we should finally turn away from a misguided pursuit of military solutions to complex Central American problems.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 183, noes 245, not voting 5, as follows:

Mr. VOLKMER changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. McKINNEY and Mr. HORTON changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BARNES

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARNES: At the end of title II (as added to the bill pursuant to House Resolution 481) as amended by the amendment by Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma, add the following:

ACCOUNTING FOR PREVIOUS ASSISTANCE

SEC. 16. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, funds made available by this title may be obligated for assistance for the Nicaraguan democratic resistance only after the President submits to the Congress a report containing the following with respect to the funds previously made available for assistance for the Nicaraguan democratic resistance that are described in subsection (b):

(1) Information establishing that the goods or services for which any such funds were paid on behalf of the Nicaraguan Humanitarian Assistance Office were actually received by the intended recipients, specifically including any information showing that the invoices and receipts provided to the Nicaraguan Humanitarian Assistance Office are legitimate records of transactions. To the extent that such information is not available, an explanation of why it is not available.

(2) Information establishing that the suppliers of those goods or services were actually paid with those funds, specifically including any information showing that the invoices and receipts provided to the Nicaraguan Humanitarian Assistance Office are legitimate records of transactions. To the extent that such information is not available, an explanation of why it is not available.

(3) Information concerning disbursements from the bank accounts to which any such funds were paid, specifically including the identity of the individuals and entities to whom those disbursements were made and the relationship of those individuals and entities to the goods and services with respect to which those funds were paid on behalf of the Nicaraguan Humanitarian Assistance Office.

(4) Information concerning any currency transactions entered into with funds in any bank account to which any such funds were paid, including information on the use of any profits derived from such transactions.

(5) Any possible violations of United States law which have been identified with respect to any such funds.

(6) An explanation of any payments, made from the bank accounts to which any such funds were paid, to any government official (including a member of the armed forces), candidate for political office or political leader of any country in Central America or to any relative of any such official.

(7) An explanation of each instance in which there are discrepancies between the amount of any such funds paid into a bank account and the amount of payments made to suppliers from that account.

(b) The funds referred to in subsection (a) are the $27,000,000 appropriated for "HUMANITARIAN ASSISTANCE FOR NICARAGUAN DEMOCRATIC RESISTANCE" by the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1985 (Public Law 99-88), except for any such funds that (1) were paid to suppliers for purchases within the United States and (2) were not deposited in bank accounts into which any such funds for purchases outside the United States were also deposited.

(c) The report submitted pursuant to subsection (a) must also include assurances that—

(1) the Government of the United States, and

(2) the government of any foreign country in which assistance is delivered which was paid for with the funds described in subsection (b) or with funds transferred pursuant to section 205(a), will permit visits to that foreign country by employees of the United States General Accounting Office and by employees of the United States Congress for purposes of verifying the delivery of such assistance.

(d) The report submitted pursuant to subsection (a) shall also include full and complete information on the involvement, if any, of members of the Nicaraguan democratic resistance in drug smuggling.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES] will be recognized for 22½ minutes and a Member opposed will be recognized for 22½ minutes.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois qualifies, and will be recognized for 22½ minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES].

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 9 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment on behalf of myself and the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA]. Our amendment would place into law the following proposition, which we believe to be eminently sensible: Before we start to spend the $100 million in additional funds for the Contras that apparently is going to be appropriated tonight, we should at least do what we can to find out what happened to the $27 million that we authorized last year.

Frankly, I really do not see how anybody here can oppose the concept of our amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as I think most of our colleagues are aware, the Committee on Foreign Affairs has had the General Accounting Office doing a review of the expenditure of the $27 million that was appropriated last year. This was done at the request of the committee, and the GAO has been auditing the expenditure of those funds. We have also used some subpoenas of bank accounts into which some of those funds were deposited in order for the GAO to reach as many of the records as possible.

Let me briefly outline some of the GAO's findings. The GAO expected to find payments from brokers' accounts to suppliers to the Contras in the region roughly equal to State Department deposits into the accounts. They did not find this. For example, $4.4 million was paid into the four broker accounts that the GAO analyzed, but only about $786,000 of this was paid into Central America, and only $185,000 approximately of that was paid to the suppliers who had provided the invoices and receipts upon which the State Department had deposited the money.

Most of the funds in these accounts were sent to U.S. or offshore banks or remained in the accounts. The Treasury paid one broker account, for example, $654,000 based on invoices and receipts received from three suppliers in the region, but only $185,000 has been paid to these suppliers out of that account. The rest remains in the account drawing interest.

Treasury paid $3.3 million into another broker account based on invoices and receipts from 22 companies or individuals. No disbursements from this account to any of these companies or individuals could be identified by the GAO. Almost all of this money plus deposits from other sources went to companies and individuals in the United States, $3.4 million, and to offshore accounts in the Cayman Islands and the Bahamas, about $380,000. As I say, none of it went to the suppliers who had provided the receipts and invoices to the State Department upon which the payments were made.

The Treasury paid $244,000 approximately into another broker account based on invoices and receipts from a commercial supplier for uniforms. None of these funds went to that supplier. But two checks totaling the exact same amount, $243,750, were issued by this broker to the armed forces of Honduras.

On November 16, Treasury paid $869,122 into the Miami account of a Central American supplier. On November 18, 2 days later, payment of $742,939 was made from this account to the armed forces of Honduras. On January 8, Treasury deposited over $400,000 into the same account, and on January 10, payment of $450,000 was made from that account to the armed forces of Honduras.

In summary, what the GAO found was that approximately $1.5 million was paid to the armed forces of Honduras. Only in a few instances did the money go to the purported suppliers, raising obviously a very serious question of false invoicing.

I should note for my colleagues that submitting false invoices and receipts to the Federal Government for payment is a crime punishable by both fine and imprisonment.

If any of my colleagues have questions, by the way, about these receipts and the invoices, we have copies of them here. I have offered that to my friends in the minority who have questioned the seriousness of this investigation before. None of them has requested to see the documentation that we have, but we have them available here on the floor and we are making them available to the Justice Department.

I have spoken to the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and I have spoken to the Assistant Attorney General of the United States in charge of the Criminal Division, notified them that there is a serious possibility of criminal activity involved in the expenditure of these funds and that all the material will be provided to them.

Most of the money went to people and organizations with no apparent relations to the programs and is untraceable from there.

Let me note, for example, that there was a payment from a supplier to the Cayman Islands bank account. There was a payment from one of the suppliers who received United States Treasury funds to the Cayman Islands bank account of a colonel in the Honduran Armed Forces.

There was more than $75,000 in payments to a person who appears to be, and we do not know because we have not been able to ascertain this, but appears to be the wife of a key Honduran military officer, reported to be the principal contact with the FDN. We requested the State Department to tell us who this individual is. Presumably the State Department knows who is receiving these funds. We have not received that information.

There were over $40,000 in payments to leading Honduran politicians.

There were also additional payments to a person who appears to be related to one of these politicians, and again we have requested information from the State Department to find out who these individuals are. Presumably the State Department knows that.

A lot of the taxpayers' money, the GAO found, is still sitting in Miami bank accounts drawing interest for brokers. Some of the money was transferred to other banks and offshore banks in the Cayman Islands and the Bahamas.

So to say the least, Mr. Chairman, these findings raise some very serious questions, questions to which the administration has been notably unwilling to respond. Typically, they have been calling a lot of people a lot of names, but they have declined now three invitations to appear before the Foreign Affairs Committee to explain these findings, and as we prepare to vote tonight on this issue not one of these questions has been satisfactorily explained

In my view and in the view of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], we ought to at least have some answers before new money is spent. Our amendment, we think, takes a very moderate approach. It simply requires that the administration submit to the Congress a report, no additional vote required, no certification process involved here, simply a report from the administration on what information it has about the expenditure of these funds, and also, as Members know, there have been some serious allegations that the Contra leadership has been involved in drug smuggling.

We asked the administration to report on what information it has, if any, on drug smuggling by the Contras. The administration may very well come back and say that they do not believe that is true, or they may say they have no information, but this would simply require a report.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is an eminently reasonable amendment. I cannot imagine why any Member would vote against asking the administration to give the Congress a report on what information it has available to it and where the taxpayers' money went and what information it has available to it on whether or not the Contras were involved in drug smuggling.

We are not saying that there needs to be any additional votes on this issue.

We are providing and we have provided everything we have, all this information to the Justice Department. It really is the responsibility of the Justice Department to pursue a possible criminal investigation if they determine that is warranted on the basis of the material that we have.

Again, we have that information available to our colleagues here tonight. If you believe, for example, as the State Department has suggested in a factsheet they put out that the funds paid to the Honduran military were for uniforms, I would urge you to come over and look right here on the floor tonight at the invoices provided by a supermarket in Honduras that said those funds were for food and the funds were then paid to an account for that supermarket to pay for the food and then the account paid the money to the Honduran military.

Now we are told that it was for uniforms.

It is a criminal offense in the United States, punishable by both imprisonment and fine, to submit false invoices to the Federal Government for payment out of the Treasury. If you have any questions about whether that happened, I would urge my colleagues, before you get up and say it did not, come over here and look at the material.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 8 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this is like coming to grips with a squid in the water. As soon as you get close, the ink comes out.

I am trying to figure out from the debate today how much money here is not accounted for. The gentleman from California [Mr. LEVINE] said half of it. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] said all of it, and I understand the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES] said 25 percent of it on a television show the other night. It is pretty hard to nail down.

I do know that this amendment and the kangaroo court investigation that preceded it are a classic example of how power can be abused.

This was and is an effort to intimidate a friendly country, intimidate military officers of a friendly country, intimidate suppliers who are cooperating in supplying in a guerrilla war and attacking a career ambassador, Ambassador Duemling, who is head of the Nicaraguan Humanitarian Assistance Office.

On the specific allegations made by Chairman BARNES today, among several of them, he referenced material the GAO has been prohibited from showing to the State Department.

The game plan is——

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that one point?

Mr. HYDE. Not until I am finished, and if I have any time, I will.

We all should have gotten time from the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY].

The game plan is that Chairman BARNES prohibits the GAO from even asking the State Department about questions it does not understand and then the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES] goes to the floor and makes his charges.

If the State Department could ever see the GAO records, it would answer the questions, just as it answered the venomous allegations of a bribe to General Lopez.

The Chairman's procedure is designed to hide information, ruin reputations and keep a blindfold on the GAO by preventing full cooperation with the State Department.

This was no honest bipartisan search for the truth. The deterioration of objections to Contra aid is fascinating. Early on the Sandinistas were not Communists. They were just Socialists with a human face.

Next it was Contra atrocities.

Next it was the Contras are ineffective.

Next it was the surrounding countries opposed the program.

Now they are reduced to good old reliable corruption, diversion of funds, and to make sure an honest bipartisan inquiry could not possibly occur, the investigation was not undertaken by the House Intelligence Committee as it was in the other body, but by the majority, the Democrats on the Western Hemisphere Subcommittee. They kept us out of it.

I am on that committee. There are several of us on that committee. We were not involved. This was a Democratic expedition run by the Democrats for their purposes.

They trotted out the GAO, and guess what they did. They forbade them to talk to the State Department. They subpoenaed private bank records, forbade access to them, and then demand that the State Department testify about them.

They stacked the deck. They tilted the table and they shaved the dice.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on this?

Mr. HYDE. No; not until I am through.

Mr. BARNES. The gentleman is making some incredibly serious accusations.

Mr. HYDE. That is right, that is right.

Mr. BARNES. The gentleman will not yield?

Mr. HYDE. No; I will not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the time.

Mr. HYDE. The gentleman has made serious accusations against allies of ours, against decent people, and that is a vulnerability somebody has to defend.

Now, the program was part overt and part covert. The delivery is covert, down on the scene and in country.

The proof of those deliveries is through CIA reports, which I suggest the gentleman has not seen. They are in the Intelligence Committee, where they belong.

If this was an honest, nonpolitical inquiry, the Intelligence Committee would have looked at this so we could look at those covert reports and analyze them.

That was done in the other body, by the way, and the chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, no friend of this program, investigating it from top to bottom and his report has been issued and I am going to read a part of it to you.

This is dated June 19:

News release, Senate Select Committee on Intelligence.

NHAO's Nicaraguan Human Assistance Office practice of paying suppliers through Miami bank accounts is legitimate and reasonable. I concur with NHAO's view that payments to these accounts for—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will caution the gentleman that under the rules the gentleman should not be reading from Senate documents.

Mr. HYDE. I should not be reading from a Senate document? This is a press release.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order. The Chair has indicated what is proper under the rules.

Mr. HYDE. I thank the Chair.

The release goes on:

I concur with NHAO's view that payments to these accounts for goods and services received complete the transactions, and that there is no basis for asking suppliers to explain how they utilize these funds after they have been received in exchange for supplies;

The GAO's inquiry has turned up no proof of wrongdoing or mishandling of funds. I note that the GAO has been very careful to testify that its inquiry raised questions but did not provide answers;

While NHAO's ability to monitor the delivery of humanitarian assistance in the region is limited, all available evidence supports the conclusion that the aid, as Congress intended, is getting through. Most importantly, the leaders of the resistance have pronounced themselves fully satisfied on this score;

Unfounded speculation and innuendo have done a grave disservice to honorable people in both the United States and Central America, people without whose support and cooperation this program could not have been realized. In some cases, imprudent disclosures may have placed lives in danger;

"Finally, I would like to commend the efforts of Ambassador Duemling and his staff. Duemling is an outstanding public servant who has labored effectively to implement the will of the Congress under difficult and trying conditions. He has been unfailingly responsive to the oversight concerns of the Congress. He and his staff deserve the support and thanks of Congress and the American people."

Now, that is what the other body's Select Committee on Intelligence found after an exhaustive review of both the classified information, the delivery by the CIA and the vouchers and receipts at this end.

There are many diplomatic sensitivities in this program that are totally ignored.

Now, the Democratic Study Group got a special report out, "Contragate" it is fetchingly called.

There are answers to every one of those allegations. But do you know what is sad? It is sad that this investigation was done to achieve a purpose, which was not a search for truth. If you were looking for the truth, you should have said to the GAO, "You sit down with the State Department, the people that administer this program, go over the vouchers, go over the records and let them answer your questions."

But you forbade that. Yes, sir, you did. The State Department people are here. They are in room H-236. And I am telling you that is what happened.

You can laugh. It is not your reputation that is being dragged in the mud, the Democratic Study Group's compendium of hyperbolic smears. If I had the time, I would read some of them to you, but they are outrageous and you ought not to be proud of it.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

A couple of quick comments. One, again, none of my colleagues have yet availed themselves of the opportunity to look at the material. They make all these statements, but they are not willing to look at the material.

Second, the State Department has been offered numerous opportunities to appear before the Committee on Foreign Affairs to respond to the findings of the GAO.

Third, the General Accounting Office has not only been in contact with the State Department, but we have shared everything we have with the State Department. The General Accounting Office briefed the State Department at the same time that it was briefing the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It made its report available to the State Department at the same time that it made its report available to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

We did not know what the General Accounting Office would find when we asked the GAO to do its usual professional audit. No one knew what the subpoenas of those bank records would find. We did not know that we would find payments to Honduran officers and to relatives. We did not know we would find all of that.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], a cosponsor of this amendment.

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, two preliminary remarks. I find it very interesting that we have not heard specific responses to what I think are very specific allegations presented by the GAO. There are arguments about partisanship and procedure, but no specific answers to the allegations that we have presented.

Second, if the State Department has those answers, then they really have nothing to fear from this amendment. All we are basically asking is that they provide that information so that we can look at the responses to the allegations that are being made.

We have a responsibility, it seems to me, regardless of how we voted, either for or against Contra aid, to ensure that the funds are being spent for a specific purpose outlined by the Congress. Last year, when we appropriated the $27 million for Contra aid, included in that law was a requirement that the President set up procedures and controls to ensure that that money was being used for humanitarian aid. That was included in the law, procedures, and controls to ensure that the aid was being used for humanitarian purposes.

But the GAO investigation has established, and I urge my colleagues to look at it, it is a very specific and thorough investigation. Their determination is that there are insufficient procedures to determine that in fact these funds were used for humanitarian aid and that, indeed, there is evidence to show that the funds were used for other purposes. Let me give Members some examples from the GAO report.

First of all, the way the funding was supposed to go was that invoices and receipts were supposed to be received at the State Department. They, in turn, then would deposit sums into the broker accounts, broker and supplier accounts in Miami. Those accounts would then funnel the money to the suppliers, obviously to pay them for what they showed on their invoices and receipts.

What the evidence shows is that instead of the money flowing to the suppliers, and in some instances it is down to about 4 percent, the money was flowing to these areas: To the Honduran army. Checks were paid to the Honduran Army. Checks were made out to banks located in the Bahamas and in the Cayman Islands. Checks were made out to individual corporations in the United States not related to any receipts or invoices. And there is money that is still in the bank that is drawing interest that has not been paid to anybody, in the vicinity of one-half million dollars.

The second chart gives us an example of a specific account that was looked at by GAO. The invoices said that they ought to pay $3.3 million to this account; $3.3 million went into this account; $150,000 went into Central America. Zero went to the suppliers that showed on the invoices and the receipts.

Instead, where the money went to was to U.S. companies to the tune of $3.4 million, and again to those banks located in those islands, not related to any receipts of invoices.

The last example I want to point out is another account that GAO looked at. In this instance, $243,750 was put into an account based on receipts that were made by certain suppliers. The suppliers got zero out of that account. Instead, two checks were made out to the Honduran army, exactly 2 days later and in exactly the same amount.

I think the evidence that is being presented by the GAO is very clear, very specific, and very precise. The responses we get back are not specific and not precise. As a matter of fact, the State Department is basically saying once the money went into the account, we do not care about how it went out or tracked it at all. Well, I do care and you should care, because the law cares, and the law says that we ought to establish procedures to make sure that what came out of these accounts went to the suppliers who offered these invoices.

You and I both know in these days when we talk about budgets that we would simply not tolerate this kind of evidence in any other program. Food stamps, nutrition, health care, housing, you name it; we would not tolerate it and we ought not to tolerate it here.

The point of this amendment is to get the information from the State Department and from the administration, answers to these specific issues: Where did these checks go? Why did they not go to the suppliers? Where is the evidence that, in fact, the Contras received those supplies?

The point of this amendment is that we want to know where the money has gone, and we should not provide one dime until we have that answer. Surely, we owe that to ourselves, to the Nation, and to the taxpayers.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one quick question?

Mr. PANETTA. I would be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman asked the Intelligence Committee of the House to look into this?

Mr. PANETTA. In response to the gentleman's question, I have seen the classified documents, and it had briefings from the CIA. They do not answer these questions.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. The Intelligence Committee of the Senate has conducted an investigation. I just wonder why the gentleman is reluctant to have the Intelligence Committee of the House conduct a like investigation.

Mr. PANETTA. When we get that information directly from the CIA and it does not provide the answers, something is wrong.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DEWINE].

Mr. DEWINE. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

My colleagues, when one first looks at this amendment, it looks like an innocuous, motherhood, apple-pie amendment. Who in the world could be against this? Read it. Just read it.

This is a gutting amendment. Make no mistake about it. This is probably the most important vote we are going to cast tonight. If this passes, it guts this program, and that I suspect is what my friend on the other side of the aisle would like to see happen.

The problem is, you get the right answer by how you frame the question, and what is the real question that this House should be concerned about? What are the American people legitimately concerned about?

What they are concerned about is this: When we spend our money, do we get value in return?

I just bought a car, the first time I bought a car in 10 years. I went into Monty Zinn Chevrolet and I bought a car. I did not ask Monty what he did with that money. I did not say, "Monty, when you put this in the bank, I want to see who you pay, if you pay your supplier, if you pay GM or who you pay, and I do not want to trace it back to the third and fourth generation. I care about one thing. Did you give me a car and was it what I paid for?"

That is the question. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] has already referred to what the conclusion was that was made by the Department of State, what the conclusion was from the CIA information, from the vouchers, that the goods were getting through. That is the bottom line. The goods are getting through.

In the other body, the chairman of the Intelligence Committee, Senator DURENBERGER, said all available evidence supports the conclusion that the aid, as Congress intended, is getting through.

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cautions the gentleman not to allude to Members in the other body. Under our rules, that is improper.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. Chairman, I would ask my colleagues to look at the words on the second part of the amendment.

"The report submitted pursuant to subsection (a) must also include assurances that (1) the Government of the United States, and (2) the government of any foreign country in which the assistance is delivered," assurance from that foreign country that borders on Nicaragua, that they "will permit visits to that foreign country by employees of the United States General Accounting Office and by employees of the United States Congress," and we must have assurance from that country.

What do you think the odds are of that if you are a neighbor to a country that has the biggest military in that whole region of the world?

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] was correct. It is overt to us, but Lord, if you were down there on their border, the border of Nicaragua, you would insist that it be covert.

To say that it has to be overt to those countries down there means that you kill the program.

That is right. We have just gotten the answer. You want to kill the program. Do not kill this program.

My friends, the evidence is clear. GAO never, contrary to what has been said on this floor, the GAO has never once, and we cross-examined them and I was there for every single hearing, as my colleagues were. They never said there was any evidence that there was stealing or money misspent.

That is what the testimony was. Keep in mind, again, the real question. Are the goods getting through? Are we getting value for what we paid for? The answer is clearly "Yes."

Do not be taken in by this amendment that sounds wonderful.

I would submit, if the Barnes amendment was law in 1944 or 1945, D-day never would have occurred because I could not have verified every single penny was not misspent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will observe that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] has 10½ minutes remaining and the gentleman from Maryland

[Mr. BARNES] has 7½ minutes remaining.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN].

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] who preceded me said that he has not received specific responses.

Let me give the gentleman, again, a specific response, a specific response that is based on an investigation by an intelligence committee with use of CIA and other intelligence capabilities which the GAO did not have when ordered to do so by the chairman of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs.

One more time, to the gentleman from California, that investigation determined "NHAO's practice of paying suppliers through Miami bank accounts is legitimate and reasonable." It is legitimate and reasonable.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCAIN. I will if I have time.

I concur with NHAO's view that "payments to these accounts for goods and services received complete the transactions and that there is no basis for asking suppliers to explain how they were utilized after they have been received in exchange for supplies."

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCAIN. If I have time. I will say it four times: If I have time; if I have time; if I have time; if I have time.

Mr. PANETTA. If the gentleman is going to refer to my argument——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona has the time. The gentleman from Arizona refuses to yield.

The gentleman may proceed.

Mr. MCCAIN. The GAO's inquiry has turned up no proof of wrongdoing or mishandling of funds. I repeat that: The GAO's inquiry has turned up no proof of wrongdoing or mishandling of funds.

I note that the GAO has been very careful to testify that its inquiry raised questions, but did not provide answers. That brings us to a part of the GAO report which has been overlooked by the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES] and the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

That is the summary. Most people like to look at the summary. Let me quote to you the summary; it is very brief.

This is from the GAO, this was the basis of the shocking and appalling facts that were brought to the attention of the chairman of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs. "In summary, the examination of the bank records has, for the most part, only raised more questions." Let me repeat: "only raised more questions."

"Moreover, there is enough evidence to be concerned," to be concerned, "that humanitarian assistance may not be reaching the intended beneficiaries." I repeat, "may not be reaching the intended beneficiaries."

Without adequate controls, and by that, I mean mechanisms to validate invoices and receipts, trace payments to suppliers and verify deliveries in use, that concern will remain.

This summary of what the GAO determined is far different from what you have just been hearing. The GAO was very, very careful in their summary because they expressed concern. All of us are concerned. All of us should be concerned that every dime of the taxpayer's dollars is not misspent or wasted. But that is a far cry from the portrayal that has been made here of what happened to those funds.

Let me point out something else that was mentioned in a press release from the other body. "Unfounded speculation and innuendo have done a grave disservice to honorable people in both the United States and Central America, people without whose support and cooperation, this program could not have been realized. In some cases, imprudent disclosures may have placed lives in danger."

We are playing a very dangerous game here. There is a war going on down there. I think it would behoove all of us to not have a repetition of a situation, for example, where the GAO said there was a certain leader and the chairman of the committee said, "Well, let us just say outright that it is the Commander in Chief of the Honduran Armed Services because everybody knows that."

I believe that is taking a great deal of responsibility which is totally unwarranted.

There are sufficient procedures if we use the intelligence capabilities that we have to track what happened to this money.

Time after time after time, the GAO witness stated that there was insufficient evidence because there was insufficient capability on the part of the GAO to track these to completion.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I think it really behooves Members to look at the GAO report because, first of all, I think the statement made that the gentleman read is a correct one, but it also was preceded by this conclusion by the GAO on the front of the testimony:

"Overall, we have concluded that the State Department does not have sufficient procedures and controls to ensure that the program funds are being used for the purposes intended by law."

That is the conclusion of the GAO and that is the reason we need this information.

The point is this: If the answers are there, there is nothing to fear. Let us get those answers.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, the Members on this side of the aisle seem very convinced that the other body sees no problems with the Contras, be it in drug trafficking or be it in corruption.

I would refute that and read from a wire story today, an AP wire story as follows: "The Senate Foreign Relations Committee on Wednesday ordered a staff inquiry into allegations that Nicaraguan rebels have engaged in drug trafficking, gun-running and corruption." After a 2-hour closed-door meeting, Senator LUGAR, committee chairman, said a staff report on the allegations would be prepared and submitted to the panel.

So I do not think that the other body believes that the Contras are the founding fathers.

I would like to engage the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES] in a brief colloquy.

Is the gentleman familiar with the information from the Select Committee on Narcotics involving drug traffickers?

Mr. BARNES. If the gentlewoman will yield; yes, I am.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. BARNES, do any of the people mentioned by the Select Committee on Narcotics appear in any of the accounts you have subpoenaed?

Mr. BARNES. If the gentlewoman will yield, the answer is yes; some of them have received payments from the accounts. A company that is alleged to be a conduit of the drugs figures prominently in one account, and a person identified by the committee acknowledged receipt of goods purchased with humanitarian assistance, but which we now believe may have been based on false receipts.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman for his great contribution, and my friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

This is really a children's issue. I talked to one of my colleagues who went to Nicaragua. He said the Contras who were fighting on the lines; not the ones in the suits who are around here, are 14 and 15 years old; and the kids that are getting drugs on that same network are 15 and 14 and 13 years old; so it is a children's issue.

My hat is off to both gentlemen for this fine amendment.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GINGRICH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I just want to comment on the last speaker, that the other body did not review the Contras and drug running; they reviewed the program of disseminating the $27 million in humanitarian aid. They determined the money was spent and the goods were delivered.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, let me just say that we presented in the last debate a picture of one of Thomas Borge's top assistants, a Sandinista, a Communist, loading a C-130 at a government air strip with marijuana. I think that clearly shows which side is heavily involved in the drug trade.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Chairman, this is not a university debating society. This is not a studies group resolution committee; that is not a stump from which to maneuver or give speeches for election or reelection. This is the U.S. House of Representatives, and we are engaged in the deadly serious business of legally defining the ground rules for the struggle to save freedom in Central America from the Soviet empire.

For the purpose of this particular amendment, Lafayette's picture should be turned to the wall.

The gentleman asks us to look at documents. Here is a sample of the documents he asked us to look at. It shows: Beans, 5,241. Beans, 5,124. There are lots of documents.

I would suggest to this House, before you vote for Mr. BARNES' amendment, Members should read the transcript of the utterly unfortunate hearing held by Mr. BARNES' subcommittee.

Let me quote two levels. First of all, GAO. Again and again. Page 20:

I think that any comment on my part to that would get into the realm of speculation—

Refusing to follow the Chairman's lead.

Page 58:

I think that we can certainly provide a full accounting of the funds to the Department of the Treasury.

Page 59:

We have no evidence the humanitarian assistance is not reaching those folks.

Page 77:

Without exception, I believe there is an indication in those documents that the goods for services therein listed have been received by the UNO organization.

Again and again the GAO refused to follow the baiting of either the chairman or his members on the Democratic side, and agree to wild speculation and allegation.

But let me go a stage further. There is something wrong in this country when you can name by name an ally of the United States whose family could be killed; a man whose grocery store could be bombed; and I think it is utterly disgraceful, and I think this House should take actions on your hearing, because again and again the GAO said to you, "There are ground rules, and you are violating them," and you and Mr. KOSTMAYER by name violated them and made fun of them, and you should be ashamed.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

The distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] brought to the well a document from which he read that said: Beans, beans.

This is an invoice provided to the State Department on the basis of which a substantial amount of American taxpayers' money, as I recall $400,000-some, was paid for food that was allegedly provided to the Contras.

What the General Accounting Office found in its audit was that the money paid in to the account to pay for that food was then paid to the Armed Forces of Honduras.

It is a Federal crime to submit false invoices to the United States for payment. If the invoice that the gentleman referred to is correct, that what was paid for was beans, and the money went instead to the military of Honduras, that raises serious questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself an additional 30 seconds.

That raises serious questions of possible criminal activity. It is on that basis that our subcommittee is making available to the Justice Department all of the information that we have available to us for the Justice Department to do its job.

The Director of the FBI has informed me personally that the FBI will undertake a vigorous investigation of this material; and I am sure they will do their job.

The gentleman's rather strong rhetoric tonight is not warranted, and I urge the gentleman to come over to the Foreign Affairs Committee office and see whether or not be thinks all this money was handled properly.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Chairman, I would just make two points to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland.

First, to those of your colleagues that applauded have not read the documents; they have not read the testimony I cited; but they applaud.

Second, the very distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON], with him I do not agree ideologically, is in fact chairman of a committee established by the House to look after the kind of things we are talking about. That committee is designed to make sure that our allies are not killed by leaking their names, by saying things that should not be said, and by holding hearings that are timed before, according to the General Accounting Office itself, it has finished its work.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Chairman, in concluding this rather acrimonious and therefore unfortunate debate—but it is an important issue and people feel strongly about it; I know the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES] does and I do, too—I would just like to say that it is a shame that this inquiry was not conducted in a manner in which we were permitted to be a part of it, Mr. BARNES; you did not invite the minority in your subcommittee to be involved in this. That was a shame.

Second, you did not permit the GAO to ask questions of the Nicaraguan humanitarian assistant's office, and you know you did not. Let me just suggest to you that, it is interesting the standard of care this Congress imposed on the Afghanistan program and on the Cambodian program accounting, and the difference with Nicaragua.

From the report, July 1985, listen to this about Afghanistan:

The conference substitute earmarks $15 million in ESF funds annually——

Et cetera, et cetera.

The conferees recognize that the nature of the assistance to be provided requires some degree of flexibility in the application of standard audit procedures and requirements.

Then we go to Cambodia; the same language:

The conferees agree that the nature of the assistance to be provided requires some degree of flexibility in the application of standard audit procedures and requirements.

Not a word of flexibility about Nicaragua; only the CIA could not do it, the State Department's intelligence could not do it; they had to set up an eight-legged camel by design that was cumbersome and awkward, and then you do not permit interplay or interchange with ideas.

Let me share with you a little bit of the world of the GAO. Here is a report, "Foreign Assistance—How the Funds Are Spent." This was elicited by Mr. OBEY.

Let me read one little paragraph. This is brandnew; this is March 1986:

Because of time constraints and limitations in its computer system, UNICEF was not able to provide a full listing of U.S. suppliers of goods, freight, and other services.

What about AID?

AID officials noted that the $2.1 billion in disbursements to payee with a foreign address included substantial sums of direct cash transfers to foreign governments. Such transfers, they said, are often part of agreements with foreign governments that include provisions for U.S. source procurement. However, cash transfers are comingled with other monies and there is no systematic documentation of their actual use.

Then they go the Eximbank, the World Bank, the IDB, the UNICEF in New York, FAO in Rome, ADB in Manila, and the same thing:

Vouchers also did not usually indicate the subcontractors, if any, that assisted the supplier in producing or providing the goods or service. Information we obtained from vouchers related to multinational corporations often did not reveal the origin of the goods or services which could have been provided through local subsidiaries or through independent vendors.

One standard for all.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time remains on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think there are a few facts we have to remember. First of all, the humanitarian aid was an overt program, it was not a covert program. We included in the law the requirement that the President have procedures to determine how these funds indeed were used for humanitarian purposes.

The second point I want to make to my colleagues is, please look at the amendment. If indeed the State Department and the President have the answer to these questions, then they have nothing to fear in this amendment. The amendment basically requires that the President submit to Congress a report containing the following: Information regarding how the money was received, how the money was paid, the checks that were used, and other information that the other side has said they have. And it also provides that the GAO can actually go onsite to determine that in fact these funds were spent for humanitarian purposes. If indeed this money was used properly and for humanitarian aid, there is nothing to fear in voting for this amendment. I urge my colleagues to do that.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remaining time.

Mr. Chairman, I think it has all been said. I think the gentleman from California stated it correctly. It is a very simple amendment. All we are asking is that the administration provide a report to the Congress outlining whatever information it has available to it about the expenditure of the funds. There may be some instances in which the administration says, "We don't have information available to us." That is their report. There may be instances in which they say the GAO was incorrect there or correct there, and that will be their report.

The amendment also requires that the report include information available to the administration with respect to the involvement, if any, of the Contras in drug smuggling. If the administration finds that there is no such involvement, that will be the report that the administration will submit to the Congress. I cannot imagine that any Member of Congress would want to vote against this. If the administration thinks that the material should be classified, it can submit it on a classified basis. The amendment does not say to whom it would be submitted. It could be submitted, for example, to the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence. The gentleman thinks that is the right forum, although the old program, the $27 million, was an overt program under the oversight responsbility of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and my subcommittee had the responsibility of oversight for this program.

But if the administration wants to submit its report to some other committee in the Congress on a classified basis, it could do so.

I cannot imagine the basis on which Members would oppose wanting to have at least access to the administration's views on the expenditure of these funds. It is a very straightforward amendment. It ought to be supported on a unanimous basis. I do not know how you would explain to your taxpayers at home that you do not care how their money is spent, that you do not care whether it is diverted for all the purposes that have been alleged by all kinds of people.

I am not saying that those allegations are true or untrue, but we ought to just have a report from the administration on them.

Mr. Chairman, I urge an "aye" vote. I hope it will be overwhelming. It certainly should be.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 198, noes 225, not voting 10, as follows:

Mr. PERKINS and Mr. BADHAM changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MRAZEK

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MRAZEK: At the end of title II (as added to the bill pursuant to House Resolution 481) as amended by the amendment by Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma, add the following:

LIMITATION ON PARTICIPATION OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT PERSONNEL IN DELIVERY OF ASSISTANCE

SEC. 16. (a) United States Government personnel may not provide any training or other service, or otherwise participate directly or indirectly in the provision of any assistance, to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance pursuant to this title within those land areas of Honduras and Costa Rica which are within 20 miles of the border with Nicaragua.

(b) As used in this section, the term "United States Government personnel" means—

(1) any member of the United States Armed Forces who is on active duty or is performing inactive duty training; and

(2) any employee of any department, agency, or other component of the executive branch of the United States Government:

but does not include any officer or employee of the United States General Accounting Office of any employee of the Inspector General of the Department of State and the Foreign Service who is carrying out inspections, investigations, or audits with respect to assistance for the Nicaraguan democratic resistance pursuant to this title.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MRAZEK] will be recognized for 15 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MRAZEK] and will manage the time on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] will be recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, now that the House has made a positive determination to provide lethal assistance to the Contra fighting forces and has made an additional determination to provide training support for the Contras, this amendment simply seeks to provide some direction to the utilization of American personnel in the immediate combat zone contiguous to the Nicaraguan border.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is important to point out what this amendment will not do. It will not prohibit the United States from training the Contras. It will not affect United States military exercises in either Honduras or Costa Rica or the United States presence in El Salvador.

It does not prevent the U.S. Accounting Office and other U.S. Government personnel from going into restricting zones to investigate and audit the use of American aid. It does not affect the Central Intelligence Agency's intelligence gathering effort in this area.

Mr. Chairman, in recent years we have seen a number of situations, almost 200 in fact, which have involved a hot pursuit of Contra fighting forces that have attacked in Nicaragua and have retreated back across the border pursued by the Sandinista counterinsurgency forces. What this amendment would seek to prevent is the chance that American personnel, either active duty, Green Berets or Rangers, or inactive duty American personnel, would be providing training in the front lines, so to speak, in those Contra base camps very close to the Nicaraguan border.

It is the concern of some Members of the House of Representatives that in fact if those counterinsurgency forces from Nicaragua were to pursue Contra forces back across the border into Honduras, and there were in fact Rangers or Green Berets in those advance camps who had to defend themselves, that we might see a repetition of an incident that occurred on August 4, 1964, in which President Lyndon Baines Johnson declared that our two destroyers, the Mattox and the Turner Joy had been attacked in the Gulf of Tonkin when in fact such an attack never took place. Yet it served as the pretext for American involvement in Vietnam that led to significant cost to the United States of America as a people and as a Nation.

Again, this amendment does not preclude the training of the Contras in perhaps the areas where they would be best able to be trained in base camps like Aquacate which is 45 miles from the Honduran border, but it would prevent American troops from going into those camps where they could fall in harm's way.

Some people have suggested that it is in fact the intention of some people in the administration to see American troops in harm's way. That in fact $100 or $500 million is not enough to get the job done with the Contras and therefore it is going to take American troops to get to Managua.

Needless to say, we have heard over and over again in this Chamber that that is not the intention of the House of Repesentatives. So we offer this amendment, Mr. Chairman, in the hope that Members of this House will support a motion based on the knowledge that if American troops are not in the combat zone they cannot serve as a Gulf of Tonkin pretext to getting us involved in a war in Central America with American soldiers.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA].

Mr. REGULA. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure each one of us have heard our constituents express a great concern, whether they be conservative, liberals, hawks, or doves, about the danger of the United States getting involved with military personnel. That is a concern that I believe it is important that we address.

This amendment offers that possibility. I think it reduces the risk of the U.S. personnel getting involved either in hot pursuit or possibly being even kidnaped and taken across the border as evidence of U.S. involvement.

As my colleague has mentioned, we have a number of bases beyond the 20-mile limit. This amendment would not preclude the continued joint exercises with the Hondurans and the United States personnel even within the 20 miles. The important thing is that it prevents U.S. personnel training Contras within the 20-mile limit and it keeps our people away from a potential war zone.

I am not wedded to the 20 miles. I am wedded to the principle involved here that there ought to be some barrier between the Nicaraguan border and the training camps. Perhaps in conference evidence would indicate that that mileage could be reduced and still provide a responsible basis for the necessary training programs. I do think it is important that in this legislation we establish the principle that there is a barrier there to prevent, as much as possible, any involvement of U.S. personnel in the actions and in the potential conflict between the Contras and the Sandinistas.

I think it would address the concern that many of our constituents have expressed to us about this whole situation in Nicaragua.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN].

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I know the hour is late but I find this a very curious amendment. It is my understanding at this time that American personnel are not allowed within 7 miles. I cannot help but be a bit curious as to why we arrived at 20 miles. Right now we all know that the Nicaraguans are equipped with the Hind helicopter which flies at 200 miles an hour. It seems to me that they could reach those 20 miles in less than 6 minutes. They are also going to be, at some time, supplied with Mig's as we know.

I do not understand what is magic about the 20 miles. I also would suggest to the gentleman that at least this body ought to be able to see a map and see what areas of Honduras that then prohibits American personnel from being present. I think we at least deserve that before placing these kinds of micromanaged restrictions, which this body is becoming for, by experts on tactical and strategic warfare.

I think maybe it is also important to recognize that the gentleman said it does not impact American intelligence gathering efforts. I think it does and will. In fact, I think that because of my reading of the amendment is that nonmilitary U.S. personnel are also prohibited that that would indeed prohibit U.S. intelligence-gathering capability from that area.

I also think it would be very important if we had a map and if we could conduct some of this in a classified fashion to know where some of the areas where the training is taking place and whether those areas are inside or outside of the 20-mile limit of which the gentleman speaks.

By the way, I could not help but be a bit amused at the gentleman's comparison to the 1964 Gulf of Tonkin incident. I guess the lesson then is that the U.S. ships should have stayed out of the Gulf of Tonkin. There are some who believe that U.S. ships should stay out of the Gulf of Sidra. Not, fortunately, the majority of the American people.

I think this is ill-conceived. I do not think that this body can make a judgment as to what arbitrary limit of mileage should be placed on the operations and training conducted by U.S. troops without a lot more information that we have at this time.

I have to oppose this amendment and I would suggest that the gentleman might be better served by going through the committee process so that we could get Members more fully informed as to the impact of an amendment of this nature.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. FIEDLER].

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, in reading through the detail of this particular amendment, I was struck by the fact that given the restrictive language of the amendment, this actually might preclude Members of the U.S. Congress or an investigative body of the Congress from appearing within 20 miles of the border, which might prohibit any kind of an investigative effort that individual Members or members of various committees might choose to participate in given any questions regarding the allocation of funds, the allocation of troops, and I felt that that was an issue that ought to be raised.

I note with interest that the author of this amendment is engaged in debate, and I would like to say something to him if I may, given adequate time to be able to make the comment directly to the Member. I ask my colleagues to please bear with me.

I would just simply like to make a brief comment to the gentleman over and above the comments that I have made regarding his amendment, and that is to say to him that the comment that he made earlier on the floor regarding the earlier debate he participated in I found as a Member of this body to be extremely offensive, and was very deeply saddened by the fact that he would use a religious element in debate on the floor of the House of Representatives when we are here to represent not specific religious elements, but we are here to represent districts which make up a broad spectrum of people from a broad base of different perspectives, and I just felt compelled to make that comment to him as somebody who was deeply surprised and deeply disappointed in that kind of comment being made on the floor of the House.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN].

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express support for the Edwards-Skelton plan to provide aid to the Nicaraguan opposition. This plan, supported by the administration, provides the best hope for democracy and justice in Nicaragua.

Members of Congress on all sides of the issue agree that a Soviet and Cuban military surrogate in Nicaragua would present a serious threat to Nicaragua's neighbors and, indirectly, to the United States. They agree that the Soviet and Cuban—and, incidently, East German, PLO, North Korean, and Libyan—presence is there. They agree that there is the real possibility of the first Soviet and Cuban bases on the mainland of North America.

There is also general agreement that the Sandinistas' rule under Daniel Ortega is characterized by continuing and escalating internal repression. This is documented by the accounts of Nicaraguan religious, labor union, and human rights leaders, as well as representatives of the press. It is documented by the fact that two of the three United Nicaraguan opposition leaders are former members of the Sandinista hierarchy—Arturo Cruz was the former Nicaraguan Ambassador to the United States, and Alfonso Robelo was a member of the original post-revolutionary junta.

Moreover, there is agreement, although less broad, that it is the Ortega government that is currently frustrating the Contadora process, not the Contradora nations or the United States. The Contadora nations, most recently, urged the signing of a peace treaty by June 6, 1986. This deadline was later extended. On June 7 the Contradora group presented the Central American nations with a fourth draft of the proposed agreement. Ortega's Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto said on June 21 that the Sandinistas were ready to sign an agreement. It was left completed unclear, however, whether Mr. D'Escoto was referring to this draft, and whether, as in the past, the same old preconditions apply.

It seems clear that strong man Daniel Ortega of Nicaragua has learned well from his Soviet and Cuban masters how to play to American public opinion—to confuse, to diffuse, to obfuscate, to equivocate. It can be suggested that his latest supposedly conciliatory move was designed to influence the vote taking place here today.

When we last debated this issue, it was suggested by some that we should wait and attempt further efforts at negotiation before providing the Nicaraguan opposition with substantive support. We have effectively done that. Since the last vote on this issue on March 20, there has been no aid allocated, and there has been a renewed diplomatic initiative by the administration, undertaken by Ambassador Philip Habib. This effort continues to be frustrated by the Ortega regime.

I have been one of the most steadfast supporters of restraint in our relations with Nicaragua. The question before us, however, remains: What is the best way to influence events in Nicaragua in order to eliminate the Ortega regime's threat to democracy in Latin America and in order to promote true democracy in Nicaragua?

The administration and its supporters advocate a policy that funds a large and growing Nicaraguan opposition movement that espouses the goal of a genuinely pluralistic system of government in Nicaragua—one that will not pose a threat to its neighbors. While a few in the opposition ranks today were National Guardsmen under Somoza, a large number of former Sandinistas, like Cruz and Robelo, are also included in the opposition's ranks. The administration position calls for funding the opposition unless and until Ortega agrees to provide them with the opportunity to compete in a truly democratic system, free from threats, censorship, and mob violence.

Others question whether this is the most effective or desirable approach. They point to the Contadora process as the way to go, and criticize the Contras for past human rights abuses and for the manner in which they have handled—or possibly mishandled—U.S. assistance.

The key thrusts of these proposals are not, however, exclusive of each other, as many contend. I think it is fair to question those who support exclusive reliance on the Contadora process about the reality of such an approach. With the largest army of any Central American nation, it is realistic to ask what will compel the Sandinistas to bargain in good faith at the Contadora table if the opposition is disbanded—if indeed the Ortega regime even stays at the table. Some might respond that they would still fear direct U.S. intervention. I would maintain that if they know the U.S. Congress is hesitant to support the opposition, they would be even clearer on the question of congressional support for direct U.S. military action.

On the other hand, those who have raised allegations regarding human rights abuses and possible corruption in the opposition ranks deserve to have their concerns addressed. I was pleased to hear the President speak yesterday to some of these questions, because they demand straightforward responses. On the question of human rights, efforts to train opposition fighting forces in order to make them a more disciplined army will occur with this funding. A stricter emphasis on human rights has already been realized, and this commitment will become even stronger in the days ahead, as it should. Provisions are contained in the administration's plan to punish human rights abusers.

Recent questions on corruption also merit serious discussion. Allegations of fraud have been resoundingly refuted by the State Department in recent days. In fact, it appears that the manner in which questions were posed to the General Accounting Office, whose report on aid to the opposition has generated so much public dismay and media attention, could not but have led to the incomplete and disconcerting response received from GAO. When GAO is prohibited from consulting with the State Department, it should come as no surprise that questions about our funding to the opposition will remain. In any event, this issue must be addressed honestly and in an apolitical manner. I am pleased to see that this process has already begun and is proceeding apace.

The future of democracy in Central America and indeed, the whole Western Hemisphere, may hinge on the vote we cast today. I hope my colleagues realize the decision each of us makes today on this issue—a decision that will certainly be difficult for some—is crucial to the success or failure of democracy and justice in our backyard. The unalterable conclusion that any objective observer must reach is that aid to the opposition—the most effective kind of pressure we can bring to bear—is necessary now. I urge my colleagues to adopt the Edwards-Skelton amendment.

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would simply like to state for the record that it is not the intent of those of us who authored this amendment to encroach on any CIA intelligence-gathering effort. In fact, this amendment relates strictly to the $100 million contained in the Skelton-Edwards package. It does not relate to any intelligence-gathering activities financed through the House Intelligence Committee either in the past or in the future. I would like to state that for the record before any vote.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA].

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Mrazek amendment. This straightforward amendment is a commitment to keep American military and civilian personnel out of the war zones where obviously there is great potential for casualties.

If American servicemen's lives are to be at risk in Central America, such risk should be taken only as a result of a clear and concerted policy decision to go to war against Nicaragua. Such a decision should be reached by the President and Congress. Not attained by default.

The American people, in poll after poll, have said they are opposed to United States involvement in the war in Nicaragua. If Congress decides to turn a deaf ear to the American people by voting to send aid to the Contras, we, at the very least, must make certain that the aid does not pull us into an undeclared war in Nicaragua. This amendment is designed to keep us out of such a war.

The President has repeatedly said it is not his intention to send American troops into Nicaragua. This amendment will help the President to keep this commitment. The presence of United States advisers and trainers in the Contra camps near Nicaragua could become the tripwire which leads us to direct military involvement.

During this year, Contras, Sandinista soldiers, and, undoubtedly, innocent Nicaraguan people will be killed. Let us not add American servicemen to this list.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the Mrazek amendment.

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say that one of the greatest concerns of all the Members of the House is that our military personnel do not become embroiled in a war in Central America.

I believe that it is valid for all positions philosophically or ideologically wherever you stand that that is our greatest concern.

But if we look here tonight, we think about what is happening; our continuing appropriation measures of growing, escalating dollars for Central America is becoming almost the biggest business in Central America. I would hate to think that our troops would be down there close enough to perhaps even be drawn into such a problem.

I think it makes sense; the Mrazek amendment answers some of those questions on behalf of Members like myself who are concerned legitimately that our troops might be drawn into a conflict in Central America, so I support it.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio.

Ms. OAKAR. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly support the Mrazek amendment. I have heard the distinguished Speaker of this House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. O'NEILL] many times indicate that his biggest fear was the intent to bring in our own troops into Central America. This amendment ensures that this will not happen.

If we want to learn more about the present and the future, we ought to look to the past, look to our history. We know what happened in Vietnam. It was supposed to be a little thing that was going to be gotten over.

All of us have experienced loved ones either being wounded or dying in that war, and that war is still painful for so many people today who question why. Let us support the Mrazek amendment. It makes sense. It does not matter whether Members supported Contra aid or not, they can still support not having our troop involvement. That is the simple gist of what this distinguished gentleman is trying to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] has expired.

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 additional seconds to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] will remain on his feet if he has yield to his colleague, the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, this is where I came in 15 years ago. At that time this House was out of sync with the majority view of the American people, and we were told that we had to stay in Vietnam to show our resolve.

The Mrazek amendment is making the best of a bad situation, and we ought to adopt it, but let us not kid ourselves. We are going to be sucked into this war when the Contras, as inevitably will be the case, are unable to succeed, and we will be told that we have to get in to back them. Some people never learn.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have just one brief question. According to the language in the gentleman's amendment, it says that excluded from its provisions are "any officer or employee of the United States General Accounting Office of any employee of the Inspector General of the Department of State and the Foreign Service who is carrying out inspections, investigations, or audits with respect to assistance for the Nicaraguan democratic resistance pursuant to this title."

Am I to understand that military personnel for training purposes cannot be in there, but the GAO can?

Mr. MRAZEK. If the gentleman will yield, if in furtherance of an attempt to try to determine the careful expenditure of U.S. taxpayer dollars it is necessary to visit those base camps, that in fact would be the case.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. The only point that I am trying to make is that I know the gentleman is concerned about a Gulf of Tonkin-type of situation; if we have GAO inspectors or people from the State Department down there that get shot up, would that not be a similar concern?

Mr. MRAZEK. If the gentleman will yield further, I am sure that there would be some Members of this House who would like to see members of the GAO attacked in some of those base camps, but I cannot predict the future.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

□ 2315

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Chairman, I would just conclude in reference to the personal statement made by the gentlewoman from California that it was an emotional point in this debate for me. I took the opportunity as a Christian to address fellow Christians in this Chamber, primarily because I suppose in this vast slaughterhouse of the world we live in I would like to think there are better ways to try to find a resolution to some of the problems that we must confront as a Nation.

I asked the question, What would Jesus Christ, our Savior, say in relation to sending howitzers and surface-to-air missiles to the Contra freedom fighters?

I regret having made that statement and I regret if it was found offensive.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MRAZEK].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER (during the vote). The Chair understands that when the House adjourns tonight, it will adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning, instead of 10 o'clock, by mutual agreement.

□ 2350

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on

H.R. 5052, the bill just passed, and that I may be permitted to include extraneous matter, along with tables and charts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING ON THURSDAY, JUNE 26, 1986

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it stand adjourned until 11 a.m. on June 26.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

A "NO" VOTE ON H.R. 5052

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, tonight I have taken what is for me an unprecedented step in opposing passage of the military construction appropriations bill, just approved by the House.

While I support the substance of the legislation reported out by my committee, and would have voted for the bill in the form that it was passed by the committee with usual amendments, I could not agree with the final product after it was amended by the full House to include military aid to the Contras.

The final bill clearly escalates the United States military involvement in the growing conflict in Central America, while failing to provide for even a rudimentary procedure for an accounting of previously appropriated funds, which we know to have been grossly misspent.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am compelled to vote against this bill. It contains a great deal of hard work by the subcommittee on which I serve, and I am convinced that the best course for the House tonight was to defeat it in its present form and have the Appropriations Committee return it in its original form tomorrow.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION TO HAVE UNTIL 5 P.M. WEDNESDAY, JULY 2, 1986, TO FILE REPORT ON H.R. 3129, THE SURFACE TRANSPORTATION AND UNIFORM RELOCATION ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1986

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAY], I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Works and Transportation have until 5 p.m. Wednesday, July 2, 1986, to file a report on H.R. 3129, the Surface Transportation and Uniform Relocation Assistance Act of 1986.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Edwards of Oklahoma amendment to H.R. 5052, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

COMMONSENSE ADVICE FROM ALABAMIANS TO CONGRESS

(Mr. ERDREICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ERDREICH. Mr. Speaker, each year I have asked the people of Jefferson County to let me know how they feel about the major issues facing Congress by responding to my congressional questionnaire. I recently tallied the results of my fourth annual congressional questionnaire, and would like to thank the over 11,000 residents who took the time to answer and return their questionnaire response cards. My 1986 congressional questionnaire covered a broad range of issues, including deficit reduction, tax reform, defense spending, trade issues, and Social Security.

These responding to my questionnaire let me know what their budget priorities are, and strongly supported action by Congress to reduce and eventually eliminate Federal red-ink spending levels. Fifty-seven percent of those responding supported the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Deficit Reduction Act that seeks to attain a zero deficit by 1991, and 58 percent favored a budget proposal to reduce Federal spending in all areas except Social Security and defense. While 37 percent thought current defense spending was too much and 40 percent felt it was about right, 62 percent of respondents thought that the current level of domestic spending was too much.

In response to specific questions on spending reductions proposed by the President, 66 percent favored lowering the Guaranteed Student Loan Program by $3.4 billion over the next 3 years, and 60 percent favored abolishing the Small Business Administration. There was an almost even split on the elimination of section 202 housing construction for senior citizens, and a 50–40 split on reducing funding for health research and health professions' education and training. A substantial 55 percent, however, were opposed to reducing Medicare by $58.3 billion over the next 5 years, increasing out-of-pocket costs to recipients by over 65 percent by 1991. Fifty-four percent favored raising fees on veterans' guaranteed home loans, while 49 percent favored reducing Child Nutrition and School Lunch Programs.

A strong majority voiced their opinion that the United States needed to toughen its trade policies. Some 80 percent favored strengthening current trade laws and developing new economic strategies to ensure full and fair U.S. participation in international trade, while 59 percent favored adopting policies to limit imports from countries that compete unfairly with U.S. goods, even if it means higher consumer prices.

As always, the opinions of the people of Jefferson Country serve as a valuable yardstick as I cast votes and put forth initiatives to best serve the people of Alabama and the Nation. I hope my colleagues in the House will follow this good Alabama common sense on issues affecting our Nation. The responses to each question follow:

CONTRA DRUGS

(Mr. FEIGHAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, the war in Nicaragua has spread to our shores. It has come across our borders surreptitiously, and it threatens both our security and our childrens lives. The invasion, however, is not one of troops and guns. It is an influx of narcotics—paid for in the lives of some of our best and brightest—like Len Bias—and paying for an armed force that President Reagan has embraced as the moral equivalent of our Founding Fathers.

The evidence against Contra involvement in drug running is mounting. Just 2 days ago in the San Francisco Examiner, a notorious drug smuggler was reported to be closely linked to leaders of the Contra force, the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, of FDN. The story claims that the smuggler, Norwin Meneses-Canterero, employed three men who were members of the FDN. One of them was the FDN's San Francisco representative.

The drug enforcement agency acknowledges Meneses' drug history, but denies that any U.S. investigation is being undertaken. Clearly, these charges bear further inquiry. At the very least, the President should be gravely concerned that the Contras may be involved in a trade which the President described as "an outrage." Drug trafficking alone represents an attack on our security. Drug trafficking by those we embrace as friends and to whom we offer substantial support is a much graver crime.

I believe there are many sound reasons to object strongly to sending American taxpayer dollars to the Nicaraguan Contras.

Our policy runs against international law. Our money has completely failed in any of its objectives to date. Our allies have consistently opposed our continued preference for protracted war over concerted efforts toward Contadora. The American people have rejected the President's plan time and time again. The Contras may even have used previously appropriated funds for purposes specifically prohibited by the Congress.

But now we must add the probability of drug running to the Contra's résumé. Mr. Speaker, I believe these new allegations alone should make us extremely hesitant to consider any further aid to the Contras. But taken in concert with the Contra's past offenses, they make aid to the Contras unthinkable.

NICARAGUAN EXILE'S COCAINE-CONTRA CONNECTION

(By Seth Resenfeld)

A Nicaraguan expatriate who admits he once trafficked in cocaine was an organizer and financial supporter in California for the contras, The Examiner has learned.

On at least a half dozen occasions, Norwin Meneses-Canterero met leaders of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, or FDN, according to FDN head Adolfo Calero and several former members of the group. The U.S.-backed FDN is the largest contra group fighting to overthrow the government of Nicaragua.

During the same period, the multimillion-dollar cocaine ring allegedly run by Meneses employed three California men identified as FDN members, according to law-enforcement sources and FDN veterans. One of the men was the FDN's San Francisco representative, who was convicted of cocaine charges last week.

In a phone interview last week, Meneses, who never has been criminally charged, admitted he had trafficked in cocaine.

"I was doing that for about six months," he said. "That was about 1982."

Meneses, a 43-year-old businessman who moved from the Bay Area to Costa Rica about a year ago, has run an international drug operation for at least 10 years, according to U.S. law enforcement sources and allegations in court records.

A confidential U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration Intelligence report in 1984 described him as "the apparent head of a criminal organization responsible for smuggling kilogram quantities of cocaine to the United States."

Former FDN members around the country told The Examiner Meneses had helped finance at least four contra functions and sent a truck and video equipment to FDN members in Honduras.

Meneses, who speaks fluent English, said in the interview that he has allowed FDN members to meet at his Bay Area home and his wife's Los Angeles T-shirt factory. He denied, however, that he ever worked with the FDN or met its leaders.

Meneses said he never met Adolfo Calero, head of the FDN, although Calero acknowledged in an interview that he had met Meneses as many as four times at contra social functions in San Francisco.

"I have never had any occasion to meet with him privately. He has never contributed anything to me or to the FDN, as far as I know.

"Whoever is trying to connect me with this person is trying to hurt our struggle."

But Edgar Chamorro, a former FDN director, recalled that Meneses "appeared like a fund-raiser, an organizer" at two California FDN meetings in 1982.

"He was one of the main contacts in L.A.," said Chamorro, who has left the FDN and opposes U.S. contra funding.

Meneses visited FDN military chief Enrique Bermudez near the group's headquarters in Honduras about three years ago, according to several FDN veterans. Meneses acknowledged knowing Bermudez in Nicaragua before the revolution that brought the Sandinistas to power but denied having been in Honduras in the past seven years.

Bermudez could not be reached for comment.

According to a DEA report two years ago, U.S. authorities first identified Norwin Meneses as a "cocaine source of supply" in Managua in 1976.

That year, Meneses' brother, Col. Edmundo Meneses-Cantereo, was commander of the Managua police.

In 1979, the Sandinistas toppled Somoza. Norwin Meneses moved to Hillsborough and owned a restaurant and bar in the Mission District. He wore expensive clothes and drove a Jaguar, according to law-enforcement and FDN sources.

He continued to smuggle cocaine, according to a 1981 DEA affidavit filed in federal court here.

The Meneses organization has been linked to trafficking in the Bay Area, Los Angeles, New Orleans, Florida, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, Colombia and Peru, according to the affidavit and other DEA reports.

The group used a variety of smuggling techniques, including false passports, Colombian freighters, couriers on commercial airlines and Norwin Meneses' private aircraft, according to DEA reports.

One Meneses associate was Horacio Pereira-Lanuzo, an expatriate Nicaraguan businessman who is appealing a 12-year Costa Rican cocaine sentence, a 1980 DEA report says.

According to testimony in a 1983 San Francisco cocaine case, Pereira supplied a Nicaraguan dealer here with cocaine and the proceeds "belonged to . . . the contra revolution."

Meneses employed at least three FDN members in California in his cocaine-trafficking business, according to information from FDN veterans and law-enforcement intelligence reports and sources.

One of the contras he employed was Renato Pena-Cabrera, the FDN spokesman in San Francisco between 1982 and 1984.

Jairo Meneses—Norwin's nephew—and Pena pleaded guilty in federal court last year to cocaine possession.

Pena said no proceeds from his cocaine sales went to the FDN. He refused further comment.

According to court records, Jairo Meneses, 97, testified last June he had been a delivery man and "bookkeeper" for Norwin Meneses since 1981.

He described his uncle Norwin as a "large dealer" who said "about 20, 30 kilos per month" at $56,000 each, for an average monthly take of $1.68 million.

Reached by The Examiner last night, Jairo Meneses declined comment.

In 1982 and 1983, Meneses allegedly distributed cocaine through another FDN member in San Francisco and at least one in Los Angeles, according to information from FDN veterans and law-enforcement sources.

In February 1984, according to a DEA report, Meneses was living in San Jose, Costa Rica, where he owned a downtown lot and part-interest in a restaurant near the U.S. Embassy called Pollo Loco, or crazy chicken.

Meneses said he had attended a Bay Area wedding this month and was moving to Mexico, where he owns a cattle ranch, because of the "politics here . . . the communists."

He said he had trafficked in cocaine only for six months in 1982 and quit because a relative "became sick" with the drug.

"I promised myself and my family that I'd never do that again," he said.

In October 1962, two FDN directors, Edgar Chamorro and Frank Arana, flew to San Francisco to select local FDN leaders. During the selection meeting at Tony's Imported Body Shop Services on 11th Street, Norwin Meneses stood quietly in the back of the room, according to Chamorro and other FDN veterans.

The next day, Meneses helped to arrange a similar FDN meeting in Los Angeles, provided refreshments before the meeting and threw a party afterward, they said.

"He was in charge of the organization of the L.A. meeting, the reception; he drove us to the meeting place," Chamorro said. "He gave us the schedule for that day . . . he knew people, he was recommending names" for FDN positions.

Meneses also was trying to get former Somoza military members in California to join FDN forces in Honduras, Chamorro said.

Tony Navarro, owner of Tony's body shop and the FDN San Francisco spokesman, said Meneses had attended the two 1982 meetings but never worked with the FDN or made contributions.

But Meneses denied he was at either the San Francisco or Los Angeles FDN meetings.

Soon after the meetings, Meneses reportedly sent supplies to the FDN in Honduras, according to FDN veterans in Miami and California. The supplies included video equipment and at least one truck, the veterans said. Meneses paid to have the truck driven to Honduras, two sources said.

Meneses denied he gave a truck, video equipment or money to the FDN. Calero denied knowledge of such donations.

Calero said he had met Meneses about two years ago in California at a dinner for FDN directors, "at dinners for the Nicaraguan exile community and at rallies."

In February 1984, Meneses helped pay for a $5,375 contra dinner attended by Calero and about 100 others at the Sir Francis Drake Hotel here, according to two former FDN members.

Calero said he could not recall the Sir Francis Drake affair or who paid the tab. "I attend so many dinners," he said.

On June 4, 1964, Meneses picked up the bill for Calero and about 20 contra supporters who dined in a private room at Caesar's Italian Restaurant near Fisherman's Wharf, according to two sources formerly with the FDN.

Meneses said, "I never met Adolfo Calero personally in my life."

On another morning, according to two sources, Meneses paid for a breakfast for Calero with the FDN women's chapter at the Pepper Mill Restaurant in Daly City.

Calero said he recalled a breakfast with "about half a dozen ladies," but not Meneses.

"I am unacquainted with his reputation," said Calero of allegations that Meneses was a smuggler. "If I knew anything, I would have given it to the police.

"If he is a big dealer, and he is in the United States, he should be in jail. Or if he is a big dealer, and he is in Costa Rica, he should be extradited."

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FLOOD CONTROL ACT OF 1936

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, floods occurred at the beginning of history as evidenced in the great river valleys of the United States, the Columbia, the Sabine, the Rio Grande, the Missouri, the Ohio, the Tennessee, the Wabash, and many, many others, large and small, led by the Mississippi, which drains 41 percent of the land area of Continental United States.

In the early years of our Nation, 1781 to 1788, during the days of the Articles of Confederation, each State faced the problems of the land area within its border, and of course with land so plentiful, when floods were too great, it was easier to wear out land and move west. At first each person had the responsibility to look after his own, and efforts were few, and ineffective.

With time, the development of land adjacent to streams with expensive buildings, factories, and other costly developments we had neighbors to join together, and then local taxing units were formed to meet flood problems.

Later as the Nation's population increased, and as the land was cleared for cultivation, it became apparent that it would take concerted efforts if the Nation were to hold its own; that flood control was a national problem including flood prevention in the watersheds where in many areas the water must be held back, if it was to be controlled in the flat lands.

Today, with the development of the physical wealth of our country, the value of structures, equipment factories, inventories and land having increased by 41 times since 1934, it has become absolutely imperative that every effort be made to protect that wealth. In view of reduction of our forests, the increasing amount of land being placed under concrete, highways, shopping centers, now it is accepted that all Americans have an interest in protecting all of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, this, the 50th anniversary of the Flood Control Act of 1936, was signed into law by Franklin Delano Roosevelt on June 22, 1936, 50 years ago today.

At this point it is appropriate to look back and consider events that led up to passage of the Flood Control Act of 1936 and the benefits that have flowed to the American people from this important piece of legislation.

The Mississippi River floods of 1849 and 1850 prompted the first Federal flood control action when Congress appropriated money for two historic surveys of the Mississippi. Both were done by the Army Corps of Engineers—beginning the close association of the corps with Mississippi River flood control.

Back then, the corps believed levees alone could prevent floods along the Mississippi.

Disastrous floods in 1912 and 1913 along the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers raised the questions whether levees alone could be relied on or whether the Federal Government should provide more assistance to flood-prone areas.

In 1912, the Mississippi River was at flood stage for 60 days.

Four hundred and sixty-seven people were killed along the Ohio and flood damages were estimated at $147 million.

In 1917, for the first time, the Federal Government accepted limited responsibility for flood control in two sections of the country—the lower Mississippi and Sacramento River basins. The act also introduced the policy of local financial contributions for flood control.

Ten years later, the 1927 floods along the Mississippi convinced Congress and the corps that levees alone were not sufficient flood protection.

As a result of this flood, about 400 people died. Over 16 million acres were flooded; 41,000 buildings destroyed; and more than 700,000 driven from their homes.

That year, in 1927, Congress authorized the corps to survey the country's navigable streams in order to make plans for comprehensive development for navigation, water power, and flood control. Called 308 reports, these surveys provided Congress a basis for some emergency relief projects of the 1930's.

A year later, in 1928, a new act authorized a comprehensive plan for control of the Mississippi River and tributaries to include floodways, spillways, and channel improvements as well as continued work on the levees—thus ending the levees-only policy.

By 1935, Congress recognized a genuine nationwide need for increased Federal flood control assistance to include larger structures such as dams and reservoirs.

Congress also recognized a need for a work relief program. During the Depression, public works projects began looking very attractive as a means of employment.

The spring floods of 1936 also helped mold political and public opinion. The 1936 floods brought widespread disaster from Maine to Maryland.

In Pennsylvania, the hardest hit State, 84 people died and over 82,000 buildings were destroyed.

On June 22, 1936, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt signed the Flood Control Act of 1936. The act recognized for the first time that flood control on navigable waters or their tributaries is a proper activity of the Federal Government in cooperation with the States and in the interest of the general welfare.

Senator Royal Copeland of New York and Congressman Riley Wilson of Louisiana were the key people who guided the act through Congress.

This act authorized $320 million for 250 projects and a number of investigations and surveys. The Army Corps of Engineers would do most of the work.

The act also provided that the Soil Conservation Service of the Department of Agriculture would be responsible for conservation projects dealing with watershed run-off and soil erosion.

Since 1936, approximately 900 flood control projects have been built. This includes approximately 400 flood control dams. Between 300 and 400 flood control projects have more than one purpose—and include navigation, water supply, irrigation, recreation and hydropower.

In addition to flood control dams, the corps has built thousands of miles of levees, floodwalls, floodways, and improved channels.

Nonstructural measures are another solution to flood control. They include flood plain regulation, flood warning systems and floodproofing. A combination of nonstructural and structural measures have been used on the Charles River in Massachusetts. Opportunities are rare for purely nonstructural solutions to flood damage problems.

A particularly successful nonstructural project implemented by the corps is Indian Bend Wash in Scottsdale, AZ. It is a 7-mile greenbelt through the center of town that conveys flood waters to the Salt River. When not flooded, it is used as a recreation area complete with urban campground and golf course.

Cities such as New Orleans, built below the level of the neighboring Mississippi River, depend on structural flood control measures—such as levees and floodwalls.

Other cities along the Mississippi, Missouri and Ohio Rivers are nearly as dependent on levees and floodwalls. Such structural measures are an intrinsic part of their flood plain management program.

Flood control projects have provided relative security for those persons living in flood prone areas. The corps estimates an average of $10 billion in flood damages is prevented each year by flood control projects.

Flood control does not mean complete flood prevention, nor does it mean "zero risk." Nature is unpredictable. Occasional disasters will happen no matter what man does.

But disasters and irreversible damages continue to occur in still unprotected areas of country that we have demonstrated in the past 50 years that we have the capability to control. We are still at war to protect our inheritance; our land. Flooding and soil erosion continue to have a tremendous impact on our Nation's economy and on the safety and well-being of our citizens. The effects of urbanization and development compound the flooding problems. Through the construction of highways, buildings, and shopping centers, we are putting our land under concrete, destroying our forests and causing the water to flow into our streams and rivers much faster causing extreme hardships to the people who live in lower lying areas or at the end of the drainage systems. The potential average annual property damages from floods in the United States is estimated at about $4 billion annually. On the average, more than 300,000 people are evacuated from their homes or places of work annually, and about 185 lives are lost annually due to floods. One-sixth of all urban areas are in flood prone areas; over 200,000 square miles in our Nation are subject to flooding. According to some estimates, a 10-percent reduction in property damage could save our economy $200 to $400 million annually. The magnitude of the flood problem extends beyond these numbers when considering single events such as tropical storms and earthquakes with damages in the billions of dollars and the silent erosion of topsoil from the land of our Nation.

According to the World Watch Institute, by the year 2000 the amount of topsoil per person in the United States is projected to decline by 32 percent. Almost one half (44 percent) of the U.S. cropland is losing topsoil to affect productivity. Most of the loss (90 percent) is taking place on less than a quarter of the cropland. Unfortunately, the effects of erosion are often not visible until the situation has become irreversible. The predictable results will be starvation, vastly altered agricultural trade patterns and will ultimately affect the availability and use of all our water.

The current economy, however, is preventing us from making investments in our future. The Nation's real wealth is in its land and the productivity of its people. We cannot avoid paying the price at some point and that may be too late.

This kind of damage is not geographically isolated; for example, in the spring of 1983 some 41 States plus the Virgin Islands were plagued by floods. That year approximately $4.5 billion in flood losses were recorded by the National Weather Service. Louisiana and Mississippi alone sustained damages exceeding $600 million. In 1984 total flood damages were about $4 billion. Significant floods occurred in the Northwest, Midwest and Southwest States. Arizona, for example, experienced the worst disaster of the century when over $200 million in flood damages occurred. Severe damages occurred last year in the Middle Atlantic States with damage estimates at over $500 million and 40 lives lost. In February 1986, California experienced severe flooding problems; some 50,000 people were evacuated and an estimated 12,000 homes and 1,000 businesses were either damaged or destroyed. Currently, all the Great Lakes plus the Great Salt Lake have surpassed old records and continue to be dangerously high. Most of these lakes have set new monthly records for 8 or 9 straight months. Based on records dating back to 1900, most of these lakes stand at their all-time record high levels.

Flood control remains one of the best means of gauging man's success in reconciling his desire to improve our standard of living. We have got the capability and the readiness. We must protect our land and our property from floods for it is our country on which all else depends.

Mr. Speaker, man will continue to dream of mastering the rivers and protecting the environment that periodically threaten his home and his productivity. Possessing that dream, perhaps, is one thing that defines humanity—we must do our best to fulfill that dream, else we will become like China and India—and other worn out areas of the world.

FUNDING CRISIS IN MISSISSIPPI

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, my State of Mississippi, just like many others around the country, is wrestling with a very tight budget situation. As a result of the funding problems, some cutback in personnel at the Mississippi Department of Public Welfare has been required. Clyde Walker, Jr. is director of the Lauderdale County Welfare Department. He has written a very informative and insightful article about what effects this reduction in force will have on his department and throughout the entire State. I want to share it with my colleagues:

HERE'S MY VIEW

"* * * and the people of Mississippi and Lauderdale County suffer."

If there is no special session of the Legislature, Lauderdale County and Mississippi stand on the brink of losing millions of dollars. There are many reasons the financial impact on Lauderdale County and Mississippi will be so great. We are talking about much more than 22 employees in Lauderdale County and 900 plus employees statewide. We are really looking at the loss of federal money and the recipients of programs such as the federal Food Stamp Program, Aid To Families With Dependent Children, Child Support, Food Distribution and other services provided by the Department of Public Welfare will be the first to suffer. These will not be alone however as the impact will be felt by banks, savings and loan institutions, doctors, hospitals, car dealerships, used car lots, service stations and grocery stores. The people cannot spend money which they do not have. If Food Stamps and Aid To Dependent Children cannot be approved in a timely manner and the other paper work cannot be completed then the people simply will not have the money to spend in the community.

We believe we have a fairly good understanding of the position the state of Mississippi is in at the present time. During the recent special session of the State Legislature, the House on two occasions passed spending bills by wide margins which would have provided additional funding for the State Department of Public Welfare, Mental Health and one or two other Departments.

The State Senate however failed to approve this legislation. The Governor has stated several times that he will not call a special session unless he has assurance from members of the State Senate that the money will be appropriated. The Senate on the other hand has pointed out that adequate revenue provisions are not in place and without this provision an appropriation will be a one-time "bandaid" approach only. Basically, this is the present scenario we are facing in Mississippi. We believe that some give and take is desperately needed quickly in order that the people of Mississippi will not have to hurt unnecessarily. Certainly we know that we need funding and that this is needed quickly. We also recognize that for this to be more than just a quick fix that some source of permanent revenue must be in place. Our concern is that the citizens of Lauderdale County and of the state of Mississippi are not caught in the middle.

We have earnestly and prayerfully solicited the help of the Legislature, both House and Senate, the Governor's Office, Congress and other sources in order that funds may be appropriated to those agencies that have been devastated by the lack of adequate state funding.

In our view, we are in a crisis and the crisis does not begin July 1 but began approximately two weeks ago when state agencies learned that funding would not be made available to maintain adequate staff to get the job done.

The Lauderdale County Food Stamp Office could be used as one example of what we see as the problem faced statewide. Lauderdale County has 14 Eligibility Workers and because of extremely heavy caseloads (the heaviest caseloads in the United States exists in Mississippi and one of the heaviest caseloads exists in Lauderdale County) have been unable to meet federal guidelines and regulations as far as error rate and currency.

After the reduction in staff, Lauderdale County will have 7 Eligibility Workers. We can, with a great deal of assurance, speculate that the 7 workers after reduction will be unable to complete more than 50 percent of applications and recertifications. If this proves to be true, this would translate directly into a monetary loss of approximately $280,000,000 monthly in Lauderdale County. Using this same basis for computation purposes, the monetary loss in Mississippi could amount to as much as twelve and one-half million dollars monthly. You simply can not put more than 5 gallons in a 5 gallon container and when staff is reduced by one-half, we will have 7 workers trying to do what 14 workers could not do. The direct result will be a monetary loss to Lauderdale County and to each county in the state where the work can not be done. We believe that all parties must sit down and negotiate and compromise where this is necessary in order that the people of Mississippi will not have to suffer unnecessarily. We believe the people of Mississippi will be deeply indebted to those who are willing to negotiate, compromise and take whatever action is necessary.

TRIBUTE TO ROBERT E. HUNTER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Speaker, a son of Louisiana has been lost and every person in our State will suffer equally in this. Robert E. Hunter died yesterday doing what he has done for decades—representing the people of Louisiana in the Nation's Capitol.

Bob Hunter passed away in my office here in Washington during a meeting he asked for to solve some critical issues which affected the city of New Orleans and the Mississippi River. He died doing what he has always done for so many years, fighting for a State and a people he loved. As Senator RUSSELL LONG'S adminstrative assistant for 20 years, he was always at the forefront of issues affecting Louisiana.

Bob loved people and loved serving people. He chose to serve by a distinguished career in government. Before coming to the Hill with Senator LONG, Bob Hunter was an expert on navigation projects with the U.S. Corps of Engineers. There literally is not a water project in our State which hasn't been touched in some way by Bob. He was instrumental in all of the major projects from the Red River in north Louisiana to the Atchafalaya Basin in the south.

In addition to serving our State legislatively, Bob and Senator LONG were the guiding individuals responsible for starting one of the best known and innovative public relations events highlighting Louisiana when they began the annual Mardi Gras Ball in Washington 30 years ago. This event combines Louisianians and Washingtonians every year to show off Louisiana to the Nation, and Bob was at the forefront of organizing this extravaganza and maintaining its success. Bob's amazing organizational genius and ingenuity has allowed our State to proudly display its many resources to Washington, and his loss will be sorely missed by thousands of people who were transformed into Louisiana ambassadors.

I can attest to the fact that all of our Members will miss Bob's expertise and untiring assistance. He taught us all a great deal and we will greatly miss his Irish wit and his New Orleans charm. Louisiana has lost a giant of a friend. God Bless you, Bob Hunter.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning, Louisiana lost a great friend, one who has served the State and the Nation well for years. Oliver Wendell Holmes once wrote that he believed the best service we can do for our country and for ourselves was to see so far as one may, and to feel the great forces that are behind every detail—to hammer out as compact and solid a piece of work as one can, to try to make it first rate, and to leave it unadvertised.

Robert E. Hunter embodied this statement, and he lived his life serving the people, both of Louisiana and our country. Robert Hunter, who served in the Corps of Engineers during the World War II and then afterward during civilian life, always worked to serve the people, to improve life for our citizenry. In 1955, Bob joined the staff of our senior Senator, RUSSELL LONG, where he worked in public service for some 18 years. Always giving of himself, always working to serve the people, Bob continued to work behind the scenes—to assist Louisiana and her residents and to give of himself to improve the caliber of life for our people.

Seldom do we find individuals who spend their lives working to better the lives of others, and seldom do we find a friend like Bob Hunter. By all those with whom we came in contact, he will be sorely missed, and his effort will be sorely missed by our Nation.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4420) to amend title 10, United States Code, to revise the retirement system for new members of the uniformed services, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

Uniformed Services Retirement Reform

The uniformed services retirement system has existed essentially unchanged for the last 50 years, and its basic form was established over a century ago. During the past two decades, the uniformed services retirement system has come under increasing scrutiny and attack. By recommending the changes included in this conference report, the conferees are attempting to put the issue of structural reform of the uniformed services retirement system to rest for the foreseeable future. The conferees believe that, as a result of these changes, the criticism of the uniformed services retirement system will subside and the concerns of service members regarding the uncertainty of retirement benefits can be assuaged.

The conferees emphasize that the changes to the uniformed services retirement system included in this conference report would apply only to those who first become members of a uniformed service on or after August 1, 1986. No member who had joined a uniformed service before that date—much less any current retiree of a uniformed service—would be affected.

Most of the features of the current uniformed services retirement system are well known.

(1) An immediate annuity is available to a service member who competes 20 years of service; no benefit is available to a service member who does not complete 20 years of service.

(2) Retired pay equals high-3 average basic pay times a multiplier. (For those becoming members of a uniformed service for the first time before September 7, 1980, retired pay is based on final basic pay instead of high-3 average basic pay.) The multiplier equals 2½ percent times years of service and ranges from 50 percent at 20 years of service to 75 percent at 30 or more years of service.

(3) Retired pay is adjusted annually by the increase in the cost of living as measured by the consumer price index (CPI).

The uniformed services retirement system is noncontributory. However, the service member contributes, while on active duty, to the social security system and, thereby, earns eligibility for a social security retirement benefit. The receipt of uniformed services retired pay has no effect on social security retirement benefits and vice versa.

The House bill would change the uniformed services nondisability retirement system as follows:

(1) The formula for the multiplier would be changed to 2 percent for each year of service up to 20 and to 3.5 percent for each year of service beyond 20. This formula would provide a multiplier of 40 percent at 20 years of service and a maximum multiplier of 75 percent at 30 years of service.

(2) The length of the averaging period would vary between 20 and 30 years of service, basing the calculation of the retirement annuity on high-5 average basic pay at 20 years of service and reducing the length of the averaging period gradually to high-3 average basic pay at 30 years of service.

(3) The cost-of-living adjustment mechanism would remain unchanged.

The Senate amendment would change the uniformed services nondisability retirement system as follows:

(1) The formula for the multiplier would be changed to 2.2 percent for each year of service up to 20 and to 3.1 percent for each year of service beyond 20. This formula would provide a multiplier of 44 percent at 20 years of service and a maximum multiplier of 75 percent at 30 years of service.

(2) The cost-of-living adjustment mechanism would be changed to provide the percentage increase in the consumer price index minus one percentage point (CPI minus 1) for life with a one time restoral in the purchasing power of the annuity at the point in time when the member would have reached 40 years of service.

(3) the length of the averaging period would remain unchanged.

In total, the provisions of the House amendment would save $3.1 billion on an annual accrual basis; the provisions of the Senate amendment would save $2.8 billion.

The conferees agreed to change the uniformed services nondisability retirement system as follows:

(1) The formula for the multiplier would remain unchanged—2.5 percent for each year of service up to 30 years of service. However, for members who retire with less than 30 years of service, the multiplier would be reduced by 1 percentage point for each year of service the member retired less than 30. The reduction would be eliminated when the member reached age 62.

(2) The cost-of-living adjustment mechanism would be changed to provide CPI minus 1 for life with a one time restoral in the purchasing power of the annuity at age 62.

With regard to the multiplier, the formula would provide a two-tiered retirement annuity: a reduced annuity between the time the member retires from the uniformed service and normal retirement age and an unreduced annuity thereafter.

For example, a member who retires with 20 years of service would receive retired pay based on a multiplier of 40 percent from retirement to age 62 and retired pay based on a multiplier of 50 percent thereafter. For a member who retires with 30 years of service, no reduction in the multiplier would be made and retired pay would be based on the maximum multiplier of 75 percent.

The formula would result in multipliers as shown in the following table:

Years of service	Recommended multiplier
	Before 62	After 62

The conferees recommend no change to the length of the averaging period as part of this retirement reform legislation.

The conferees recommend that the only change to the reserve retirement system, at this time, be limited to the change in the method of adjusting retired pay. The conferees recommend that any further changes to the reserve system be deferred. The conferees believe that the reserve retirement system needs comprehensive review. The reserve retirement system, for example, plays a much smaller role in force management than the active duty nondisability retirement system. The objectives of the reserve retirement system need to be evaluated and the system structured to support those objectives.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to review the reserve retirement system in conjunction with a review of overall reserve compensation as part of the Sixth Quadrennial Review of Military Compensation required by the Congress and included a provision (sec. 302) directing the Secretary of Defense to submit, by February 1, 1988, a report on the reserve retirement system with any legislative proposals to modify that system.

The conferees also recommend that the only change to the disability retirement system be limited to the change in the method of adjusting retired pay.

The conferees recommend that the contribution to and the annuity from the Survivor Benefit Plan continue to be based on retired pay amounts computed using an unreduced multiplier. In other words, a member who retired with 20 years of service would continue to contribute to the plan and the survivor would receive a benefit from the plan based on a multiplier of 50 percent even though the member was receiving retired pay based on a multiplier of 40 percent until age 62. This recommendation will maintain the integrity of the Survivor Benefit Plan for nondisability retirees and will keep the plan consistent among nondisability, reserve and disability retirees.

The conferees recognize that changing one aspect of an integrated personnel and compensation system could well engender need for adjustments in other aspects of the system. As future career force needs develop, the management tools for recruiting and retaining a military career force may require adjustment.

The conferees are confident that the Department of Defense and the military services will monitor this situation closely and provide the Committees on Armed Service of the Senate and House of Representatives annually in posture statements their assessments of the state of the career force, together with any recommendations for legislative action that may be necessary to prudent management of the career force.

Unauthorized Appropriations

Although the total amount appropriated for defense in fiscal year 1986 was substantially less than the total amount authorized, a number of appropriation accounts and several line items contained appropriations in excess of the amounts authorized. To address these differences, the fiscal year 1986 Defense Appropriations Act included a provision, offered in the Senate, to require subsequent authorization for certain appropriated funds. Section 8109 of the fiscal year 1986 Defense Appropriations Act (Public Law 99-190) was designed to accomplish this objective. Since its enactment, the interpretations of section 8109 have varied widely, ranging from application to the statutory account levels to the various line items in the respective reports accompanying the fiscal year 1986 authorization and appropriation Acts.

Title IV reflects agreement on authorization for all excess appropriations. The conferees agree that this language is not intended to reflect a consensus on the scope and application of authorization required for appropriations. Rather, it seeks only to achieve a resolution to the fiscal year 1986 unauthorized appropriations issues.

The recommendations contained in title IV are based on a thorough review by the Committees on Appropriations and Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives of all disputed, unauthorized appropriations by taking into account the most recent available information on defense expenditures, program priorities and fiscal realities. The effect of these adjustments is neutral on the national defense function totals for budget authority and outlays. All funds contained in Public Law 99-190 were in compliance with budget resolution ceilings.

Approval of the unauthorized appropriations is not intended to offset the reduction in these appropriations made pursuant to the order of the President issued for fiscal year 1986 under section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-177).

The following table summarizes the disposition of the amounts authorized to be obligated or expended.

120mm mortar

The conferees agreed to include language in the conference report (sec. 402(b)(1)) that restates the intention and direction of Congress concerning the procurement strategy for the 120mm mortar system. This direction was included in the original action on the fiscal year 1986 authorization and appropriation bills.

Lightweight multipurpose weapon

The conferees agreed to allow the Army to proceed with its programmed procurement of the AT-4 lightweight multipurpose weapon, for which $59.2 million was appropriated in "Procurement of Ammunition, Army" in fiscal year 1986. The conferees recognize that this weapon is the Army's choice for a lightweight anti-armor/multipurpose weapon and that no plan exists to procure any other weapon for this mission. However, the conferees believe that the Army unwisely and prematurely halted testing of the M72E4, an improved version of the current weapon that had been considered a back-up to the AT-4. This was done despite instruction in the statement of managers on the fiscal year 1986 Defense Appropriation Act that M72E4 testing be completed and that the weapon be type classified.

Accordingly, the conferees included language in the conference report (sec. 402(b)(2)) requiring the Army, within available funds, to complete development and operational testing, to type classify the weapon, and to acquire a technical data package. Inclusion of this provision in the conference report has been made necessary by the Army's flagrant disregard for the report language provided in conjunction with action on the fiscal year 1986 request.

Air defense competition

The Defense Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1986 fenced $200 million within "Aircraft Procurement, Air Force" for the air defense competition. The conferees understand that the language fencing these funds will be deleted and that the date for completion of the air defense competition will be changed from July 1, 1986 to November 1, 1986 in conjuction with the conference report on H.R. 4515, Supplemental Appropriation, 1986.

The intent of the action taken in the Supplemental Appropriations bill is to allow the Air Force more time to evaluate contractor bids, but an expeditious pace for evaluation is encouraged. The $200 million appropriated remains available to award a contract to the winner of the competition. The Air Force must submit a formal reprogramming if these funds are proposed to be used for any purpose other than the air defense competition, should contractor bids not meet Air Force requirements. Nothing in the actions taken in the Supplemental Appropriations bill or this bill precludes the Congress from considering the merit or affordability of the air defense aircraft requirement in subsequent legislation.

Audit reductions not taken

The conferees provided no authority to obligate or expend $29 million of unauthorized appropriations stemming from reductions taken in the authorization provided for various Operation and Maintenance accounts. The appropriations that were provided for these accounts did not reflect these reductions. The reductions are based on audit reports in the following areas:

AAFES lease payments, Army ($1 million)

Design cost of NAF projects, Army ($1 million)

Inventory control, Army ($5 million)

Small clubs, Navy ($1 million)

Inventory control audit, Air Force ($10 million)

Golf courses, Air Force ($5 million)

Small clubs, Defense Agencies ($1 million)

Inventory control, Defense Agencies ($5 million)

The conferees intend that any future reprogramming request for maintaining the operation of the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) look first to the savings resulting from these audit reductions as the source.

Program limitations

Consistent with the agreements reached with regard to the amounts of unauthorized appropriations, the limitations and requirements set forth in the Department of Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1986 (and in the joint explanatory statement of the committee of conference on the bill S. 1160 (99th Congress), printed in House Report 99-235), shall apply to the obligation of funds authorized by section 401 of this conference report in the same manner as if the funds made available for obligation by the section had been authorized in such Act.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SECTION 501—UNDER SECRETARY OF DEFENSE (ACQUISITION)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 14) establishing a new Level II appointment within the Department of Defense for an Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition).

Although similar legislation is pending in the House of Representatives, the House bill contained no similar language. As a result, the House of Representatives has not yet had the opportunity to consider legislation establishing the office of Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition) and, of equal importance, legislation defining the duties and responsibilities of that office.

Further, the provision in the Senate amendment is silent on the status of the existing Under Secretary of Defense for Research and Engineering, currently a Level III position.

Recognizing the positive contribution that the President's Blue Ribbon Commission on Defense Management has made and because of the expressed desire that the position be created so that a candidate may be nominated for appointment, the House recedes with a technical amendment changing the office of Under Secretary of Defense for Research and Engineering into the office of Director, Defense Research and Engineering.

The conferees, however, wish to indicate their commitment to examine and define the duties and responsibilities of the Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition) in subsequent legislation, as well as to address such specific areas as audit policy, the Office of Test and Evaluation and the relationships within the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

The conferees also agreed to a provision (sec. 501(b)(3)) providing that in redesignating the position of Under Secretary of Defense for Research and Engineering as the Director, Research and Engineering, the present Under Secretary of Defense for Research and Engineering need not be reappointed by the President as Director, Research and Engineering.

SECTION 502—DENIAL OF FUNDS FOR T-46 AIRCRAFT

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 15) that would prohibit the obligation and expenditure of funds appropriated for fiscal year 1986 for "Aircraft Procurement, Air Force" for the procurement of the T-46 trainer aircraft.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to a provision that would prohibit the obligation or expenditure of the funds appropriated for fiscal year 1986 for "Aircraft Procurement, Air Force" for the procurement of the T-46 trainer aircraft until September 30, 1986 or until subsequent authorization was enacted with respect to these funds. In the absence of such authorization, the prohibition would end on September 30, and the funds would be available for obligation or expenditure for the procurement of the T-46 trainer aircraft.

SECTION 503—POSTPONEMENT OF A CERTAIN DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE CONTRACT

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 13) expressing the sense of Congress that the Secretrary of Defense should postpone the final award of a contract with respect to a solicitation for crawler tractors, until the enactment of the Department of Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1987.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment providing that the Secretary of Defense may not award a contract until Congress by law establishes a policy concerning the award of defense contracts to firms in which a foreign government has a significant interest or until Congress adjourns sine die. The conferees have agreed to adopt this language to give Congress time to address the merits of the issue.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A TRADITION OF POLISH RESISTANCE TO FOREIGN DOMINATION

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to inform my colleagues of an event occurring many years ago which still serves as a testimony to the patriotic spirit of the Polish people in general and Polish students in particular. I am referring to the Polish Children's Strike of 1901, while the country was under German domination. Today, another power oppresses Poland, but the same determination on the part of Poles to retain their nationality and regain their independence clearly remains.

I would like to include in the RECORD an article from the June 15 edition of the Polish National Alliance newspaper, Zgoda, which recounts this heroic event and its consequences.

POLISH CHILDREN'S STRIKE IN WRZESNIA IN 1901

(By John Kulczycki)

On May 20, 1901 an event occurred in a small town school house in Prussian Poland that eventually furnished the world with the spectacle of little Polish school children challenging the powerful German government, a spectacle that inspired ridicule of the German authorities and reminded the world of the foreign occupation of territory of the former Polish state. On that day, the teacher caned pupils in the highest grade of the elementary school in Wrzesnia who refused to use the German language in responding to the teacher during religion class.

The crying of the punished children soon drew a crowd in front of the school house, and several people led by the wife of the brick-layer Piasecka entered the school. Amid the shouting that ensued, Piasecka demanded to know if the German emperor had sanctioned the use of the German language in religious instruction and threatened to "scratch out" the teacher's eyes for selling "children's souls for a hundred (German) marks." This confrontation in the school lasted only a few minutes before a police officer cleared the people out, though when the teachers emerged from the school building the crowd outside greeted them with jeers and shouts of "Long live Poland."

But these events did not in themselves particularly catch anyone's attention, until the Prussian authorities decided to bring criminal charges against Piasecka and others that had entered the school house alone with those in the crowd whom the police had observed shouting insults or not immediately obeying an order to disperse, a total of seven women, three teenage youths, and fifteen men. It was the trial held in Gniezo in November 1901, that made the small town of Wrzesnia and its Polish school children literally world-famous.

The trial aptly symbolized the confrontation in Prussian Poland between the German authorities and the predominantly Polish population of the area. The defense lawyers included a Polish member of the German parliament, and Archbishop Florian Stablewski of Gniezno-Poznan, the undeclared primate of Poland, sent a personal representative. Even the state prosecutor declared that the main issue in the trial was the conflict between Germans and Poles, which he blamed on Polish agitation.

Despite the lack of violence during the events in Wrzesnia-even the police who testified minimized the threat posed by the crowd—the court ruled that all who took part in the "unlawful assembly" should be punished. All seven women and three youths as well as eleven of the men were found guilty and sentenced to a total of nineteen years imprisonment, with Piasecka receiving the sternest penalty of two and a half years in prison. Insisting upon the great danger of "excesses" such as occurred in Wrzesnia, the verdict explicitly justified its harshness as necessary to prevent a repetition of these events.

It was the severity of the verdict that turned the Wrzesnia affair into a cause celebre. The Prussian minister of justice himself recognized the inequity of the extraordinarily high penalties and twice in 1902 sought to persuade the Prussian Royal Council of Ministers to reduce them. The Council refused on the grounds that the government must avoid admitting to an act of injustice, which might help the Polish cause.

Meanwhile, however, the Wrzesnia affair aroused world-wide sympathy for the Poles with its image of sadistic Prussian pedagogues bullying and beating little Polish children for simply wanting to use their native language in school. Even in the German parliament German Catholic and socialist separatees criticized the Prussian school language policy. Protests were voiced elsewhere as well, and when a fund was established to aid the victims of the affair, donations poured in from other European countries and the United States, including from the Polish National Alliance.

The German authorities not only lost the propaganda war. They did not even immediately succeed in imposing their will on the Polish school children. The issue of the language of instruction for Polish school children was not a new one. In the course of the partitioning of the Polish-Lithuania Commonwealth in the eighteenth century, Prussia obtained a large Polish-speaking population. After the Napoleonic wars, during which Prussia lost much of this territory, the Prussian king promised the population of the Polish territory that Prussia regained at the Congress of Vienna in 1815 to respect its nationality and religion.

Initially, the Prussian authorities followed a policy of bilingual education, teaching children in their native language while they learned German. But once Prussia became part of a united German empire in 1871, this policy seemed no longer appropriate. In the next two years, the authorities eliminated the Polish language from the schools except for religion lessons and limited language classes. It was these remnants of the Polish language in the schools that Konrad Studt, the new Prussian minister of education from 1899, decided to eliminate.

By the end of the nineteenth century, Polish society in Prussia was well organized and used to defending its rights whenever these came under the attack of the German authorities. In the past the Poles of Prussia had protested and petitioned against attempts to remove their language from the schools. But this time, led by school children and their parents, they went further in resistance.

When the school in Wrzesnia first introduced German religious textbooks in April of 1901, some parents refused to buy them or to allow their children to use them. Gradually the resistance spread to the religion lesson itself, with pupils refusing to answer questions put to them by the teacher in German. The teacher punished their passive resistance by keeping them after school and eventually beating them with a cane, as on May 20.

Actually, the events of that day and resulting publicity initially stengthened what became known as a school strike and it even spread. Children in other towns and villages of Prussian Poland began to refuse to respond to their teachers when they used German in religion class or even to say prayers of the greeting "Praised be Jesus Christ" in German, for which the children were punished in the same way as in Wrzesnia. As the joke went, pity the poor Polish child: beaten by the teacher if he prays in Polish, beaten by his father if he prays in German, and beaten by the priest if he does not pray at all!

Eventually, the Prussian authorities were able to wear down the resistance of even the most determined Polish children by refusing to allow them to graduate from the elementary school until they ended their strike. Girls proved to be more persistent in their resistance than boys, at times even going against their parents wishes in refusing to use German. One of the two girls who led the resistance at the school in Pleszew avoided saying the word "God" in German even during other lessons, and both continued their "strike" from 1902 to 1905, when they were finally allowed to graduate, well over a year later than normal.

Thus by the end of 1905, resistance at all Prussian schools had ceased, which apparently emboldened the school authorities to try to eliminate Polish at a large number of schools in the spring of 1906. The result was the massive school strike of 1906-1907, in which some 93,000 pupils at over 1,600 schools throughout Prussian Poland participated. By imposing fines and even prison sentences on parents, the Prussian authorities were able to break the strike.

But it was a Pyrrhic victory. The children who took part in the school strike as well as their parents learned to see their Polishness as a source of pride and to see the government under which they lived as an alien one. When the chance came at the end of World War I in 1918, many of them joined in the uprising against their German rulers to win their homeland for the reborn Polish state. Today, the name "Wrzesnia" stands as a symbol of loyalty to the Polish nation even against the most overwhelming odds. It should serve as a lesson to any government trying to tear away anyone's mother tongue.

HOPE FOR DEMOCRACY IN PARAGUAY

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I am inserting in the RECORD an article by Domingo Laino, an exiled Paraguayan political leader from Sunday's New York Times.

Mr. Laino is attempting to return to Paraguay today from exile. He has attempted to return on a number of other occasions only to be repelled. It is my hope that Mr. Laino will be permitted to return home and to lead his opposition political party, the Authentic Liberal Radical Party. The future of Paraguay depends on the ability of the present government to create a democratic process.

PARAGUAY FOR THE PARAGUAYANS

(By Domingo Laino)

I have been living in exile from my native Paraguay since 1982. This week, I am going back—much as Benigno S. Aquino Jr. tried to go back to the Philippines and Dim Dae Jung went back to South Korea—to challenge Gen. Alfredo Stroessner and assert my right to my homeland.

I was exiled in punishment for the "crime" of writing a book about General Stroessner's good friend, the late Gen. Anastasio Somoza Debayle of Nicaragua. When I have tried to go home over the past four years, my car has been turned back at the border and the planes I have been on have been denied permission to land. I have repeatedly offered to go back and stand trial for any charges the Government wishes to make against me, for I know I am an innocent man.

Today, as when I left, Paraguayans continue to struggle with the same decrepit regime that seized power in 1954 and has ruled ever since through an unconstitutional state of seige. "Peace and work with Stroessner" is the regime's favorite slogan, and it has plastered those words all over Asunción on billboards and in neon signs. But if there is peace under General Stroessner, why has he needed to maintain a state of siege for 32 years? If there is work, why does one out of every three Paraguayans have to leave the country in search of a job?

Today's Paraguayans are increasingly aware of the winds of democracy blowing through Latin America—in Argentina, Uruguay and Brazil. They also take hope from Haiti and the Philippines, where the people have banished the dictators who dominated their nations for years.

Even more important is the shift Paraguayans note in the Reagan Administration. The United States Ambassador, Clyde Taylor, has established contact with members of the Paraguayans opposition, expressing his commitment to human rights. These gestures have offended the dictatorship, which has been scathingly critical of the ambassador.

Paraguayans have also been affected by the foreign debt and the drop in their export income: both have contributed to the country's economic crisis, and have created grave divisions within the General's Colorado Party. Some members of the democratic opposition have taken to the streets of Asunción where their peaceful protests have been met by violence.

There is, then, increasing pressure inside the country for a transition to democracy. But this transition can not be peaceful without support from abroad and from the armed forces and the Roman Catholic Church.

The church has already assumed its role in the process by calling for a national dialogue. The democratic forces in Paraguay have accepted the call; only General Stroessner is opposed. The armed forces have not yet announced their position, but there is some hope that they will support a political opening.

A large majority of officers joined General Stroessner's party only because it was necessary for their military careers. What's more the corruption of the last decades has benefited only a few officers at the top; many soldiers live on their salaries and suffer from the same economic pressures the average citizen does. Certainly, those officers who are loyal to their institution—and not to the Colorado Party—are gradually preparing to join the church as a force for a peaceful transition.

Paraguay's political parties will have a less crucial role in the transition, for they have been weakened by General Stroessner's "divide and rule" tactics. Yet it remains important that no single political party be allowed to dominate the period of transition—certainly not the General's party. It is up to us Paraguayans, then, to strengthen the other parties, reinforcing their sense of their rights and obligations as they prepare to govern.

This optimistic scenario will depend in large part on the attitude of the United States. General Stroessner has been engulfed by econonic problems of his own making. Over the next six months, the World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank will consider some $245 million in loans to Paraguay. If Washington backs these loans, it will extend a lifeline to the oldest dicatorship in the Americas. If the United States chooses to deny General Stroessner its economic, political and moral support, the Paraguayan people can continue to advance toward a new life in freedom from fear.

WHAT MAKES THE FED TICK?

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, it was fashionable not long ago to point out that Federal agencies like the CIA had become too secretive and consequently legislative remedies had to be found to bring "sunshine" to these agencies. In a democracy, it is thought, the daily operations of government at every level ought to be carried out in the full view of the people unless our national security would be thereby imperiled.

So far as I know, the setting of our monetary policy does not threaten our national security, yet operations at the Federal Reserve Board remain shadowy. As Joe Cobb, senior economist of the Joint Economic Committee, indicates in the attached article, the mania for secrecy at the Fed is reaching levels of absurdity we would not tolerate in any other Federal agency.

America's monetary policy has enormous effects on our economy and our people. Therefore our people have a presumptive right to know how the Fed goes about setting that policy. The very least the Federal Reserve should do is to release the minutes of the Board's meetings on a timely basis. This does not compromise the independence of the Fed any more than the Supreme Court's independence is compromised by the immediate publication of its opinions. However, in the absence of voluntary cooperation in bringing the agency into the democratic "sunshine," I am in favor of a legislative remedy to terminate the continued secrecy surrounding the Board's current monetary policy decisions.

(By Joe Cobb)

The Federal Reserve has been making news in a way uncommon to central banks. Last Feb. 24, a majority of its Board of Governors opposed Chairman Paul Volcker on the timing of a cut in the discount rate. Preston Martin then stepped down as vice chairman after a long, well-publicized power struggle. If there is to be more such internal controversy, the Fed's senior staff might be expected to aid Mr. Volcker in keeping a firm grip on monetary policy—a grip normally so strong that the February vote sent shock waves through the investment and financial communities. They probably will—but perhaps only up to a point.

Ingrained practices on the part of the senior staff normally act in subtle ways that enhance and make difficult any challenge to the chairman's power. Board member Martha R. Seger recently told American Banker magazine: "Memos are delivered to our desks; the rule of thumb is that we are supposed to get the material 48 hours before the meeting. Sometimes that deadline is met, sometimes it isn't."

A REMARKABLE CONTINUITY

While presidential appointees to the seven-member board come and go, the little-known senior staff of the Fed seems almost permanent. A brief review reveals a remarkable continuity of service:

Staff director Steven H. Axilrod did graduate work at the University of Chicago and came to work for the Fed's governors in 1952. He has been near the top of the staff hierarchy since the mid-1960s, when then Chairman William McChesney Martin helped put him there.

Donald L. Kohn, the deputy staff director, received his Ph.D. from the University of Michigan in 1971 and has worked at the board 10 years.

James L. Kichline, director of research and statistics, received his Ph.D. from the University of Maryland in 1968, joined the Fed and enjoyed rapid promotion to his present position in 1977.

Edwin M. Truman, director of the international finance division, was a professor at Yale before going to work full time at the Fed in 1972.

These senior staffers have contributed significant papers to the Federal Reserve Bulletin and enjoy an excellent reputation in the academic community.

Members of the governors board have little contact with the Fed's staff outside this small group, which controls the primary information channels to the policy makers. Except for former Vice Chairman Martin, who had two special assistants, only one governor, Henry Wallich, regularly has had an economist assigned to him to help with his work. Mr. Wallich's assistants generally are appointed by the research director for one-year terms. Mr. Martin's special assistants were recruited from outside the staff of the Board of Governors, which may say something about the apparent antagonism directed against him from within the Fed.

Not every governor apparently feels a need for a special assistant. Vice Chairman Manuel H. Johnson says he finds the staff "very responsive" to his requests for information. On the other hand, it is understood that Wayne D. Angell, a recent Reagan-appointed governor, has found less cooperation with his request for the staff to develop a price index that might be used to gauge the tightness or looseness of monetary policy. (Is it merely a coincidence that Chairman Volcker doesn't share his enthusiasm for such a price rule?)

Mr. Volcker runs the Federal Reserve with an iron hand, and the senior staff emulates that management style all down the line. Knowledge is power, particularly at the Fed, and no junior economist with alertness to his career would dare displease his superiors. If a governor were to ask the staff a question that could affect Fed policy, Mr. Volcker would be notified; however, contacts between governors and the Fed staff are minimal.

Junior members of the staff who do leave the Fed for high-paying positions elsewhere tell an interesting story of how official business is conducted. The formal methold of giving the governors information is the briefings on Monday and Wednesday mornings. The Monday briefings are tightly orchestrated by the senior staff to ensure that none of the more junior economists, who are present to make reports and answer questions, are likely to disagree with one another—or with their superiors. The briefings are higly technical and thorough, but they are not filled with any academic give-and-take or debate about the economy. There is only one acceptable point of view and it is usually that of staff director Steve Axilrod.

The Monday briefings are highly structured in other ways, too. The routine is strict: Prior to the meeting, an agenda is prepared for Paul Volcker, listing the staff economists who will be called upon to make reports. Always first up are members of research director James Kichline's group on the performance of the real sectors of the economy. When the presentation is completed, the economists who participated leave the board room. Next, the financial markets are reviewed, and that group of economists then leaves the room. Finally, the international team, headed by Edwin M. Truman, makes its report.

The Wednesday briefings are similarly controlled, but they focus on other issues such as the condition of the banking system rather than the economy. If a governor asks an economist a follow-up question, a subtle glance at the controlling senior-staff member often precedes any answer. If a senior-staff member feels the need to follow up the economist's reply with the dreaded words, "What he means to say is . . ." (to make the answer fit the approved point of view), the lowly transgressor knows that his career could be in deep trouble.

The Fed staff makes such a strict practice of secretiveness that it may even rival the internal security of the Central Intelligence Agency. Numerous memoranda have yellow cover sheets, indicating restricted access, and those with a pink sheet bear the names of those permitted to see them. Every office has a large "burn bag," and janitors are trained to report to the head office if a burn bag is not tightly sealed, or if a restricted memorandum is left out on a desk at night.

DIFFERS FROM UNIVERSITIES

Despite the Fed's clearly superior technical competence, the intellectual environment there is very different from that which prevails at the major universities, where professors and graduate students may be jointly and openly studying exactly the same questions about the direction of the economy and the consequences of different monetary policy options.

Such a tightly controlled shop might seem less than optimal for a policy-making body like the Fed, which has been shown to have such powerful effects on the nation's economy. After all, economists are famous for disagreeing, and the Board of Governors, as we have recently seen, even disagrees in public sometimes. Yet it is not necessarily the orthodoxy of the senior staff that influences the Fed's monetary policy. In recent years, it has been Paul Volcker's opinions that have really counted at the Federal Reserve. Of course, such an arrangement is not permanent. A recent news report indicated that senior Fed staffers have been more cooperative in handling requests from the other governors, now that President Reagan's appointees constitute a firm majority on the board.

OPERATION YOUTH

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize an outstanding program which has been operating in my district for 35 years—Operation Youth. Operation Youth is a week-long conference during which young men and women learn about our Government. This nationally recognized summer program has won 28 awards from the Freedoms Foundation at Valley Forge. It uniquely combines learning and activity to give students a greater understanding of the American way of life.

This year's conference was held June 7–14 at Xavier University in Cincinnati. More than 100 area high school students participated. The theme this year was "An Understanding and Appreciation of America's Basic Freedoms." The program featured presentations by leaders from the areas of government, education, and law on topics such as "Freedom and Economics," and "The Future of the American Political System." Forums were then set up for the students to discuss these topics and other current issues. The students formed political parties and elected officials to a mock municipal government.

Mr. Speaker, I am extremely proud to recognize those who were elected to office as well as those who participated in other aspects of this program. They are as follows:

Mayor: Tim Burress of Goshen High School; vice mayor: Marci Rouse of St. Ursula Academy; city manager: Sean Halter of Turpin High School; clerk of the council: Jim O'Brien of Northwest High School; and city council members: Sara F. Andrews of Paulding High School, Anne Cunningham of Defiance High School, Amy Gaietto of Lima Central Catholic High School, Tara O'Neill of Toledo Notre Dame Academy, Todd Sams of Princeton High School, Susan Weaver of Tuscarawas Central Catholic High School, and Jenny Wenz of Mother of Mercy High School.

Also participating in the conference were:

Pam R. Alkire, Scott A. Anderson, Keith Arnold, Leslie Askern, Ann Marie Auer, Michelle Rene Barber, Kimberly S. Batsche, Jody Bigelow, Laura Bischoff, Diane Bohman, Tricia Bond, Beth Buerger, April Burger, Debbie Bye, Shelly Cappel, Stephen P. Carney, Cathryn Chislaghi, Jeff Christman, Karla Cooper, Kevin R. I would especially like to honor William E. Smith, director of Operation Youth, and professor of accounting and finance at Xavier University. His dedication in insuring the success of the programs has been unsurpassed. His efforts, as well as those of the staff, enabled over 100 young citizens to gain new insight into the workings of democracy. The staff included:

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to pay tribute to this outstanding and worthwhile program.

DIVESTMENT LEGISLATION APPROVED BY HOUSE VOTE

HON. MICKEY LELAND

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to share with my colleagues the following articles on our friend and colleague from California, RON DELLUMS, which appeared in the Washington Post and New York Times last week.

The articles detail Mr. DELLUMS' 16 year struggle to win House approval of divestment legislation. Last Wednesday's passage of his legislation by voice vote was a tribute to one man's commitment and unwaivering efforts to place the United States on the side of justice in South Africa. Mr. DELLUMS' persistence and commitment raised the veil and made the world view the atrocity and inhumanity that results from South Africa's apartheid policy.

Mr. Speaker, human dignity, morality, and freedom are not issues of compromise. Mr. DELLUMS recognized that reality. Last week's action by this body demonstrates that ideological purity does play a vital role in politics.

I urge my colleagues to read the following articles:

DELLUMS: EXONERATION IS HIS—PASSAGE OF ANTI-PRETORIA SANCTIONS MARKS MILESTONE FOR HILL VETERAN

(By James R. Dickenson)

To Rep. Ronald V. Dellums (D-Calif.), the House passage Wednesday of his stringent economic sanctions against South Africa was "a shot heard 'round the world." But he also views it as personal "exoneration" from the judgment that he is a moral gadfly and maverick who is out of the mainstream of power in the House.

The House astonished itself and many observers by passing Dellums' bill calling for a trade embargo and complete divestment by U.S. companies and citizens of their holdings in South Africa. It was the first time that divestment legislation has been passed by either house, and Dellums' version was far more stringent than the bill most observers expected to be passed.

In an interview yesterday, Dellums described the action as a major blow to apartheid that can't be undone or turned back. He also views it as a refutation of the belief of many—which is "personally painful" to him—that he is just another flaky politician from Berkeley.

'"Berserkely,' a lot of them call it," he said, smiling ruefully.

"Yesterday's action was the shot heard 'round the world, that was heard in Pretoria," he continued. "We haven't simply altered the debate on apartheid, we've changed the environment. Whatever the dynamics of that moment, its effect can't be changed.

"Whatever comes out of the Senate and conference has to be stronger. We've opened new possibilities because we've moved the fear barrier back. We politicians live with a multiplicity of fears."

This view was shared on both sides of the aisle in the House.

"Yesterday, the House went to Ron Dellums; Ron Dellums didn't go to the House," said Rep. Jim Leach (R-Iowa). "Bill Gray went to the House, but the House went to Dellums."

Leach was referring to a more moderate sanctions bill sponsored by Rep. William H. Gray III (D-Pa.), chairman of the House Budget Committee and one of the House's most influential insiders. It was expected to pass but was never voted on because of the surprise call-up and passage of Dellums' bill, which was the designated substitute for Gray's.

Passage of his bill was a personal milestone for Dellums, 50, a veteran of nearly 16 years in the House.

"This is the highest point of my political life, the most significant and personally rewarding," he said. "It's been a long journey to this moment."

His next most satisfying moment was his presentation of the alternate military budget in 1982, which proposed reducing spending by more than $50 billion and canceling several nuclear missile programs. It got only 55 votes, about a third from the Black Caucus.

In many ways, Dellums is a paradox.

He is still the outspoken liberal he has always been, but his colleagues now see him as one of the most gentlemanly, considerate, even courtly members on Capitol Hill. They also value him as a "moral force for reorder-ing priorities," in Leach's words, but think he's "too liberal to be in the mainstream."

Dellums, however, finds that the role of moral-outsider-gadfly leaves a lot to be desired.

I came here not to project my personality but to project ideas, to lift the level of debate above rancor and personal attack," he said, "We're talking war and peace, life and death, man, and if you carry controversial ideas in a controversial personality, how can you ever get anything done?"

The problem, he contends is that he came to Congress during the counterculture revolution of the 1960s and the anti-Vietnam war protest and became the personification of Berkely and all it symbolizes.

My humanity got lost in the process," he said. "It has been personally painful to be considered just a gadfly, a maverick, a strong speaker, but outside the mainstream of power. What yesterday was about is that people have to see me in a serious way. This has been an exonerating factor."

He denies that he has just been an "off-the-wall voice."

"I introduced the first divestment bill 16 years ago," he recalled. "Did I come to the country or did the country come to me?"

When he first came to the Congress, Dellums seemed to be challenging its very legitimacy and that of the leadership, holding unofficial "hearings" on Vietnmam war atrocities and racism in the military. Over the years, however, he's mellowed.

His seniority entitled him in 1983 to become chairman of the military construction subcommittee, and he surprised his colleagues by his considerate dealings with them and his skill at managing legislation.

Dellums said that on Wednesday, he could sense momentum for his bill building during the day.

"Members, including Republicans, would come up to me and say, 'Ron I wasn't with you last year but I am this time.' I could also tell from the spectrum of people who were asking for time to speak on its behalf, including a greater number of Republicans. I knew we were gaining but not necessarily that we'd win."

As floor manager of the bill, Dellums had 30 minutes of debate time to mete out to his supporters.

"I don't like to give a colleague just a minute or 30 seconds to speak," he said. "But there were so many I had no choice. When [Rep. Charles E.] Bennett [D-Fla.] got up to speak, I had to fight back tears because I knew where he was coming from."

After the voice vote by which the measure passed, Dellums expected its opponents to call for a recorded vote.

"I sure wasn't going to ask for it but I was astonished that no one else did," he said. "I guess it was because they realized that if they did they'd have to account for their votes."

A staff aide speculated that conservatives who oppose sanctions wanted a bill so tough that the Republican-controlled Senate would balk at it. He also contended that the House leadership didn't want to chance defeating Dellums' measure because that would look like the House was backing down.

"They blundered into principle," he said.

HOUSE VOTES BILL TO CUT OFF INVESTMENT IN SOUTH AFRICA; STRIKES BY BLACKS MULTIPLY

(By Neil A. Lewis)

WASHINGTON, June 18.—The House, in a surprise development, approved and sent to the Senate today a measure imposing a trade embargo and requiring complete divestment by American companies and citizens of their holdings in South Africa.

The measure, approved by voice vote, would require the severing of all economic ties with South Africa and would oblige the approximately 280 American companies doing business there to shut operations within 180 days if the bill were signed into law. It would impose a full embargo on trade, allowing only the import of certain materials if the President certified that they were of strategic importance.

The vote is certain to increase political pressure, not only on the Pretoria Government, but also on the Reagan Administration, which has vigorously opposed further economic penalties against South Africa.

POSSIBILITY OF CONFRONTATION

The measure is unusual in that sanctions against foreign governments are usually initiated by the President, as was the case when he ordered oil companies to halt operations in Libya, using his emergency powers. If the bill became law the President would be charged with enforcing the sanctions, but as Mr. Reagan opposes such moves he could decline to carry out the measure, leading to a possible confrontation with Congress.

At the United Nations today, the United States and Britain vetoed a Security Council resolution that would have imposed limited economic sanctions against South Africa. [Page A10.]

Edward P. Djerejian, a deputy White House press secretary, said the House vote would have no impact on the President's opposition to tougher economic sanctions.

SANCTIONS ADAMANTLY OPPOSED

"Our position on that remains the same," he said. "We are adamantly opposed to punitive economic sanctions."

The architect of the measure was Representative Ronald V. Dellums, Democrat of California.

"What we did today is going to give a tremendous boost to the momentum of the anti-apartheid movement in this country," he said. "I'm still shocked it happened."

After the vote, Representative William H. Gray 3d said, "This demonstrates the House and the American people wanted the strongest possible sanctions against South Africa." The Pennsylvania Democrat was the sponsor of a less severe sanctions measure that the House debated throughout the day and was anticipating voting on.

But in a move that stunned both supporters and opponents, the measure suggested by Mr. Dellums requiring a full trade embargo and complete economic disinvestment was adopted as a substiture by voice vote. Republican opponents hurriedly conferred on strategy and decided not to call for a roll-call vote. The measure itself was then quickly passed by voice vote.

"I was very surprised by what happened," said Representative Robert J. Walker, a Pennsylvania Republican who was a principal opponent. But Mr. Walker said the measure approved is so strict that it will be easier for President Reagan to veto it and more difficult for supporters to override a veto.

"Sanctions are dead," said Representative Mark Siljander, a Michigan Republican and a vocal opponent of sanctions. "We lost the battle but won the war."

The severe sanctions approved today could also make it less likely that it will be approved in the Senate, which has yet to take up the matter.

Mr. Djerejian said it was unclear if Mr. Reagan would actively fight to block the Senate measure.

Supporters of increasing economic pressure on the Pretoria Government were exultant at today's turn of events.

Representative Stephen J. Solarz, Democrat of Brooklyn, described the vote as "the American answer" to the state of emergency imposed in South Africa last week by President P. W. Botha. "It sends the strongest signal possible," he said.

The House had spent the day debating a more modest measure that was approved last week by the House Foreign Affairs Committee. That measure would have imposed economic penalties in two stages, the first requiring an end to all new loans and investments as well as banning the import of coal, uranium and steel from South Africa. In a year's time, if certain conditions including the release of the imprisoned anti-apartheid leader, Nelson Mandela, had not been met, the sanctions would be increased.

The measure approved today in its place would impose within 180 days of enactment a total embargo on trade with South Africa, except for the import of minerals if the President certifies they are of strategic importance. The 280 American companies that would have to cease operations employ about 66,000 people, according to the House Foreign Affairs Committee staff and do about $1.8 billion in business annually.

In addition, landing rights for South African Airways in this country would be suspended, thus ending the five-times-a-week flight from Johannesburg to New York.

Many American companies have already begun to draw down their investments in South Africa without any Government pressure to do so.

In today's debate, Mr. Siljander said he was opposed to apartheid, but did not believe crippling the South African economy was the answer. "Will the sanctions in this bill stop the killings there?" he asked.

THE SMELL OF BLOOD

Representative Lynn Martin, an Illinois Republican, said she would support sanctions because "I believe in South Africa today, there is a smell of blood and I believe there comes a time when we must stand up as a nation and be counted."

The consideration of increased penalties against South Africa comes 10 months after Mr. Reagan reluctantly imposed a series of limited economic penalties against South Africa by executive order. Both the House and Senate last year passed versions of a sanctions bill. Mr. Reagan, who had threatened to veto any such measure, abruptly reversed himself and issued the executive order when it became apparent that some form of legislation would be enacted over his veto.

His sudden change of position deflated the opposition and the Republican leadership was able to shelve the issue, sparing the President the likely political embarrassment of having his veto overridden.

The sanctions imposed by the President prohibited most new loans to the South African Government and banned the import of Krugerrands, the South African gold coins.

There are currently five countries for which there is a virtual ban on trade: Libya, Cuba, Cambodia, North Korea, and Vietnam. In those imstances, the President would have to certify he was suspending trade under various acts that grant him emergency powers due to national security considerations.

SUPPORT OF S. 1073, THE JAPANESE TECHNICAL LITERATURE ACT OF 1985

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of S. 1073, The Japanese Technical Literature Act of 1985, which the House passed yesterday. The purpose of this bill is to enhance the Federal role in ensuring the availability of Japanese scientific, technical, and economic information to the scientists, engineers, and entrepreneurs of the United States.

This country must regain its status at the forefront of scientific and technical innovation in the development of products, services, and economic and societal advances. Our native entrepreneurial acumen, evidenced so often in the past, will allow us to convert innovative developments into that economic activity which will permit us to be, once again, preeminent in world trade.

Our position in world trade, compared to the Japanese, has changed dramatically in Japan's favor in recent years. As Mr. WALGREN's subcommittee indicated in its report on this bill:

The dramatic change in their competitive position in high technology is indicated by their expanding balance in trade with the United States. In 1985, the U.S. trade deficit with Japan totaled $50 billion. On a worldwide basis, Japan had a $45.6 billion trade surplus, while the United States had a record $150 billion trade deficit.

A large part of Japan's economic success can be attributed to that country's active national policy of collecting, translating, and subsequently applying foreign scientific and technical information to meet its own needs, as determined by its exceptional long-range planning. Not only does the United States not have a similar policy, it has not exhibited the willingness to engage in the kind of planning which would make such policies part of a cogent, overall strategy.

S. 1073 would provide us with at least a first, tentative step toward the kind of national program which could eventually become the means for this country forging ahead in international trade.

We can no longer afford the luxury of that historic reliance of ours on "Yankee ingenuity" which has tended to engender the belief that technologies and products which were "not invented here" are of little, or no, use to us. Japan is no longer merely a copier of foreign products nor simply a user of foreign technologies. Rather, that country has become a world leader in technological and entrepreneurial innovation, and we must make every effort to assist the American economy in countering its success—a success which is a real threat to our economic well-being.

United States business and industry are insufficiently aware of the value of Japanese scientific and technical information, and they are ineffective in exploiting it. The Federal Government must now take the lead in rectifying the situation before it is beyond rectification.

The National Technical Information Service [NTIS], which will play a major role in the implementation of the program initiated by this legislation, has the institutional skills and experience to determine those areas of information needs which are not now being met by academic, professional, or commercial sources. NTIS also has the ability to direct efficiently the utilization of resources made available by the passage of S. 1073. Additionally, S. 1073 requires that American businesses, professional societies, and library organizations be consulted in establishing selection criteria for the information to be acquired under this program.

The attitude of the Japanese Government toward its own technical information resources requires that the United States Government provide the leadership in the acquisition of Japanese information. The Japanese Government considers its information to be copyrighted, and will release it for reproduction and dissemination outside its own borders only on the basis of a formal agreement. The Japanese have displayed a willingness to enter into these kinds of agreements freely with United States agencies. Several such agencies and departments, including NTIS, the Department of Defense, Energy, State, and the National Science Foundation maintain information gathering activities in Japan. I urge that, as a part of any programs funded under the provisions of this legislation, those disparate activities be subject to coordination, at least to the extent of common reporting of their acquisitions.

Further, because of the proven value of such an agency as NTIS, I want to go on record as not being in concert with this administration's attempts to privatize this invaluable national resource. It is contrary to our national interests for NTIS to be either privatized or made a Government corporation—either change would jeopardize its ability to carry on its mission, a mission which will become more valuable with the passage of time.

In closing, I strongly recommend that we join the effort of our colleagues in the Senate and vote favorably on this bill. It is a small and overdue step in the support of the international economic competitiveness of our Nation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

BUCKING THE SYSTEM

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I have become increasingly concerned about the reorganizing, or reconstituting, of U.S. farms, with USDA approval, allegedly to evade the $50,000 annual limit on certain commodity program payments. This type of practice threatens to undermine not only the integrity of one specific aspect of Federal agricultural policy, the payment limitation, but of agricultural programs in general.

To more adequately describe this problem, I'd like to share with my colleagues an article published on Tuesday, June 24, 1986, in the Washington Post. I believe it reveals one more reason why the present farm program is quickly becoming a failure.

[From the Washington Post, June 24, 1986]

LOOPHOLE LETS FARMERS GLEAN EXTRA SUBSIDIES

PROGRAM COSTS SOARING, OFFICIALS CONCEDE

(By Ward Sinclair)

Many farmers are reorganizing their large farm operations into smaller units to qualify for extra federal subsidies, according to U.S. Department of Agriculture officials, who acknowledge that this year's program costs will soar beyond earlier estimates.

The reorganizations, all apparently legal under USDA regulations, allow farmers to skirt the $50,000 limit on individual payments and collect additional tens of thousands of dollars, or more, in crop program benefits.

But these unanticipated outlays are only one factor in the rocketing cost of the new farm program's direct payments, which USDA calculates could reach $13 billion this year. The previous high, about $9 billion, was in 1983. Payments last year were $7.8 billion.

Robert L. Thompson, assistant secretary for economics, said yesterday that the programs fashioned by Congress last year "opened more loopholes" in the $50,000 payment limitation and will allow many farmers to receive $1 million or more in direct subsidies.

"Million-dollar-plus cotton and rice payments will be significant. There will be a small handful of wheat and feed-grain producers in the $1 million range, but payments of $150,000 to $200,000 will not be uncommon in wheat and feed grains," Thompson said. "It will get obscene."

Thompson and other administration officials argued during last year's farm bill debate that the $50,000 limit should be lowered and said that provisions exempting certain payments from the limitation would inflate program costs. "Congress certainly was duly warned," he said.

Reports that many farmers are reorganizing to get more federal benefits have led Reps. Dan Glickman (D-Kan.), Byron L. Dorgan (D-N.D.) and Leon E. Panetta (D-Calif.) to ask the General Accounting Office to investigate.

Glickman said he believed that the extra budget costs added by the reorganizations will force Congress to review farm policy next year.

"The cost numbers on this new farm program will get so gigantic that after the 1986 elections we will probably have to look at the issue of targeting federal benefits to the farmers who can demonstrate need," Glickman said.

Thomas Von Garlem, a USDA official who randomly reveiws farmers' proposals for reorganization, which are approved at the county level, said he has encountered cases in which farmers have become entitled to payments of upwards of $1 million by splitting their farms into smaller pieces.

Von Garlem said the reorganization issue has become "hotter than a firecracker. . . . More farmers are bumping the $50,000 limit, and as they do, they feel they are obligated to look for ways to avoid the limit."

Officials here could provide no numbers, but they said that the reorganizations are occurring on a large scale and that they are adding to the cost of the federal programs in a major way.

In a recent spot check in four counties, the GAO found that reorganizations had increased at least 50 percent in two Arkansas rice-growing counties, by about the same amount in one major Kansas wheat county and by about 20 percent in a smaller Kansas wheat county.

Von Garlem said he has seen cases in which an individual farmer has split a large farm into "15 or 20" new operations, which would qualify for direct subsidies of $750,000 to $1 million.

"There's definitely an increase in the reorganizations because more farmers are finding themselves subject to the $50,000 limit," he said. "The rules for defining eligibility are very complicated, but it all gets down to a definition of who is a 'parson.' "

While the law limits the subsidy on an individual basis, Von Garlem noted that it also allows the same person to qualify repeatedly for benefits by entering more than one farming unit in the program. Other variations allow payments up to the limit to members of partnerships.

Farmer A and Farmer B, for example, could each qualify for a $50,000 subsidy on his farm. Then, by forming a corporation and participating in it as partners, each could collect another $50,000 on another farm. And so on.

Milton Hertz, chief of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, which overseas the federal crop support programs and subsidy payments, said the reorganizations appear to be most prevalent among rice and cotton farmers, who quickly reach the $50,000 limit because of generous provisions of the farm legislation adopted last year.

Under the new program, Congress directed that price support loan rates by pushed down to make U.S. commodities more competitive. But to maintain farmers' incomes, the legislators decreed that the direct subsidies known as deficiency payments remain frozen at 1985 levels.

The deficiency payments are the difference between the loan rate and a target price level set by Congress for each of the major commodities. Since loan rates are being driven down, the farmer's per-bushel or per-bale subsidy payment increases proportionately.

Hertz and Von Garlem said that because the subsidies are larger, farmers reach the congressionally imposed $50,000 limit that much quicker. And as a result, they look for ways to get payments beyond the limit by creating "new" farming entities that also are eligible for federal benefits.

Von Garlem said the issue of farmers attempting to avoid the limits is not new. "We started to tighten up on the payment rules in the 1970s on the basis of what we thought Congress intended when it set limits," he said. "Then Congress passed a law saying we had to follow the 1971 rules that we were trying to tighten. On this issue the legislative history is pretty clear."

DEMOCRACY WINS IN RECENT SPANISH ELECTIONS

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, this past Sunday, the people of Spain held elections for their Congress and Prime Minister. Once again, Prime Minister Felipe González emerged victorious. As an admirer of Felipe since the mid-seventies, I am pleased that he will continue as the leader of the Spanish Government.

But the real victors in Sunday's elections were the Spanish people. They have once again shown their total commitment to the democratic process. The years of darkness that preceded the emergence of the Spanish democracy in 1976 did nothing to quell the thirst of the Spanish people for democracy. Thus far, they have produced a number of fine political leaders, most notably Felipe González. I am certain, however, that he will not be the last.

I congratulate Prime Minister González and the people of Spain on their recent elections. In light of those elections, I am inserting in the RECORD excerpts from a New York Times Magazine article on Spain and Felipe González for my colleagues' perusal.

[From the New York Times Magazine June 22, 1986]

SPAIN'S NEW FACE

(By Edward Schumacher)

A salsa band led by two barebellied young women and a balding singer wearing a bow tie had been working up the crowd. Across the top of the green and white outdoor stage, an election banner read "Por Buen Camino"—On the Good Road. Then someone on the top tier of the grandstands saw him, and a thundering chant of "Felipe, Felipe" spread.

Felipe González Márquez, Prime Minister of Spain, stepped before the crowd in Valencia. He blushed as the cheering swept over him.

After nearly four years in office, Felipe González has emerged as one of Europe's brightest political stars. While the rest of the Continent is dominated by older leaders such as Helmut Kohl in West Germany or Margaret Thatcher in Britian, the handsome, boyish-looking González draws throngs of cameramen and squealing teenage fans when he visits foreign capitals. His forceful, forward-looking visions for Spain and a politically integrated Europe have made him a prized guest and speaker abroad. European Socialists are on the defensive, but he stands out as a proud exception, "Latinizing" the European left, as he puts it.

Forty-four years old, González is running for his second term as prime Minister in elections scheduled for today. Even his principal opponents—Manuel Fraga Iribarne of the centerright Popular Alliance and former prime Minister Adolfo Suárez of the moderate Social Democratic Center—say that, barring any unforeseen last-minute events, the question is not whether he will win, but by how much.

The elections thus seem to matter less than the attention they have forcused on the country and its leadership. What lies behind the dynamism of González and a whole new generation of Spanish political figures is a new Spain itself. The nation, which next month will observe the 50th anniversary of the start of the Spanish Civil War, has over the last decade undergone a quiet but dramatic revolution.

The arts are flourishing. The famed Señoritos, the idle sons of the Spanish rich, have become young professionals with rolled-up shirt sleeves, and the sons of blue-collar workers are getting college degrees. The country's young democracy is being held up as an example to other countries still laboring under dictatorships.

González has moved aggressively to restore Spain's identity and importance as a part of the West. Spain in the last six months has joined the European Community and voted to stay in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. In Latin America, González has worked to reassert Spanish influence, and has clashed with both the Reagan Administration and the Sandinistas over politics in Nicaragua.

González himself is a Latin paradox. Despite his charismatic hold on the nation, he is little known beyond his public persona. A modern television politician, he tries to avoid face-to-face campaigning. Yet, he relishes parliamentary debate. And while his party has suffered some in opinion polls, González's own ratings have remained steadily high.

He has abandoned the ideology of the old Spanish left and replaced it with large doses of pragmatism and moderation.

"What socialism, and even the left, has often represented in the south of Europe," he said in a recent interview, "was this curious idea of permanently inventing the future while allowing the right to permanently govern the present. We have broken that dynamic a little. What we're dealing with here is not inventing the future. We're dealing with governing the present and transforming it with a practical vision of a freer, more equal, more just society."

The enthusiasm and energy that González and the Socialists have brought to Spanish Government and culture has captivated the rest of Europe, bringing Spain closer to its Continental neighbors than at any time in recent memory.

European art collectors have been flocking to Spain to buy new painting and sculpture. Spanish films have been winning Academy Awards and Cannes prizes. Spanish fashion designers are beginning to show their work in Paris and Milan. El País, a daily started after Franco's death, is compared to Le Monde and other major international newspapers.

In part, the cultural boom is a result of deliberate policy. Museums have been made free for Spaniards, and the Prado museum, long venerable but tatty, has undergone a major facelift. The education budget has nearly doubled and new emphasis has been given to improving Spain's generally poor universities.

But behind the cultural explosion—and González own rise—there is also an important social phenomenon: Spain has finally become a middle-class country. It began in the 1960's, under Franco. Spaniards went to work as migrants in Northern Europe, and European tourists came in such numbers that today Spain receives more tourists than any country in the world, according to United Nation's statistics. Both movements brought money and ideas to Spain. At the same time, the economy took off, tripling per capita income in the last 30 years.

Young people burgeoning with ambition have poured from the provinces into the cities. In 1955, 46 percent of the country's workers were fishermen and farmers. Today, two-thirds of those have abandoned the farm and the sea. Spain has done in 30 years what most of the rest of Europe did in 130 years, and the momentum is still pushing it forward. Therein lies the source of much of González's success. The new middle class in the González generation, and it shares with him middle-class values and a vision of a modern and moderate Spain.

It is a vision that led Spain into the Common Market. To Spaniards, the Common Market is much more than tomatoes or rolled steel. "What has been decided upon is Spain's great political decision to participate in a common West European destiny," González said in an interview. Joining the Common Market, he added, was "a priceless opportunity to modernize, to catch the train of history."

For González, it is also the starting point for a new, and active, Spanish foreign policy. Last month, for example, González went to Moscow. What transpired there was by international protocol extraordinary. González and the Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev were secluded together for nearly five hours, each accompanied by only one aide.

González is hardly an admirer of the Soviet Union. In a lively luncheon with President Reagan in the Moncloa, the two leaders swapped jokes. González told one about Karl Marx returning from the dead and saying over Soviet television, "Workers of the world—forgive me."

Now, under González's guidance, Spain has confirmed its place in NATO. The NATO referendum was the biggest hurdle of his administration. Spain joined the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in 1982, but, upon taking office, González halted the process of military integration, promising the referendum. He was leery of NATO then, but, in a major turnaround, admitted to a change of mind and campaigned hard in favor of Spanish membership in the alliance. In the referendum, he risked his political career—suggesting at one point that he might resign if he lost.

Defying all polls, González won the referendum by the surprisingly large margin of nearly 53 percent to 40 percent. He won by the dint of a disciplined party and his own popularity. Spain had decided once and for all to throw in its lot with the West, ending a Spanish intellectual fantasy that the country's ties to the Arab world and Latin America made it somehow different.

But the victory was not unqualified. To win over doubters, González, the posibilista, added three conditions to Spain's NATO membership. The first is that nuclear weapons will remain banned in Spain. The second is that, although Spain will participate in NATO military planning, its forces will not be subject to direct NATO military command, a bow to residual isolationist sentiments. The third is that González will work to reduce the number of American troops, 12,500, already authorized in Spain under a separate bilateral treaty.

Behind the third condition is anti-Americanism. "It's understandable," González said matter-of-factly. "The Americans backed Franco." González argues that visceral anti-Americanism is outdated, and also that the treaty allowing American bases in Spain is obsolete now that Spain is in NATO. The treaty, which dates back to 1953 and the cold war, is being renegotiated, and the Reagan Administration has been grudgingly amenable to Spanish demands.

The negotiations are an example of González's independence. American warplanes flying from bases in Britain to bomb Libya in April flew around Spain because of González's reticence about allowing them to enter Spanish airspace. He never said no, but after Lieut. Gen. Vernon A. Walters, the American delegate to the United Nations, felt out González in vague terms during a secret meeting in Madrid, the Americans never directly raised the issue. The likelihood of explosive anti-American demonstrations was clear to both men, according to Spanish officials, and González publicly condemned the raid.

In Latin America, the return of Spanish democracy has made the mother country a model and cultural magnet. Latin leaders almost weekly troop through Madrid to meet with González. He was swarmed like a pop idol by admiring crowds when he attended the inauguration of Raul Alfonsin in Argentina two years ago.

After Reagan's visit to Madrid last year, González said he was surprised by what he saw as a lack of expertise in United States policy toward Latin America. He differed with Reagan over putting pressure on Nicaragua.

But when three days later Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega Saavedra showed up, González differed with Ortega, too. With Ortega by his side on a sofa in the Moncloa during a joint news conference, González said he would like to see more pluralism in Nicaragua. He took umbrage when Ortega equated Reagan with Hitler. The United States fought Hitler, González reminded him, and added, "If a similar situation arises, the United States would do it again."

INTRODUCTION OF THE ASBESTOS HAZARD EMERGENCY RESPONSE ACT

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, the problem of asbestos exposure in our Nation's schools is a problem that we are all concerned with. Years ago, before we understood the health hazards, asbestos was used throughout school buildings because of its great insulating and acoustical properties. Unfortunately, we have learned since then that asbestos is truely harmful. We must now all face the fact that something needs to be done to abate and reduce the health hazard posed by asbestos in schools.

I am pleased today to join my colleagues, Congressman LENT, Congressman DINGELL, and Congressman FLORIO, in introducing asbestos legislation that represents an important first step in dealing with this environmental problem. Schools across the country will be required to inspect for asbestos and to abate asbestos in those circumstances where it may pose a health risk. Schools will also be required for the first time to develop management plans that describe the problem and the steps that the school is planning to take. These management plans will be made available to parents, teachers, and other schoolworkers for review.

This legislation has several other provisions worth noting. These provisions include liability protections for school administrators and contractors. The legislation also includes new emergency response procedures which will allow both the Governor and EPA to act in case of an immediate and significant hazard.

I believe this legislation deserves the support of all the Members of the House, and I urge my colleagues to join in working toward its swift passage.

LADY LIBERTY'S TORCH SHINES IN GLASSPORT, PA

HON. JOSEPH M. GAYDOS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, the eyes of the entire world will focus on New York City over the Fourth of July weekend as a newly restored Statue of Liberty starts its second century as the international symbol of freedom.

But the light from her refurbished torch will shine far beyond New York Harbor. It will be reflected in cities and towns across the land in a resurgence of patriotism not seen in the country since the Nation's bicentennial celebration a decade ago.

One municipality which has gone to great lengths to make the unveiling of the Lady of Liberty a memorable event is Glassport, PA, a community of 6,500 people in the 20th Congressional District. Sponsored by the Glassport Lions Club, a 3-day fair is planned to raise $25,000 to be donated toward the Lady's restoration.

It is a most ambitious undertaking, but Mr. Arthur F. Trunzo, chairman of the Liberty Centennial Celebration Committee, says: "Just as the immigrants showed uncommon courage by seeking freedom and opportunity in the New World, we feel it takes common courage to approach a fete such as our celebration for Miss Liberty in these hard economic times."

The beacon which is expected to draw thousands of visitors to Glassport will be an 8-foot high replica of the Lady herself. Originally destined for the Ellis Island Museum, the Lions Club arranged for its purchase through the Ellis Island Foundation.

Preceding the scheduled affair, which opens Friday, July 4, there is another event expected to attract statewide attention. At 11 a.m., Thursday, July 3, 75 people will gather at the base of the statue beside the community's honor roll to pledge their allegiance as new citizens of the United States. Coming from all sections of western Pennsylvania, the group will meet at the William S. Moorhead Federal Building in Pittsburgh and be given a police escort to Glassport. The oath of citizenship will be given by U.S. District Judge Alan N. Bloch and the keynote speaker at the ceremony will be Judge John P. Hester, a native of the community.

Mr. Speaker, for 100 years the Statue of Liberty has been recognized as the symbol of America's independence and the strength of her people—people such as Mr. Trunzo, the officers and members of the Glassport Lions Club, and the more than 30 businesses and organizations which will participate in the local celebration.

Therefore, on behalf of my colleagues in the Congress of the United States, I extend to Mr. Trunzo and his committee: Steve Orlando, John DePiero, Edward Johns, and James Johns, president of the Lions Club, our sincere appreciation for their display of patriotism and our best wishes for a most successful observance.

TAKE POLITICS OUT OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY SYSTEM

HON. WILLIAM W. COBEY, JR.

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. COBEY. Mr. Speaker, I urge all of my colleagues to lend their support to passage of H.R. 5050, legislation which would make the Social Security system an independent agency.

Already, this legislation has attracted wide, bipartisan support in the House of Representatives. I believe this support comes because H.R. 5050 would take politics out of the Social Security system.

Today, we have a Social Security system that is healthy and economically sound. Social Security is vital not only to millions of senior citizens, but also to every American worker who contributes to the system. We have a great responsibility to keep the Social Security system strong. Therefore, I believe now is an opportune time to completely remove Social Security from the regular Federal budget and return it to its original status as an independent fund.

Several times since 1968, when Social Security was made part of the regular Federal budget, recipients have been told that the system was a major reason for the growth in the Federal deficit. They have also been told that their benefits are in constant jeopardy of being cut to remedy the deficit problem and help balance the Federal budget. This chain of events has done nothing to reassure the millions of people who need Social Security to help pay for medical care, rent, and other basic expenses.

I believe it is important to make clear that the Social Security system in the past several years has been financed entirely by the Social Security payroll tax and is therefore unrelated to our current deficit crisis.

By passing H.R. 5050, Congress will show it has the resolve to remove politics from a Federal program that is vital to many senior citizens. Thus, I urge every Member of this House to examine H.R. 5050 and give it their support.

EAST CENTRAL WASHINGTON COUNTY, NY, A SPECIAL PLACE

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, anyone who has driven through the lovely hills and farmlands of east central Washington County, NY, knows that it is a very special place, the kind admired by artists, sports people, and other seekers of rural unspoiled places.

The residents of this area are also proud of their glorious surroundings. They are proud as well that, on July 12 of this year, they will celebrate the bicentennial of the establishment of their town, known as Hebron.

The Old Testament Village of Hebron was the burial place of the patriarch Abraham and King David's home for 7 years. Our own Hebron is likewise a special place, and a witness to the New World's faith in the land, the family farm, and traditional values.

The first residents of Hebron, Robert Creighton, John Hamilton, and David Whedon, were hardly pioneers who were equipped with all they needed to set up a home in the wilderness—a gun, an ax, some seed, some salt, and plenty of gumption. The Chase brothers, Abram and Timothy, who arrived shortly later, pushed on still further, to west Hebron, where they cleared the fields, raised their corn and carted it to the nearest gristmill, some 60 miles away.

Soon after, John Hamilton and Robert Wilson purchased a large tract and divided it for sale to relatives and friends from Rhode Island. This land, known as Campbell's Patent, was one of several grants made by the King of England as reward to soldiers for service in the French and Indian War. Most of the grantees had been members of the Highland Scotch 77th Regiment of Foot.

The population grew rapidly, and in 1786, the State legisature formally incorporated the new jurisdiction. Alexander Webster was selected as the first supervisor, and public improvements were undertaken.

By the turn of the century, Hebron had a population of about 2,500. Almost all of the early Hebronites were farmers, raising crops like Indian corn, potatoes, apples, and livestock in general, supplemented by the game they caught. There was not much surplus for sale, and cash was scarce. Gradually however, various residents took tannery, surveying, and weaving, while others became blacksmiths, harness makers, well diggers, and the makers of barrels, shoes, and brooms.

The early Hebron farmer-craftsmen were intent on clearing their land. Yet the more they cleared, the more time it took to farm and the less time was available for their sidelines. At the same time, farm surpluses grew and crops were taken to market over the improved roads. The local economy was thus ready to support full-time craftsmen and merchants. Villages and hamlets were born and quickly developed.

The larger villages which sprang up in Hebron included the Hollow, now known as East Hebron. One store building erected there in 1790 still stands. Another was Bedlam Corners, now West Hebron. Monroe's Meadows is today known as North Hebron. Many smaller hamlets were founded and still exist. These villages served the townspeople very well through the vast changes which came about in the 19th century.

During the industrial revolution, villages in the region manufactured such items as wagons, carriages, mill and leather products, and the famous Hebron potato hook.

Dairy farming became the principal agricultural specialty during the last part of the 1800's, and remains the principal agricultural specialty today, with bulk milk being shipped by truck to help feed the huge populations of the eastern seaboard.

Hebron's villages today are no longer the scenes of bustling commercial activities. Gone are the blacksmith shops and other signs of the way of yesteryear's village life. Gone, too, are the majority of operating family farms.

Yet Hebron's way of life remains vital. The town has not diminished, it has simply evolved into a new phase of history. Lumber, furniture, and cabinetry businesses are still found in town, as our antique shops, agricultural services, and at least one commercial orchard. Craftsmen still flourish here, as do the excellent artists for whom the area is well-known.

The town also has a widely admired volunteer fire department and an up-to-date town government. In the center of the township is the Hebron Camp and Conference Center, purchased by the Presbytery of Albany as a retreat and summer youth program site.

Today's Herbron maintains many physical links to its past, outstanding among them the one-room schoolhouses. The schoolhouse at East Hebron has been restored by the Hebron Preservation Society and now serves as a museum for artifacts, schoolbooks and pictures. Visitors to Herbron can also see some of the town's 34 cemeteries, the final resting places for those who founded the town and for many who have since shaped its destiny.

Hebron is also dotted with lovely old houses and wood frame structures of various architectural styles. Some are 200 years old. Among the most prized buildings are the three fully active churches remaining in the town, the handsome United Presbyterian Church, the stately Methodist Church and the Baptist Church built in 1826.

Hebron still boasts some of the most beautiful farms in the county, and its young people are active in 4–H and win ribbons and prizes each August at the famous Washington County Fair.

A few of today's 1,300 Hebronites can trace their ancestry back to the original prerevolutionary war era. Others are brand new to town, having relocated here to enjoy Hebron's beauty and rural lifestyle. All are proud of their town and determined to preserve it for future generations to enjoy.

This determination is keen now, as we mark the town's bicentennial. Ceremonies and events are planned to give voice and substance to the people's pride.

I would like to close by signaling out from among the many community-minded citizens the work of John Wever, town supervisor, Clifford Rogers, president of the preservation society, and Warren Cardwell, whose painstaking research provided the framework for my remarks today.

I will have the honor of participating in Hebron's bicentennial on July 12. I would like to extend a cordial invitation to one and all to visit our area some day and experience hospitality—Hebron style. Take in the fair, a picnic a historical enactment, or just enjoy the peace and quiet of this small piece of heaven here on Earth.

TO COMMEND SONYA AND TANYA WITT FOR OUTSTANDING PUBLIC SERVICE

HON. DAN MICA

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, the American Institute for Public Service was founded in 1973, to honor the highest ideals and achievements in the field of public service in the United States. Each year the Institute recognizes the dedication, sacrifice and accomplishments of individuals serving the American people, through it's annual presentation of the Jefferson awards.

I wish to take this occasion to commend Sonya and Tanya Witt, 15 year old twin sisters, from West Palm Beach, FL, who will be awarded the Outstanding Public Service Benefiting Local Communities Award Category today. Sonya and Tanya will join Secretary George P. Shultz, Mr. H. Ross Perot, Mr. Eugene Lang, Mr. Robert Hayes, Ms. Ruby Calloway, Ms. Therese Dozier, Ms. Fannie Roston and Mr. Philip Viall who will all receive the 1986 Jefferson Awards today in the Supreme Court ceremony.

Sonya and Tanya first saw the plight of the migrant and immigrant children whose parents work in the agricultural field of western Palm Beach County when they visited Hope Rural School, as part of a school project. They were so affected by the plight of these children, that they volunteered to work in the school's day care program. They learned firsthand, the needs of these children and the poverty that their families had left behind in their homelands of Mexico and Guatemala and were motivated to do something about it.

The twins began to raise funds by baking and selling cakes, mowing lawns and doing any type of small jobs that they could find, and also began collecting books, clothing, toys, and medicine. Their parents agreed that they would assist their daughters by matching their fundraising efforts and help to provide them with the needed airfare to deliver their gifts to the children of a remote mountain village of Merida, Mexico. During the Christmas holiday of 1985, accompanied by their father, Sonya and Tanya delivered their gifts to the Mayan Indian children.

The girls have begun another fundraising effort for a return trip to other poverty stricken areas of our neighboring countries. They have also been active in Cardinal Newman High School by organizing Aid to Africa and serving as cofounders and copresidents of SADD (Students Against Drunk Driving) in that school.

I had the distinct honor of meeting Tanya and Sonya and their parents at the Jefferson Award Ceremony today and was moved by not only their unselfish and deep responsibility for others, but by their untiring energy and commitment to performing extraordinary acts of public service in our community. They are to be commended and are examples to follow in helping establish international goodwill.

USDA'S HISTORIAN RETIRES

HON. E de la GARZA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, and I include myself, are sometimes critical of people who work for our Federal Government. When we want to criticize, we call them bureaucrats. But we all know that the roster of Federal employees also includes many thousands of skillful, dedicated men and women whose service provides great benefits to our Government, our Nation, and our people.

Today I want to pay tribute to one of those Government officials, a man whose work over half a century of service has made enormous contributions to American agriculture. He is Wayne D. Rasmussen, who will retire next month as the historian of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Thousands of people in this country and in many other parts of the world have reaped the benefits of Mr. Rasmussen's careful, comprehensive, and accurate work over the years.

There is an old and true saying that those who do not know about the mistakes of the past are doomed to repeat them. That's another way of saying that we cannot make sound policy for agriculture * * * or in most other fields, for that matter * * * if we do not know what has been done in this area in the past. One of Wayne Rasmussen's great contributions to our national agricultural policy has come in the way he has kept us in touch with the historical record. When Members of Congress needed background in agricultural history as the foundation for dealing with current and future problems, they have usually been turning to Mr. Rasmussen's work.

This has been going on for many years, Mr. Speaker. When Mr. Rasmussen first joined the Agriculture Department staff, Henry Wallace was Secretary of Agriculture and Franklin D. Roosevelt was in his second term as President. The New Deal farm programs were in place across the country and farm prices were recovering from the disaster of the Depression. In that spring of 1937, when Wayne Rasmussen began work at USDA, cotton prices had moved up to 14 cents a pound and wheat, at $1.26 a bushel, was above 100 percent of parity.

That was a time when the Nation's farm population was nearly 32 million and about one out of every four Americans lived on a farm. Since then, Mr. Rasmussen has served through the administrations of Presidents Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Ford, Carter, and Reagan. He has served under Secretaries of Agriculture including Secretaries Wickard, Anderson, Brannan, Benson, Freeman, Hardin, Butz, Knebel, Bergland, Block, and now Secretary Lyng. Agriculture has gone through a technological revolution and our farm population has gone down to just a small fraction of the national total.

Through all these changes, Mr. Rasmussen has been a pioneer in research developing the use of history as a tool in studing and evaluating current and potential agricultural policies. His analyses of Government policies and programs have provided, over many years, an invaluable perspective on agricultural policy and the way it has affected all segments of our economy and our society. Congressional leaders have depended on this basic information, as have Government administrators, historians and economists. His work has provided a broad framework for understanding how American agriculture fits into the national and world political and economic scene. His studies, as a result, have had a major impact on American agriculture.

At the same time, Mr. Rasmussen's work has been an always-available and reliable source of information about American agriculture for reporters, scholars, and students. When news people wanted to give their readers, listeners or viewers the historical background that provides understanding and depth for current developments, they often went first to the man who served as the Agriculture Department's institutional memory, Wayne Rasmussen. Partly because reporters and scholars have come to trust his work, Mr. Rasmussen's interpretations of history have allowed a generation of nonfarm Americans to better understand the vital role of agriculture in their lives.

Mr. Rasmussen's influence goes far beyond our own country. He has often been called on to speak to representatives of foreign governments, to foreign scholars and other visitors to Washington. In 1976 he was selected by the U.S. Information Agency as bicentennial lecturer in the history of American agriculture, traveling in India, Iran, and Afghanistan.

Wayne Rasmussen was born on a cattle ranch in south-central Montana in 1915. He attended Eastern Montana Normal School and taught school in a one-room log cabin. He graduated with a degree of history in 1937 from the University of Montana and went to work for the U.S. Department of Agriculture in that same year. After 3 years in a records management post, he transferred to the history group in the old bureau of agricultural economics, and he has been there ever since. As he prepares to retire, he is the head of the agricultural history branch of the economics research service.

Wayne Rasmussen continued his education after joining the USDA and earned a Ph.D. in 1950 from George Washington University. He is past president of the Agricultural History Society, a founder and past president of the Association for Living Historical Farms and Agricultural Museums, past president of the Society for History in the Federal Government, a fellow of the American Agricultural Economics Association, and the recipient of the superior service and distinguished service awards from the USDA. He has been a university teacher and an author of books including several on the history of the USDA.

Mr. Speaker, I said that Wayne Rasmussen is retiring, and it is true that he is leaving his post at the Department of Agriculture after 50 years. But he is not retiring from agricultural history. He is planning now to write an historical evaluation of the extension service, a work which I am sure will make another major contribution to our understanding of how our national institutions work.

As Mr. Rasmussen moves on to this next stage of a distinguished career, I think it is fitting that we spread on the public record the fact that the Congress appreciates and honors his service to agriculture and the Nation.

SOVIET SCIENTISTS STRESS SDI FEASIBILITY

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, in an open letter signed by 30 Emigree Soviet scientists published in the Wall Street Journal on June 13, 1986, the Soviet Union's SDI research is characterized as "doable" and well-advanced. Since the late 1960's, according to the emigre scientists, the Soviet Union has engaged in major SDI research, exceeding that of the United States. Development and deployment of Soviet star wars systems is an important Soviet objective, say the emigres. They strongly urge that the U.S. pursue its own strategic defense shield.

For the Members' interest, the open letter from the Wall Street Journal is included in the RECORD:

AN OPEN LETTER TO AMERICANS BY 30 EMIGRE SOVIET SCIENTISTS

In relation to the Strategic Defense Initiative we must tell you, from our experience and understanding, and even though Gorbachev may deny it, we are convinced that:

1. The Soviet scientific community and government leaders believe that effective strategic defenses are technically possible and doable;

2. The Soviet Union has been intensely working on its own version of the Strategic Defense Initiative since the late 1960s, and puts much more of its efforts and resources into its "Star Wars" and strategic defense programs than does the U.S.

3. Development and deployment of Soviet "Star Wars" systems is part of the Soviet Union's global strategy against the noncommunist world which seeks by coercion to usher in the "final historic era" of worldwide Communism and "peace" maintained by Soviet military power.

4. The Soviet Communist leaders can be expected to continue working on their "Star Wars" system, either overtly or covertly and with high priority, no matter what they say or what they sign, or what the U.S. does. . . .

As former citizens of the Soviet Union, we love the country of our birth as much as we love the country of our choice. We want for all the millions of our countrymen, a future of peace and, eventually, freedom. The Strategic Defense Shield will, we believe, help achieve these goals by discouraging the Soviet leaders from using nuclear blackmail to gain their ends, and instead encourage them to turn inward and begin addressing the needs of the Russian and other people subjugated by them.

KIDNEY DISEASE PATIENTS AND THE NETWORK PROGRAM: THE NEED TO AMEND THE ADMINISTRATION'S PROPOSED REGULATIONS

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, Members' offices are receiving mail from end stage renal disease (ESRD) patients about a series of recent regulations issued by the Department of Health and Human Services which impact this life-saving program.

One of the areas of concern is a plan by the administration to fundamentally alter the ESRD Network Program. Currently there are 32 regional networks designed to provide quality assurance and analysis and to represent the concerns of the Nation's 80,000 kidney disease patients. Networks also provide the only reliable source of data and statistics on trends in the treatment of this disease and the operation of this $2 billion-plus program.

As chairman of the Ways and Means Health Subcommittee, I am concerned that the administration's proposed regulations will destroy this important program. HHS proposes to reduce the number of networks to about 14, to separate them from the data-gathering and verification function, to put the operation of the Networks up for competitive bid, and to make other changes.

My staff has reviewed the comments received by HHS to its Federal Register Notice of Proposed Rulemaking. They were all in opposition to the proposals. No one supports the changes. The concerns expressed in these comments from throughout the Nation convince me that we need to legislate some improvements and protections for this program, which is so important in giving patients a voice in the quality of their treatment. During the coming weeks, I will be developing a proposal to help preserve the Network Program. Comments and ideas from the public are most welcome. It is also my hope that the Appropriations Committee will provide more funds for the networks than the woefully inadequate $1 million requested by the administration.

Following are a series of quotes from the letters submitted to HHS in response to its Federal Register notice; they help make an excellent case for voiding much of the proposed regulation.

Rigo Lopez, a hemodialysis patient and president of the Orange County Chapter of the National Kidney Foundation:

"If I might be open with you, we patients have a very hard time just trying to live something close to a 'normal' life. Being on a dialysis machine 3 times a week for 4 to 5 hours each time, living on a restricted diet, not ever having enough energy to complete a simple task, cutbacks in Medicare, fighting the providers to get proper medical care in light of those cutbacks, and now you want to take away or completely change a proven system. A system we have come to rely on. And not just a system but a people we know and trust."

David E. Berger, director of government relations, National Medical Care, Inc.:

"Networks have in the past benefited from a substantial input of voluntary effort by members of the ESRD community. They have, in this regard, been an excellent example of the spirit of volunteerism which has been a cornerstone of many of President Reagan's policy initiatives. The 'local' character of the networks has been an important element in generating and supporting that voluntary effort. Volunteerism has allowed the Networks to do far more than would otherwise be possible given their limited budgets.

Jane Parker, president, American Nephrology Nurses' Association:

It takes a tremendous amount of effort on the part of network staff to complete even the routine data collection tasks. It seems absurd to even consider the suggestion of reverting to a data collection system that was tried in the past, yielded less than 50 percent compliance, and hence failed. How can we consider taking even a small step backward in collecting and maintaining the data on a federal program with costs in excess of $2 billion?

This routine and special data collection can only be accomplished completely and accurately under the current system where network staff work closely with facility staff and eventually get all necessary data.

Four and one half million dollars for a national data system along with everything else networks provide seems a reasonable expense for a $2+ billion program.

Friedrich K. Port, M.D., director of a Veterans Administration Hospital dialysis unit:

". . . I find that the proposed rule changes are a severe insult to the huge volunteer force that has been working for Networks.

Douglas Maxwell, M.D., University Nephrology Associates:

These organizations [Networks], which are extraordinarily economical, are the only organizations which provide any specific patient tracking data for the End-Stage Renal Disease Program. . .

Jack W. Owen, Executive Vice President, American Hospital Association:

While the AHA supports the effort to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of the ESRD program, the AHA "has strong reservations about the way HCFA proposes to use a competitive contracting process to establish the network organizations.

Brad Stuewe, President, Network Coordinating Council:

As a result of the data operations of the 32 Networks, HCFA now has 100 percent compliance for the ESRD Facility Surveys with 99 percent accuracy.

Judith Ann Almdale, Director, Nutrition Service, West Suburban Kidney Center, SC.:

As a facility representative of Network 15, it is immensely satisfying for me to look back on the Network's many collective accomplishments in quality assurance, education, patient treatment and rehabilitation, data systems and other areas. Despite prior funding limitations, the Networks have continued to provide an effective mechanism to insure the best possible ESRD services. This is due in great part to the extensive volunteer support and experience donated by those patients and professionals involved in the ESRD program. The networks will continue to function as a linkage between the Federal Government, the providers and the consumers of ESRD services as long as the proposed rule HSQ-115-P is not instituted.

John Gill, spouse of a ESRD patient:

In a final plea for a more realistic understanding of the ESRD program, I ask you, if your own spouse, child or another member of your family was a dialysis patient, would you vote for this proposal?

David M. Roxe, Northwestern Medical Faculty Foundation, Inc.:

Don't kill the Networks. The patients need them.

Allan G. Kavalich, Director, Nephrology, San Bernardino County Medical Center:

"The proposed rule would virtually destroy all that has been achieved by the networks in the past 8 years.

HCFA: PROMPT PAYMENT OF MEDICARE CLAIMS

HON. LAWRENCE J. SMITH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to cosponsor House Resolution 471 introduced on June 11 by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MACKAY]. This resolution calls for the prompt payment of Medicare claims and calls for congressional action if this is not accomplished.

HCFA has not allocated sufficient funds to process claims through the end of the fiscal year. This has resulted in a huge backlog of Medicare claims and a delay in payment to both beneficiaries and health care providers.

This deliberate attempt to deny timely processing of claims creates a false sense of economy. Unpaid claims are transferred to the next fiscal year in order to reduce the budget impact to HCFA. I fail to see the value of this budgetary maneuver which will only continue to delay the payment of claims.

In Florida, Blue Cross and Blue Shield was expected to receive enough funds from Medicare to process 20.6 million claims. With a reduction of $1.3 million from HCFA, Blue Cross and Blue Shield will be able to process 19 million claims. That will leave 2.1 million claims to be processed at the end of fiscal year 1986 as compared to over 500,000 remaining at the end of fiscal year 1985.

The increased waiting period has discouraged physicians from participating in the Medicare Program, since they are not being paid in a timely manner. In addition, the delay in claims processing presents a serious hardship for the millions of elderly citizens with limited financial resources forced to wait months to receive reimbursement for medical services.

I urge my colleagues to join in cosponsoring this resolution to send a loud and clear message to the administration that unless appropriate actions are taken, the House will ensure proper funding to guarantee the timely payment of Medicare claims.

SILVER SPRING MONKEYS

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my outrage over yesterday's action by the National Institutes of Health [NIH]. As you are aware, NIH removed 15 monkeys in 1981 from a Maryland laboratory [IBR] when it discovered that they were living in grossly inhumane conditions. Since that time, the monkeys have been the subject of dispute between NIH and IBR, neither of which wants the primates. These monkeys, who are now mutilated as the result of research experiments performed on them, have gained notoriety as Members of Congress as well as the general public have urged NIH to release them to a primate sanctuary in Texas.

For reasons which remain unclear, it has taken NIH 5 years to resolve the monkeys' fate. Yesterday, in complete disregard for legislation pending in Congress urging that the primates be sent to the Texas sanctuary, NIH transferred the animals to Delta Regional Primate Research Center, located in Louisiana. This center has one of the highest animal mortality rates of any research facility in the Nation. In 1979, the center's Rhesus monkey mortality rate was 85 percent, and last year more animals died there from accidents than from experiments.

It is inconceivable to me why NIH would undertake this action. The monkeys' physical condition makes them poor subjects for future experimentation, and humane considerations make them more than qualified to live out their lives in peace.

I am proud to be an original cosponsor of legislation urging NIH to release the monkeys to Primarily Primates, the Texas sanctuary which has offered to provide permanent homes to the animals for the rest of their lives. I urge NIH to reverse yesterday's action by removing the monkeys from Delta Regional Primate Research Center and relocating them to the Texas sanctuary. The animals' value as research subjects has been exhausted, and it is time to set them free.

GILMAN SUPPORTS H.R. 4252 THE FIRE PREVENTION AND CONTROL ACT OF 1986

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the Committee on Science and Technology for reporting legislation reauthorizing a variety of Federal programs to aid our local firefighters. The men and women who daily risk their lives to protect our families, homes, and businesses from the ravages of fire richly deserve the education and technologies afforded through these important fire prevention and containment programs.

In 1974 Congress recognized the tremendous need to consolidate Federal efforts to control and prevent fires. Accordingly, Congress enacted the Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act of 1974, authorizing research, education, and training efforts especially designed to help our local firefighters in the performance of their duties.

Since 1974, the U.S. Fire Administration [USFA] has functioned as the lead agency to help State and local governments develop the most effective measures in reducing the incidence and destructiveness of fire. While the Administration had recommended elimination of the USFA in their fiscal year 1987 budget proposal, this agency's work in the areas of fire prevention and control can be held directly attributable for 2,000 fewer deaths per year than prior to the establishment of these fire prevention programs. I join my colleagues on the committee in their strong support of the USFA.

Another service funded through this legislation is the National Fire Academy [NFA]. At the National Fire Academy, firefighters receive invaluable training—training which helps our dedicated firefighters perform their jobs more safely and effectively. The NFA also disseminates Federal research information to firefighters, trade organizations, insurance companies, academia, code-enforcement official, city managers, architects and engineers. I am pleased to note that the committee has continued allowing travel stipends and lodging expenses for firefighters attending the NFA. The average career or volunteer fire department cannot afford the expense of sending their members to participate in the fire-safety training programs at the NFA in Emmitsburg, MD. Therefore, it is important that we maintain this support so that our firefighters can continue to benefit from these vital programs. In that regard I note in the committee report, that volunteer firefighters might not have adequate access to the NFA. Indeed 75 percent of the people in this country live in areas served by volunteer fire departments and yet only 3 percent of the NFA participants are from volunteer fire departments. I join the committee in urging the NFA to give priority to volunteer firefighters in making course allocations and allotting travel stipends and to strengthen its field training program which is more accessible to volunteer firefighters.

The programs reauthorized under this measure, have over the past decade, improved the delivery of fire prevention technologies to our cities and towns, both large and small. Accordingly I urge my colleagues to fully support this measure and I invite our firefighters to avail themselves of these excellent programs.

ESTHER TORRENCE CRUM

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Esther Torrence Crum, a muchadmired native of Brockton, who recently retired after nearly three decades of service at the Veterans' Administration Medical Center in Brockton.

After attending local schools, Esther May Torrence went to New York City to study nursing at the Harlem Hospital. There she met Frank Crum. They were married in 1945; they were joined in 1947 by a daughter, Yvonne.

Esther Crum served at Harlem Hospital and Beth David Hospital in New York. The family moved back to Brockton in 1954, and Esther accepted a position at the Veterans' Administration hospital 3 years later.

As nurse and head nurse at the VA hospital, Esther drew high praise. On her retirement, she received a special commendation from the acting Medical Director which read, in part:

You are to be commended for 29 years of exemplary service to the Veterans' Administration. Throughout your career as a staff nurse and as head nurse, you have exemplified the highest professsional standards. You have served as a role model not only for the other nursing staff but for all employees at the Brockton Veterans Administration Medical Center.

That she is widely esteemed is evidenced by a petition signed by many of her coworkers and friends in the community, who nominated Esther this year as "Massachusetts Nurse of the Year."

In addition to her work on behalf of our Nation's veterans and her duties to her family, Esther Crum has been active in a wide variety of community service organizations, among them the Brockton chapter of the NAACP, Brockton League of Women Voters, Women's Guild of the Lincoln Congregational Church of Brockton, Brockton T.J. Bell Community Center, March of Dimes, Urban League Guild of Boston, National Urban League, American Nurses Association, and the National Black Nurses Association. She also served on the first board of directors of Self-Help, Inc. the Brockton area's community action agency.

I am pleased to take this opportunity to add my voice to those of many of her friends and neighbors in thanking Esther Crum for her many years of devoted service and in wishing her well on her retirement.

ALAMEDA NAVAL AIR REWORK FACILITY MAINTAINS HIGH RATING; EMPLOYEE PRODUCTIVITY GAINS CITED

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. DELLUMS, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that the Naval Aviation Logistics Command has again rated Alameda Naval Air Rework Facility as one of the Navy's most efficient. I have the honor of representing many of Alameda's 4,600 civilian employees in this body, Mr. Speaker, and it is with great pride that I submit the following press release from Alameda NARF summarizing this accomplishment:

NARF ALAMEDA, NO. 2 AND HOLDING

The Naval Air Rework Facility (NARF) Alameda has once again been ranked second in efficiency out of six NARF's nationwide. Results for the second quarter of fiscal year 1986 revealed that, with 87.13 points out of 100, Alameda placed second, bringing its four-quarter average to second place and 85 points.

Under the dynamic leadership of Captain R.W. Lloyd, commanding officer, the facility has come from $72 million in the red, ranked at 41 points out of 100 in 1983, to operating in the black by February 1986. Workers believe this dramatic turn-around averted a threat of closure indicated by the Pentagon's March 1985 announcement of 22 military installations (including NARF Alameda) that were so destined.

The six NARF's, two on the West Coast and four on the East Coast, are ranked quarterly by the Naval Aviation Logistics Command in Patuxent River, Maryland. The 4,600 civilian workers at Alameda have had to "work smarter" to compete for the Fleet's workload in an area where the cost of doing business if higher than any of the other NARF's. Much of that workload, if not performed at Alameda, would have to be accomplished elsewhere at the cost of establishing all new facilities.

DON SUTTON'S 300TH VICTORY

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate Don Sutton on his 300th major league victory. In reaching this milestone, Don Sutton has become the 19th pitcher in the history of baseball to win 300 or more games. This is a remarkable accomplishment, by an extremely talented athlete.

Don Sutton's career is a testament to the importance of consistency and hard work. While he has not received the acclaim and recognition accorded to many of his more flamboyant, but less talented, contemporaries, he is, nevertheless, one of the great pitchers of our time. His election to the Hall of Fame is virtually certain.

Don Sutton first broke into the major leagues, and had his most productive seasons, with the Los Angeles Dodgers. The Dodgers are a team with a rich heritage of great pitchers. Great pitchers like Don Drysdale, Sandy Koufax, Don Newcombe, and Johnny Podres have given the Dodgers a well deserved reputation for consistently developing some of the finest pitchers in baseball history. Don Sutton has surpassed the career accomplishments of these great pitchers in such crucial categories as wins, shutouts, and strikeouts.

In addition to his 300 wins, Don Sutton holds a number of other major league records. Among them are:

Most years and most consecutive seasons with 100 or more strikeouts at 20;

Tying the National League record for the most 1-hit games with 5;

Most scoreless innings in a 4-game league championship series with 15⅔;

Most innings pitched in a 4-game championship series with 19;

Tying the 4-game series record for games won with 2; and

Most complete games and most strikeouts in a 4-game championship series. His lifetime championship series earned run average is a microscopic 2.06.

In addition, he was voted the National League rookie of the year in 1966 and was selected by the Sporting News as the right-handed pitcher of the year in 1976.

He now ranks sixth on the all-time career strikeout list and is ninth on the all-time shutout list.

All of these accomplishments identify Don Sutton, not only as one of the great pitchers of the last two decades, but one of the greatest of all time.

Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in paying tribute to Don Sutton, and I ask my colleagues to join with me in honoring him.

S. 2414

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 2414, to address several of law enforcement's major concerns about the recently enacted Federal Firearms Law Reform Act.

As a 23-year police veteran, I joined the law enforcement community in expressing my vocal opposition to the Federal Firearms Law Reform Act—a bill I argued would make life easier for the criminal, while making the police officer's job more difficult and more dangerous. S. 2414 does not address all of my concerns about Federal Firearms Law Reform Act; however, together with several important concessions won by law enforcement during the previous consideration of the Federal Firearms Law Reform Act, I am pleased that important gains have been made in correcting serious and potentially life-threatening deficiencies that existed in the original product.

Most significantly, S. 2414 makes important improvements in the interstate transportation of handgun provision in the Federal Firearms Law Reform Act, which allows an individual to transport his handgun during interstate travel, as long as that individual has the weapon unloaded and not readily accessible. However, that broad provision allowed the gun to be as close by as the glove compartment, and had no regard for the gun laws in the state of origin or destination. This provided criminals with a gaping loophole in the law, and made it dangerous for the law enforcement officer. S. 2414 specifically states that during interstate transport the handgun must be unloaded and in a locked compartment in the trunk of a car or some other inaccessible location if the authomobile does not have a trunk. It could not be merely secured in the glove compartment. Further, interstate transportation of a handgun would only be allowed if the gun laws in the State of origin and the State of destination permit the individual to possess the weapon.

Second, the bill clarifies language in the Federal Firearms Law Reform Act that could be used by unscrupulous gun dealers to avoid important recordkeeping requirements if they sell weapons on a not-for-profit basis to terrorists or other criminal types. S. 2414 would strictly prohibit such skirting of the law.

Third, S. 2414 would prevent gun dealers from avoiding recordkeeping requirements if they merely transfer a firearm from their business inventory to their private collection, and sell it from there.

Mr. Speaker, these are responsible and much needed changes that are clearly consistent with the best interests of law enforcement and, thus, public safety. I think it is important to recognize that these changes would not have been made if not for the dedicated and tireless efforts of the Law Enforcement Steering Committee Against S. 49, a coalition of 12 leading national law enforcement groups. Each of these groups deserves special recognition for their outstanding work on behalf of our Nation's nearly 600,000 Federal, State, and local law enforcement officers. These groups include the Federal Law Enforcement Officers Association; the Fraternal Order of Police; the International Association of Chiefs of Police; the International Brotherhood of Police Officers; the National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives; the National Sheriffs' Association; the National Troopers' Coalition; the Police Executive Research Forum; the Major Cities Police Chiefs; the National Association of Police Organizations; the Police Foundation; and the Police Management Association.

Mr. Speaker, seldom does the law enforcement community raise such a loud and unified voice. When they do, it is for very good reason, and this is one of those times. The law enforcement officers of our Nation have sacrificed much for the benefit of their fellowman; a fact that is clearly demonstrated by the more than 1,500 line of duty police deaths during the last 10 years. They ask very little in return. They have asked for the passage of S. 2414, and we should welcome the opportunity to show our respect and appreciation for the vital contributions made to our society by the law enforcement community. We should pass S. 2414.

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF DOMINICK BARANELLO AND LUCY BERINATO

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, on July 5, 1936, Dominick Baranello wed Lucy Berinato in the Sacred Heart Church, Brooklyn, NY. This year, they will celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary. Their family and friends will commemorate this very special day with a dinner in their honor at the Imperial Manor, in Bethpage, NY.

In honor of this truly memorable occasion, I'd like to say just a few words about the Baranellos, who are my constituents from North Massapequa. I've known the Baranellos for several years. Their lasting relationship is testament to the importance they place on family values, and they are extremely proud of their children and grandchildren.

For many years, Dominick worked with the town of Oyster Bay. In 1971, he joined the Nassau County government as assistant director of the bureau of building services, and in 3 years, rose to the position of superintendent of Building Department of Public Works of Nassau County.

The Baranellos participate in many community activities and worthy organizations. Dominick is a member of the Kiwanis Club of Plainedge/North Massapequa. He is a charter member of the Massapequa Elks No. 2162, as well as the Order of the Sons of Italy in America [OSIA) Columbus Lodge No. 2143. In addition, Dominick Baranello has served with distinction for over 25 years as Republican executive leader of the town of North Massapequa. Their efforts to give of their time and of themselves to benefit their fellow man and the less fortunate are worthy of the highest commendation. The Baranellos are exemplary American citizens, and I am proud to represent them in Congress.

I'd like to join their family and friends in extending my most sincere congratulations to Dominick and Lucy Baranello on their 50th anniversary, and offer my best wishes for many years of continued health and happiness together.

COMMEMORATING THE RESTORATION OF UKRAINE'S INDEPENDENCE

HON. DENNIS M. HERTEL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to commemorate the 45th anniversary of the "Restoration of Ukraine's Independence."

It was during the revolution against the Tsarist Russian empire that Ukraine first declared its independence. A government was formed and recognized by many other legitimate governments. Unfortunately, once the Bolshevik party came into power in Russia, it launched an aggressive and eventually successful campaign against the Ukrainian forces. The indomitable spirit of these courageous Ukrainian people, however, was not defeated. An underground struggle continued, led by the Organization of Ukrainian Nationalists [OUN].

Directed by Stepan Bandera, the OUN persisted in its efforts against foreign occupation powers. When war broke out in June of 1941, the OUN was able to take advantage of the unstable situation caused by the conflict between Stalin and Hitler. On June 30, 1941, the Ukrainian underground occupied key areas of Lviv, the West Ukrainian capitol, including the city's radio station. It was from here that the Proclamation of the Restoration of Ukraine's Independence was broadcast, and the establishment of a Ukrainian Free State was begun. A provisional government was appointed and Mr. Yaroslav Stetsko became the Prime Minister. On that same day, in most towns and villages across Ukraine, smaller groups of the OUN surfaced and, with much popular support, led campaigns against retreating Russian soldiers.

Germany refused to recognize Ukraine's independence and issued an ultimatum demanding immediate cancellation of the Proclamation of Independence and the disbanding of the Government. When they refused to comply, Government leaders were tortured and sent to concentration camps. Many other Ukrainian leaders were shot or imprisoned. These barbarous acts did not defeat or deter Ukraine. In fact, by the summer of 1943, the German military occupation of Ukraine was in the process of disintegration.

Instead of peace following the defeat of Germany in Ukraine, the Ukrainians were forced to escalate their struggle in a new war against Soviet Russian imperialism. During this intense confrontation, which continued into the 1950's, the Ukrainian forces continued to valiantly fight for peace and freedom. Although never militarily defeated, the Ukrainian nationalists were eventually forced to decentralize and form a Ukrainian national underground.

Today, Ukrainians everywhere continue to struggle for the recognition and respect they so richly deserve. I ask that my colleagues remember these events and join with me and the Ukrainian community of southeast Michigan in commemorating the courageous and dedicated actions of the Ukrainian people who declared, and fought for, the restoration of Ukrainian independence.

MERVYN DYMALLY: A CHAMPION

HON. FOFO I.F. SUNIA

OF AMERICAN SAMOA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. SUNIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of our fellow Members an excellent article about one of our finest colleagues. This past May 29 A.S. "Doc" Young of the Los Angeles Sentinel devoted his entire column to extolling the virtues and accomplishments of the Honorable MERVYN M. DYMALLY, the distinguished Member from the 31st District of California. Mr. DYMALLY and I began our congressional careers on the same day, January 3, 1981. I have always followed Mr. DYMALLY's work with tremendous interest.

Herewith is the Los Angeles Sentinel article. I recommend that our colleagues read it.

MERVYN DYMALLY: A CHAMPION

There are many Black champions in the nation's political arena today. There aren't as many, of course, as there should be; after all, only about one percent of the nation's half-million-plus publicly-elected officials are Black. But—especially in this big-money, television-dominated, political era—it isn't easy for Black candidates to mount winning campaigns.

Many of them—most of them, perhaps, if not all of them—are modern, melanin-tinted Horatio Algers who bootstrapped their way into victory.

Congressman Mervyn Dymally exemplifies the best among them. By All-American definitions, he is a champion-among-champions. His story is the stuff out of which good books, motion pictures, and television specials are made.

Mervyn Dymally was born in Trinidad. When he came to the United States at an early age, he had to struggle because he was poor. But, he got an education and became a school teacher. From that launching pad, as it were, he entered politics, getting himself elected to the California State Assembly, the California State Senate, and the office of Lieutenant Governor. Meanwhile, he studied political science in college, mastered the art of working effectively with office-holders of varying political beliefs, and schooled others, including young, Black students and aspiring office-holders, in the winning ways of his profession.

When Mervyn Dymally ran for the Lieutenant Governor's office (while Jerry Brown was the Democratic candidate for Governor), he was a sleeper. He was Black. He had been, as said, born in Trinidad. Traces of the Trinidadian accent could be heard in his speech. He aspired to a state-wide office no other black person ever had held before him.

But, in typical Dymally fashion, he began his campaign long before the election. He traveled the state from one end to the other. He met with the powers-that-were, not only in politics, but also in business and the media and labor; he met with Democrats, Republicans, liberals and conservatives. He introduced himself to all those people of varying races, creeds, and colors, and he told his story convincingly.

Certain usually-hip members of the major media didn't take him seriously; they certainly didn't seem to realize that he was a serious contender for the office until it was almost time for the voters to go to the polls in the general election.

Jerry Brown was elected Governor.

Dymally, as I recall, out-polled Jerry Brown by some 200,000 votes!

Dymally, victory in the race for the Lieutenant Governor's office must be ranked among the greatest political triumphs of all time.

It must be ranked with Tom Bradley's election as mayor of a city with no more than 17 percent Black population; Edward Brooke's election to the U.S. Senate from Massachusetts when that state probably had no more than three percent Black population; Harold Washington's election as Mayor of Chicago, which is the most racist big city in America; Harvey Gantt's election as the Mayor of Charlotte, North Carolina; and Douglas Wilder's election last fall as the Lieutenant Governor of Virginia. Wilder, like Dymally, was a sleeper!

Mervyn Dymally is one of the smartest politicians in America today. He is a master of his craft. He is a great organizer and motivator. He loves being a professional politician who holds public office. He also possesses the incredible energy and stamina that political success demands. He has been known to spend as many as 20 hours daily in his profession for extended periods of time.

The bottom-line with Mervyn Dymally is hard work. He has admitted that, speaking modestly. He pays attention to detail. He leaves little to chance. He isn't one to take it easy, or to get over-confident, when an election is on the line. As as result, he rarely suffers defeat; the candidates he supports rarely suffer defeat.

In addition to the aforementioned "handicaps," Mervyn Dymally was forced over an extended period in his political career, to shoulder a heavy load of major-media criticism. He was accused of wrong-doing. Certain Black people heard or read the allegations and they, too, began to dump-on Dymally. But, he survived.

There probably was no way he could have been re-elected as Lieutenant Governor of California, Governor Brown being the kind of a person he was. But, this rare defeat-the first since he had begun to campaign for public office did not crush him. His daughter, probably softened the blow when she discerned a ray of sunshine in the loss.

"Now," she said, "I'll have my daddy back!"

But, this was his life. This was his career. And, he wasn't going to quit. He went on to win election as a United States Congressman, which he is today.

The vast majority of Black publicly-elected officials are Democrats. But, they aren't all "rubber-stamp Democrats."

The special needs of Black people, the unique problems they face, the reluctance of White racists, bigots, conservatives and others to play fair makes it mandatory that they project racial concerns as they do their jobs.

Some Black politicians believe they are more sincere than other politicians, that they are more sensitive to the needs of people, that they are more understanding.

Not all of them are, however. Like other politicians, bad Black politicians are talked about like dirty birds, blamed for various failures, compared to used-car salesmen.

It would be illogical to expect that all Black politicians would be as clean as the proverbial hound's tooth, as deeply committed to civil rights as the late Roy Wilkins or Dr. Martin Luther King, as spell-binding as Barbara Jordan.

But, we cannot sell the lot of them short. More than a few of them are heroic figures. It is the rare one, who isn't fascinating.

HOUSING ACT OF 1986

HON. CHALMERS P. WYLIE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 1) to amend and extend certain laws relating to housing, and for other purposes.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, on June 5, 1986, during consideration of the Housing Act of 1986, the House passed by voice vote an amendment offered by Mrs. BURTON, as amended by Mr. MORRISON, concerning procedures and policies for mandatory meals in assisted housing for the elderly.

The subject on this amendment was hotly debated both in subcommittee and full committee markup. The amendments offered at the committee level were by far much better than was in the original H.R. 1. H.R. 1 as originally introduced would have prohibited a mandatory meals program all together.

Now it is not that I am necessarily for anything mandatory, but meals programs in housing for the elderly have been proven to be beneficial to the tenants. Recently, there have been some court challenges on this issue between elderly tenants and owners of housing projects for the elderly. I believe that both HUD and the owners of housing projects for the elderly share some of the blame for some of the unfortunate incidents which have led to litigation. However, I believe that now that HUD is under court order to promulgate regulations pertaining to policies and procedures for mandatory meals—the regulatory process would be the more preferable arena to address this issue.

Recognizing that the gentlelady from California [Mrs. BURTON] had two previous court cases in her district, I understand and appreciate her concern and motivation for the amendment.

The Burton amendment, as I understand it, is quite similar to the court ruling which HUD is operating under to develop its regulations. I commend Mrs. BURTON for her work on this amendment along with my colleagues on the Banking Committee, Mr. VENTO and Mr. LEVIN who had input in the gentlelady's amendment.

However, I hope that the forthcoming HUD regulation meets the letter and spirit of the court order and the Burton amendment which would then obviate the need for the statutory provision should the regulation be published before a conference.

RETIREMENT OF ADM. JAMES D. WATKINS

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding military officer, Adm. James D. Watkins, who is stepping down as the Chief of Naval Operations.

A 1949 graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy, he served in destroyers and submarines. After completing the reactor engineering course at the Oak Ridge Library, he received a masters degree in mechanical engineering from the Naval Postgraduate School in 1958.

Throughout his military career, Admiral Watkins has held a wide variety of important command and staff positions culminating in the position of the 22d Chief of Naval Operations. Other key posts held recently include Commander in Chief of the U.S. Pacific fleet, Vice Chief of Naval Operations, and a dual assignment as Commander of the Sixth Fleet and as NATO Commander of Naval Striking and Support Forces Southern Europe.

As Chief of Naval Operations, Admiral Watkins concentrated on what he considered to be the cornerstone of naval professionalism—fighting smart. One of the admiral's earliest efforts as CNO was revitalizing of the Naval War College as a center for naval thought and study. The magnitude of improvement in the college is typified by the rise of post-command commanders attending the college from 3 to 128 officers within 3 years. In addition, the strategic studies group for six carefully selected officers was developed. This year-long fellowship provides the superb experience while stimulating and formalizing innovative strategic thought.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to point out that Admiral Watkins emphasized interservice cooperation, a matter for which I have worked extensively. In a major effort to improve interoperability of military services and to take a joint approach toward development and procurement programs that have joint applicability, the joint resources management board was developed.

Awards and decorations received by Admiral Watkins include the Distinguished Service Medal, the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star, and several other medals and ribbons. He has been decorated by various foreign countries including Brazil, Korea, France, Spain, Japan, Pakistan, and Sweden. In June 1983, he was inducted as a Knight of Malta, an international order of leading Catholic laymen dedicated to humanitarian charity.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the Members join me in praising this distinguished American military officer for his many years of dedication to his country, and in wishing Admiral Watkins and his wife, the former Sheila Jo McKinney, and their 6 children, Katherine, Laura Jo, Susan, Charles, James Jr., and Edward all the best in the many years to come.

A BILL FOR THE RELIEF OF VALERIE S. FORD

HON. THOMAS J. BLILEY, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that at times certain problems cannot be dealt with swiftly and simply. Small errors can engender great inconvenience and frustration. My purpose in introducing this private bill today is to correct an error made by the Navy with regard to the travel entitlements available to Mrs. Valerie S. Ford of Richmond, VA. I have various pieces of correspondence pertaining to the events surrounding the case. Since they only serve as a partial explanation of the situation, however, I will go over briefly the course of events.

In March 1982, SHC Gregory V. Ford, then husband of Mrs. Ford, received PCS [permanent change of station] orders which transferred him from Barbers Point, HI, to the U.S.S. Ajax [AR–6] in San Diego, CA. His wife and two children remained in Hawaii for the time being on the assurance that she could move until her husband had 1 year left on the new orders.

Later on, Mrs. Ford filed for divorce. Before the divorce became final, she made inquiries at the legal offices at Barbers Point to find out what she was entitled to under the regulations with regard to transportation. She was told that she was entitled to transportation up to 1 year from the date the divorce became final, which was on April 14, 1983. In November 1983, she decided to move and contacted JJPSO at Pearl Harbor. The transportation manager there at that time informed Mrs. Ford that she was entitled to transportation under the joint travel regulations [JTR] up to 1 year after her divorce became final.

On the authority she received from these inquiries, Mrs. Ford sold her home in Hawaii and found a job in the Commonwealth of Virginia. However, in March 1984, when she started the process to transport herself, her children, and her household goods to the mainland, she was told that the time in which she could claim her benefits had expired 6 months after her husband had received his PCS orders.

In a letter to Senator INOUYE, Capt. R.W. Twilde, Director of the Congressional Liaison Office of the U.S. Navy, writes that Mrs. Ford can only gain relief through the introduction of a private bill in Congress. He adds that the purpose of private bills is "to remedy unfair situations," and that he hopes "Mrs. Ford's request for this action is favorably received."

The bill I am introducing, if passed, would permit the Navy to reimburse Mrs. Ford for the costs of transporting her family and her household goods to Virginia where she is now a resident of the Third District. Senator INOUYE has introduced a similar bill in the Senate. I, too, hope that her request is favorably received.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

H.R. 5082

A bill for the relief of Valerie S. Ford

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CONDITIONAL REIMBURSEMENT FOR CERTAIN TRANSPORTATION EXPENSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Navy shall reimburse Valerie S. Ford (Social Security Number [redacted]) of Richmond, Virginia, for expenses she incurred for transportation of herself and her 2 dependent children during May 1984, from Makakilo, Hawaii, to Petersburg, Virginia, and for transportation of her household goods from Makakilo, Hawaii, to Richmond, Virginia, if such Secretary receives from Valerie S. Ford, within 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, an application for reimbursement and a documentation of expenses as would have been appropriate had such application and documentation been timely submitted.

(b) LIMITATION.—Sums paid under subsection (a) shall not exceed an amount which would have been payable for the transportation referred to in such subsection had such transportation been timely made and an application for reimbursement and documentation of expenses therefor been properly and timely submitted.

SEC. 2. LIMITATION ON ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Notwithstanding any contract or agreement, it shall be unlawful to pay, or deliver to, any agent or attorney, or for any agent or attorney to receive, any amount in excess of 10 percent of the sums paid under section 1, on account of services rendered in connection with this claim. Any person found to have violated the preceding sentence shall be fined not more than $1,000.

VIOLATIONS OF THE BOLAND AMENDMENT

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a resolution of inquiry which directs the President of the United States to provide the House of Representatives with certain information regarding actions undertaken by National Security Council personnel which may have been illegal.

From October 1984 to November 1985, the Congress adopted the so-called Boland amendment. This amendment provided that no funds available to the Central Intelligence Agency, the Department of the Defense, or any other agency of the United States involved in intelligence activities may be obligated or expended to support, directly or indirectly, military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua.

In November 1985, a revised Boland amendment took effect which permitted sharing intelligence information, giving nonmilitary advice, and providing communications equipment and training in its use.

Various media accounts over the past several months, not directly denied by the administration, have alleged that National Security Council personnel—specifically Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, Deputy Director for Political-Military Affairs—violated the Boland amendment by providing military advice to the Contras and arranged for as well as promoted a private network for indirect funding to the Contra high command, again in violation of the Boland amendment.

The network established by Lieutenant Colonel North allegedly employed the services of two intermediaries—Conservative Activist Robert W. Owen and retired Army Maj. Gen. John K. Singlaub Owen, operating as a private citizen during the time of the ban on military aid, worked out of North's office in late 1984 and early 1985. A senior administration official has been quoted as saying that North sent messages through Owen to the Contra high command and that Owen was generally perceived as North's "buffer"—allowing North to circumvent the Boland restrictions.

Retired Army General Singlaub is generally credited, according to various sources, with having established and coordinated an international network designed to raise money for the Contra high command's purported purchase of arms and for advising the Contra leaders on military strategy. Singlaub admits to meeting with North face-to-face once a month and notes that he communicated with North telephonically at least once a week. In an interview granted last October, Singlaub stated that his relationship with North was like that found in the military when a junior officer tells his superior what he plans to do and silence is regarded as approval.

My resolution of inquiry seeks answers and information to two central questions. Did Lieutenant Colonel North develop and implement a plan for Contra funding in the event that Congress did adopt the Boland amendment? Sources indicate that this plan exists in memo form somewhere within the offices of the NSC or the White House. Second, what was the degree of Lieutenant Colonel North's involvement with the Contra high command before, during, and after the Boland amendment became the law of this land? Did he assure the Contra generals that the administration would find a way to ensure continued funding and assistance even in the event of a congressional ban? Did he, as alleged, provide regular tactical and logistical assistance to the Contra high command on a regular basis? Did Lieutenant Colonel North then implement a sham network of intermediaries to filter his continued advice to the Contra generals in direct violation of at least the spirit of the Boland language?

The silence of this administration on these particular points thus far is deafening. The White House, the State Department, and the National Security Council have refused to comment on these extremely serious charges or to even respond to congressional inquiries for clarification. I think that the American people, through their elected officials, deserve to have these allegations answered in a comprehensive as well as forthright manner.

No one can be allowed to operate above the law of this great country—least of all those officials obligated to defend our Constitution. This resolution of inquiry touches upon areas of concern that go far beyond the question of one's position relative to Contra aid. Rather, this course of action goes to accountability and ensuring that one branch of our Government disregards the other two.

Mr. Speaker, I introduce this resolution very reluctantly. I believe it to be a dark day in the history of this particular administration that such an action must be taken by a Member of Congress just to get a response to these disturbing charges.

A SALUTE TO ROBERT K. FINN

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Robert K. Finn, who at the young age of 52 passed away on May 17, 1986. His untimely death came as a shock to the estimated 1,000 mourners who crowded the foyer of St. Mary of the Assumption Church in Northampton, MA, to pay their last respects to Bob Finn.

During his 30 years in education, Bob showed unparalleled love and dedication to this work. As the first and only principal at Ryan Road School since its opening in 1967, he understood the needs of students at the elementary school level. The victim, at a young age, of an accident resulting in the loss of his own arm, he came to realize the importance of both compassion and toughness. He demonstrated the perfect combination of these qualities necessary to encourage the proper development of students in the crucial, formative, elementary school years. He was tough enough to push himself and others to his own high standards, while demonstrating the gentleness that made him loved, and approachable by all.

It was a fatherlike love for his students that may have been his most admirable quality. He truly cared for his students, seeing them not just as a job, but as his own personal responsibility. He was genuinely interested not just in their academic success or their good behavior, but in their development as human beings.

I am reminded of a story told to me by a former pupil of his. It seems that in the inaugural year of the Ryan Road School, there was a fight between two sixth graders. Bob, as I am told, asked the two boys into his office, and in lieu of doling out categorical punishments, he spoke with them, and made himself aware of the particular situation. He gently compelled the boys into speaking with each other, laughing, and then finally realizing the absurdity of their misunderstandings. The two boys shook hands, walked out together, and picked up the litter on the school together that day after school, never to fight again. Bob had involved himself, and personally solved the problem, as he often did, through his genuine concern, not through heartless punishment.

This love spread throughout every capability of his life. He willingly gave of himself to the community. He and his wife Joan cultivated a very strong family environment, and he was a devout Christian, not just on Sunday, but on every day of the year.

I salute Robert K. Finn, who will always be remembered as a remarkable educator, an exemplary family man, and a tremendous human being. His death is a terrible loss, and the void he leaves behind may never be filled.

AGENT ORANGE COMMISSION CITED BY NEW YORK TIMES

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, for some time there has been great concern about the exposure of Vietnam veterans to agent orange and other toxic substances used as defoliants in that conflict. Although many in Congress may think that the issue is a closed one due to settlements between some Vietnam veterans and the manufacturers of the defoliants, the following article indicates that for some the issue has hardly been opened.

The New Jersey Agent Orange Commission has been among the most active State commissions in the country. Its chairman, Allen Falk, and the commission's executive director, Wayne Wilson, have led the effort which has patiently assembled an immense research effort which will soon be concluded.

I believe that the studies being conducted will greatly aid in our understanding of the nature of the effects of exposure to agent orange and other chemically produced defoliants which were used as herbicides in Vietnam.

I encourage any of my colleagues who have questions about the commission to contact me or to contact the commission directly in Trenton. There are many thousands of veterans nationally who have legitimate questions about the issue and the commission stands ready to help them.

The article follows:

[From the New York Times, June 15, 1986]

AGENT ORANGE'S VICTIMS FIND SYMPATHY AT THE STATEHOUSES

(By Iver Peterson)

As questions about the long-term effects of exposure to Agent Orange among veterans of the Vietnam War have continued to be raised, a number of states have begun attempting to help provide some answers.

The Massachusetts Agent Orange Commission released last week the results of an informal survey it conducted among Vietnam veterans in the state who believed they had been exposed to the defoliant and one of its highly toxic elements, dioxin. The veterans reported very high incidences of birth defects, nervous disorders and other ailments.

Other states, one of them New Jersey, have undertaken more scientific research into dioxin contamination among veterans. Many state administrators say they are responding to foot-dragging in Washington. "With Gramm-Rudman at work there is a very popular anti-veteran bias in Washington," says Joseph Bangert, director of the Massachusetts program. "That may fly on the national level but it won't fly back in the states where the veterans are."

Moreover, spokesmen for national veterans organizations maintain that the Government would like to derail any broad, definitive Agent Orange studies to avoid a deluge of expensive disability claims.

Some 150,000 veterans have already filed claims with the Veterans Administration. So far, the V.A. has steadfastly refused to accept such claims as proof of service-connected disability.

Government officials insist that Washington has hardly been idle. However, a broad national study on the effects of Agent Orange exposure authorized by Congress in 1979 remains stalled.

The study, to be coordinated by the Federal Centers for Disease Control, has bogged down because, for one thing, many Government researchers now suspect that fewer people had been exposed to the herbicide than they originally thought and, for another, there have been bureaucratic disagreements over responsibilities and procedures. A Federal panel is expected to decide soon whether a way around the impasse can be found.

Last year the manufacturers of Agent Orange tried to force Washington to contribute to a $180 million fund they agreed to set up to benefit totally disabled Vietnam veterans and the families of those who have died. But a Federal judge ruled that the Government was not liable because no proof had been offered of a causal connection between the herbicide and injuries to veterans and their families. The manufacturers, which continued to deny that Agent Orange was harmful, said they agreed to the settlement, among other reasons, to avoid years of trials and appeals.

While the long-term effects of the chemical are disputed, this much is known: the Air Force sprayed upwards of ten million gallons of Agent Orange over Vietnam and Laos between 1967 and 1972 in what was said to have been an attempt to kill the canopy of jungle leaves that concealed enemy troop movements on the ground. Precautions were taken to keep G.I.'s out of sprayed areas for several days, officials say, but military records show that some troops entered contaminated areas as soon as a day later.

In addition, the defoliant—was widely used by ground troops to clear base perimeters.

Altogether, 15 states have launched their own Agent Orange monitoring and advocacy efforts. For the most part, the states have concentrations of veterans large enough to apply political pressure on local legislators. Some state programs have been limited because of a shortage of money. Massachusetts and New Jersey are ranked the most active.

Some authorities say the programs aren't as objective as they should be and in fact may complicate veterans' attempts to obtain compensation. Wayne Wilson, director of the New Jersey program, defends his effort. "I think we have put together a research team that absolutely rejects the notion that our advocacy roles will somehow bias our research. Researchers are particularly sensitive to that charge and take those extra steps to make sure that doesn't happen."

Within a few weeks, he said, New Jersey will have completed a study of 150 Vietnam veterans who were exposed to the defoliant. The study involves comparing the levels of dioxin, using fat biopsies and blood samples, with the dioxin levels of other former service men and women stationed elsewhere. Once those data have been assembled, the next step will be to compare medical records to see if any correlation exists between dioxin levels and long term health disorders.

A CALL TO CONSCIENCE VIGIL FOR SOVIET JEWS

HON. LANE EVANS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. EVANS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, for 10 years Members of this Chamber have risen in the conscience vigil to remind ourselves and the world of the plight of Soviet Jews. Today, I would like to introduce two refuseniks.

Grigory Vasserman is 36 years old, a husband and father. He and his family currently live in Leningrad. Abe is actively involved in the repatriation movement in Leningrad, and for seeking freedom in Israel, he has been beaten, harassed, humiliated, and threatened. In November 1984, he was featured in an anti-Semitic film, "Hirelings and Traitors" shown on Leningrad television. He was shown and named, and he and other refuseniks were branded as "Zionist agents" and "black-marketeers," betraying their country for gain.

Leonid Rokhlin is a 29-year-old man from Leningrad. In February 1982, Leonid submitted his first application for an exit visa. After waiting several months, he was informed that it was not in the interest of the state to allow him a visa. He has been unable to secure any type of professional job since he submitted his exit visa. He now works as a watchman and is not allowed to utilize his talents as a chemical engineer.

Mr. Speaker, both of these courageous men and their families are little known beyond the borders of the Soviet Union. And that is why we cannot forget them and the hundreds of thousands who still await. As relations between the United States and the Soviet Union continue to improve, making the world safer for all people, we must continue to fight for the recognition of basic human rights.

FEMA FUNDING OF THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY TRAINING CENTER—WEST

HON. HARRY REID

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker, the National Emergency Training Center—West is in jeopardy. Despite the fact that the Maryland Emergency Training Center, the only one of its kind, does not have enough room for about half its applicants. H.R. 4252 will scrap plans for a western center.

FEMA's Emergency Management Institute conducts onsite as well as field and correspondence courses in a wide range of emergency management subjects. All such training for local and State emergency works is conducted out of the institute's Maryland campus. It is estimated that 2 million people, including police, firefighters, administrators, and municipal workers, make up the pool of potential trainees in need of this highly specialized instruction.

In fiscal year 1985, $3.2 million was appropriated for the conversion of the Stewart Indian Center at Carson City to a FEMA Emergency Training Center. The State of Nevada has been extremely generous from the start, including leasing the entire faculty for $1 per year. Yet no money was appropriated for the Center in fiscal year 1986, and now funding has been deleted in fiscal year 1987. The program has suddenly been "discontinued." Not only does H.R. 4252 fail to include money for this sorely needed emergency training, but it leaves the previously appropriated money to go to waste.

The establishment of a western office is essential to the continued benefit and operating efficiency of the Emergency Management Program. It is anticipated that a 25-percent airfare costs savings would result to students traveling to the west coast facility rather than to Emmitsburg. Furthermore, establishing a new western office would be significantly more cost-effective than expanding the Maryland facility: A 10-year phased-in expansion of Emmitsburg would cost roughly $91 million, or $10 million above the projected 10-year western plan.

The Carson City site is an ideal one. The Western States are growing at a rapid rate and the Bureau of the Census predicts that by the year 2000, one-fourth of the Nation's population will live in the 11 Western States. The western location would make the Center more convenient by air for many. But with the withdrawal of funding for travel stipends, it is now vitally important that a new center be accessible by car as well. A western campus at Carson City would be within an easy 1-day drive for over 34 million people.

Of course, the true advantage of a Western Training Center would be that it would make life-saving training and techniques available to thousands more firefighters. Every year, the Emmitsburg campus is forced to reject about 6,000 applicants who would like to learn to handle emergencies that strike their communities. For the sake of those 6,000 applicants, and the families and homes they protect, it is imperative that the National Emergency Training Center—West, a concept with enormous potential, be kept alive.

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO THE STANFORD HOME FOR CHILDREN

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to honor Sacramento's Stanford Home Foundation as it begins breaking ground for its new Stanford Home for Children facilities on June 22. The Stanford Home has long been respected for its services to disadvantaged, handicapped, and other less fortunate teenagers. The home provides residential care for its children through five group homes throughout Sacramento and a crisis center.

The expanded facilities of the new home will give the foundation the opportunity to provide the best possible services. For example, the home's education and health facilities will be improved through the construction of a new school. In addition, new housing will provide quarters for the Sisters who are involved with care of the children. Facilities will also be made available for the counseling of troubled teens and their families and for the administrative offices of the foundation.

These improvements will enable the home to accommodate more children in need of support and care. Without the fine work of the Stanford Home and the Sisters who run it, these children would be without their primary source of love and comfort.

The Stanford Home for children is an institution truly worthy of our highest recognition and honor. Please join me in congratulating the foundation and wishing them a speedy and successful expansion.

WHERE DID THE SILVER SPRING MONKEYS GO?

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, in April, 253 Congressmen and 53 Senators sent a letter to the National Institutes of Health [NIH] Director Dr. James Wyngaarden requesting NIH to transfer the 15 primates—Silver Spring monkeys—confiscated in 1981 by police during the execution of a search and seizure warrant on an NIH grant recipient, the Institute for Behavioral Research [IBR] to "Primarily Primates," a nonprofit primate sanctuary.

In response to this letter, which I signed, I received a letter on June 4, 1986, from William F. Raub, Ph.D., Deputy Director for Extramural Research and Training, NIH. This letter stated:

When the national significance of the pending litigation became clear, NIH determined that all interests would be served by its continuing as custodian of the 15 primates while the matter is before the courts.

I assure you that the NIH will continue providing excellent care for the primates while the matter is in the courts and remains prepared to facilitate whatever resolution might ensue.

On June 13, the Department of Health and Human Services held a congressional staff briefing regarding the future of the Silver Spring monkeys. At that time, a draft plan was presented to congressional staff to move the monkeys permanently to a facility which met the requirements of the Animal Welfare Act and the U.S. Public Health Service. While two facilities were mentioned as possibilities, it was pointed out that a decision had not been made about which facility the animals might be sent to, and that no final decision had been made to undertake this plan.

Because several Members of Congress did not feel this proposal was an acceptable solution, a resolution was introduced by Congressman ROBERT SMITH of New Hampshire on June 11, 1986, House Concurrent Resolution 351, which currently has 97 cosponsors and is pending in the House Energy and Commerce Committee. This legislation expresses the sense of Congress that the Silver Spring monkeys should be transferred from the National Institutes of Health to the custody of Primarily Primates, Inc., in San Antonio, TX. A similar resolution has been introduced in the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, it has been made perfectly clear that a large portion of the House of Representatives is very interested in and concerned about the future of these monkeys. Today, however, I have learned that the 15 monkeys are currently in transit to the Delta facility in New Orleans. My staff has contacted NIH's Congressional Liaison Office to find out more about this transfer of the monkeys. However, the only information the Liaison Office had available was confirmation that the animals are in transit, and that apparently Congress will be informed of this move through a letter, which I have not yet received. The court case which was referred to in the letter from Dr. Raub is still pending.

I am deeply concerned about the manner in which NIH has handled this transfer of the monkeys. Although NIH felt compelled to brief congressional staff about the status of the Silver Spring Monkeys on June 13, the final decision was made without notice, and the transport of these animals was undertaken in secrecy. As a Member of Congress who is under public scrutiny at all times, I find it difficult to justify such a closed door policy. Further, it is exactly this type of action which has frustrated the animal rights community time and time again, and which serves—in its mind—to justify protests, break-ins, and other actions.

Animal rights issues are often volatile and emotional. However, cloaking these debates in a cloud of paranoia and secrecy will only exacerbate the controversy. I recognize the concern of the science community about the growing interest in laboratory animal rights and the possible interference with legitimate research. As coauthor of the Improved Standards for Laboratory Animals Act of 1985 with Senator DOLE, I have been exposed to a variety of opinions about whether animals should be used in research. Some of these opinions I agreed with, others I did not. But I feel strongly that if we are to have laws that represent the views of the majority of our citizens, which in my mind is what democracy is all about, then these debates must take place in open arenas, open to the scrutiny of the constituents we represent.

For some time, animal welfare and animal rights groups have been distressed because animal care laws have not been adequately enforced by Federal agencies. It is this frustration that has led to increased activity in the animal rights movement. And, I expect that these groups will continue to fight until they receive assurances that animal care laws are being followed and that laboratory—and other animals—are protected from inhumane treatment. Making decisions, such as the removal of the Silver Spring Monkeys, behind closed doors, despite a strong showing of interest by Congress, does not reassure the public that our Federal agencies are taking the issue of laboratory animals seriously. Instead it sends a signal to both the public and to Congress that decisions regarding laboratory animals are still being made in spite of legitimate concerns of the public and of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I am deeply disappointed in the decision of NIH to transfer the monkeys, but even more disappointed by the manner in which it was done. I believe there is a better resolution to this controversy, and recommend strongly that this decision be reassessed. I hope in the future, that NIH will refrain from making rash decisions behind closed doors.

INTRODUCTION OF THE ASBESTOS HAZARD EMERGENCY RESPONSE ACT AND THE ASBESTOS INFORMATION CLEARINGHOUSE ACT

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to introduce two new bills—the Asbestos Hazard Emergency Act of 1986 and the Asbestos Information Clearinghouse Act of 1986.

The first bill would require the inspection and abatement of asbestos by schools across the country. I am pleased to join my colleagues, Congressman BROYHILL, Congressman FLORIO, and Congressman DINGELL, in introducing this legislation.

Almost a year ago, the Commerce, Transportation and Tourism Subcommittee began a series of hearings on the health risks to children and adults associated with asbestos exposure in schools. At these hearings, we learned that asbestos is one of the few proven human carcinogens. Because of the long delay between exposure and onset of cancer, children are especially at risk.

We also learned during these hearings that compliance with EPA's current inspection standards is abysmally low. We learned that in many cases, schools have not taken the proper precautions in abating asbestos. All too often, untrained workers have, in the course of removing asbestos, created a greater asbestos problem and public health hazard.

The legislation we are introducing today is intended to help prevent these situations. The bill will require EPA to issue standards that specify the conditions requiring abatement as well as the procedures to conduct abatement. These standards should help give schools greater direction and information on how to safely abate asbestos in the school.

Perhaps even as important as the abatement and inspection standards are the provisions in the bill concerning contractor certification. Ultimately the soundness of any abatement work must rest on the qualifications and training of the asbestos abatement contractors. This bill will require EPA to establish a model contractor training program for States to adopt. These programs will require all contractors to take a course in abatement procedures and pass a test.

Finally, the bill we are introducing today contains several new provisions that will encourage and facilitate compliance with the legislation. Among these is a provision that will exempt asbestos abatement contractors from liability, as long as the contractor acts in accordance with the regulations and is not negligent.

The same liability protection is also extended to school administrators. We are hearing more and more from school administrators who have acted improperly because of liability concerns. This legislation will create an incentive for school administrators to comply with the act by exempting them from liability for nonnegligent actions which are in accordance with EPA regulations. Inducements such as these may do more than any enforcement measure to ensure compliance.

It should be noted that this legislation will impose a significant economic burden on schools across the country. EPA estimates that the total cost of this legislation will be hundreds of millions of dollars. Because of these significant economic costs, we have tried to keep the costs to schools down wherever possible. For instance, schools which have already conducted an adequate inspection that meets the requirements of EPA regulations will not have to needlessly repeat that inspection.

We are asking our schools to make a significant sacrifice in order to protect the health of our children and those who work in schools. I believe that ultimately this investment will be worthwhile. I am pleased to be introducing this compromise legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the second piece of legislation I am introducing today is the Asbestos Information Clearinghouse Act of 1986. I am pleased to join my colleague, Congressman DOWDY, in introducing this bill.

This bill establishes an Asbestos Information Clearinghouse at the Environmental Protection Agency. This Clearinghouse will collect samples of asbestos containing material from building owners and analyze the contents of the samples. The Clearinghouse would also collect information from manufacturers on the ingredients and formula of any manufactured asbestos product. The resulting sample analysis would then be made available to the building owner and the public upon request.

The intent of this legislation is to counter what many perceive as a history of wasteful proceedings in large scale asbestos property damage cases. Up to now, plaintiffs in asbestos cases have sued almost all asbestos manufacturing companies even though many of the companies may not have even produced the type of asbestos product in question. It is not uncommon to see 86 asbestos manufacturers listed as defendants in an asbestos property damage case.

The objective of this legislation is to establish a system by which information on the samples of asbestos containing material from buildings can be matched with classes of asbestos manufacturing products. This information will help narrow the number of defendants in a case by eliminating those manufacturers that did not produce the class of asbestos product in question. In at least one case so far, this kind of information has reduced the number of defendants from 50 or more to 5. The legislation is expected to reduce litigation time and cost.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe both of these bills deserve the attention and support of this body. The first bill, dealing with asbestos-in-schools, will address an important public health problem in a responsible manner. The second bill will help expedite asbestos litigation cases and reduce needless litigation costs. I believe the public would be well served if both bills were enacted into law.

THE STATE OF THE PHILIPPINES

HON. CECIL (CEC) HEFTEL

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, this is the fifth of an insightful 10-article series on the Philippines written by George Chaplin, the editor-in-chief of the Honolulu Advertiser. This installment discusses the Philippine free press and one journalist's political opinions on the former Marcos and current Aquino administrations.

Restoring the Filipino people's right to freedom of the press represents a major step for the Aquino administration in reestablishing a democratic government. President Aquino's respect for this privilege is vital to a successful democracy in the Philippines.

The article follows:

PRESSURE POINTS FOR PHILIPPINES PRESS: AN INDEPENDENT JOURNALIST'S POLITICAL INSIGHTS

[Fifth in a series]

(By George Chaplin, Editor in Chief, The Honolulu Advertiser)

MANILA.—Journalism is a hazardous occupation in the Philippines. Since 1979 close to 30 newsmen have been killed; only one person has been charged and his case is still going on.

Raul Locsin, the 55-year-old editor and publisher of Business Day, probably the best newspaper in the city of 6 million, is a courageous journalist who is highly respected here and overseas. The East-West Center has several times had him as a seminar speaker and he never minced words during the entire Marcos regime.

Because his publication is specialized for the business community with a modest circulation (60,000), he was largely left alone—although Marcos would refer to Business Day as a "subversive sheet" which he cited as proof that a free press existed.

Locsin told us that "if Marcos has won the snap election, we were on his list to be closed."

Earlier, there had been two occasions of pressure.

The more blatant involved Juan Ponce Enrile, who at the time was Marcos' defense minister. Locsin said Enrile called him and declared that a coconut industry survey which the paper had done and was preparing to print infringed on national security.

When Locsin disputed that, Enrile pointedly told him his reporters had not yet been cleared by the military.

"I asked him", Locsin said, "whether I should bring the reporters right over so he could clear them."

Nothing further was said and Locsin printed the survey.

We got into other subjects, and he made these observations:

Even after the assassination of Ninoy Aquino, Marcos could have survived as president if he had done three things. One, if he had let General Fabian Ver go. Two, if he had not twice named chief justices and bypassd a senior in the supreme court, which violated tradition. And three, if he had not demonstrated undue interest in the proceedings and judgment in the Aquino assassination trial—that being perceived as disdain for justice.

The new constitution probably will largely follow the 1935 American-created bicameral constitution, providing for the presidential system. Cory had to abolish the existing constitution on taking office, since it was designed for a Marcos-type government.

"The perception here is that President Reagan is not wholeheartedly convinced there was a revolution. He's ambivalent, wanting to recognize Cory but not drop Marcos' friendship.

"Filipino people feel Reagan flimflammed all the way. They feel the revolution was already accomplished before the U.S. took a position.

"There's still great friendship for America. Out in the provinces, everybody says, 'Hi, Joe.' Among the older people there's a lot of pro-American feeling. But in the urban areas the young don't feel any special ties."

Americans are held to a higher standard (than other foreigners). There are high expectations of America. When you shout about democracy, freedom, justice, live up to it. Right now, there's more anti-American feeling here than anti-Japanese, and anti-Japanese sentiment is more related to culture than World War II.

Vice President (Salvador) Laurel "was right during the election campaign with his (U.S.) bases solution: after renegotiation the matter should be submitted to a plebiscite. I feel the people would vote for the bases."

The number of Marcos loyalists is not significant, but they could be a focal point around which other divisive elements could rally.

The economy is so ravaged that you can't make and keep a promise. The national system has been semi-feudal since the days of the Americans. We have a few rich people, a middle class which grew only in the last two decades, and masses of the exploited. There has to be a change in every stratum of society—education, labor and so forth.

He's hopeful long term, due in part to Cory's sincerity. At first she was timid, indecisive, but is now beginning to get the hang of it.

She ran under the PDP/Laban banner, and UNIDO (Laurel's party) coalesced. Some who supported her were more concerned with the spoils, positioning themselves for election probably six years hence.

Many feel (Local Government Minister Aquilino) Pimental is one of those. Laurel too. By that time Enrile will be a bit too old. He feels Enrite is sincere in his support of Aquino.

She has the capability to hold things together, if she wishes. If things remain the same for the next two or three years Laurel might pull out, but now even the military has to accede.

He gives Aquino a couple of years to get things done, but in the next six months she has to take firm positions on key issues. She's starting to, but is reluctant to do it directly from the president's office. She seems to be sensitive (because for the time being she has unlimited power) to being called another Marcos, so that tends to make her indecisive. But she's learning fast.

On priorities, the first need is to settle the political situation, to get a constitution so there's a legal framework. The country needs to know the rules of the game.

Second is agriculture, involving 70 percent of the population. Third, a price and incomes policy. Fourth, tourism promotion.

Although he's a graduate of the Jesuit university Ateneo, he says with a chuckle that he's not a member of the 'Jesuit Mafia," represented by several in Aquino's cabinet. Ateneo President Joaquin Bernas, a bright man still in his 40s, is a close adviser to Cory.

People are hungry for news and there are about 20 daily newspapers, which will later shake down to 3 or 4.

(The same observation was made to us by an American observer who said: In bygone years there were three or four national dailies. It was all very simple. You watched Channel 4 (the Marcos government station) and you knew what the headlines would be the next day.

(This, he said, is not an issue-oriented society. Women pay more attention to issues than men do. Family alliances are what count here. What province are you from? Family is the basis of everything. Filipino culture is learned with mother's milk. Interpersonal relationships are important. You build obligations outside the family, against the time when you need something.)

BICENTENNIAL COMPETITION ON THE CONSTITUTION AND BILL OF RIGHTS

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention an educational project designed to commemorate the bicentennials of the Constitution and Bill of Rights throughout this Nation. Teachers and students in my congressional district are participating in the development and field testing of the National Bicentennial Competition on the Constitution and Bill of Rights. Representatives of my district office have been working closely with representatives of the Los Angeles Unified School District in this effort.

Members of my staff have spoken with the teachers involved and have seen the program at work in their classrooms. They have been favorably impressed with what they have seen. Teachers report that the program provides students, some for the first time, an opportunity to discuss and develop a meaningful understanding of the fundamental principles and values of our system. Students have become deeply involved in discussing basic ideas underlying our Constitution and have shown a great interest in the program.

I am pleased to say that I serve on the National Advisory Committee of this project which is being administered by the Center for Civic Education. The Center has over 20 years of experience in conducting civic education programs on the national level and has an exemplary record. Under the able leadership of their Executive Director, Charles N. Quigley, they are continuing that tradition of excellence. The outstanding quality of the National Bicentennial Competition on the Constitution and Bill of Rights has recently led to its being granted Official Recognition by the Commission on the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution chaired by the Chief Justice.

Thomas Jefferson and John Adams, among other Founders of this Nation, noted the importance of providing educational programs that promote both civic competence and civic responsibility. The occasion of the forthcoming bicentennials provides us an opportunity to reaffirm this conviction and to promote the use of programs, such as this competition, that can reform and revitalize education about the Constitution and Bill of Rights in our Nation's schools.

During its last session, Congress passed Public Law 99-194 which authorized $5 million a year to be appropriated to the Commission on the Bicentennial of the Constitution to promote the development of programs on the Constitution and Bill of Rights designed for use by elementary or secondary school students and, in particular, to implement an annual national bicentennial Constitution and Bill of Rights competition in those schools.

I am pleased that the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies, has recommended an appropriation for $13 million for the Bicentennial Commission on the Constitution and that they have also recommended earmarking $2.7 million for nationwide implementation of the National Bicentennial Competition on the Constitution and Bill of Rights. I urge my colleagues to support these recommendations which will serve to enlighten our youth about the history of our democracy.

REMEMBERING DR. ERIC B. CHANDLER

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I write in memory of Dr. Eric B. Chandler, civil rights leader and activist, of New Brunswick, NJ. Dr. Chandler arrived in New Brunswick in 1943. He was greeted by segregation and bigotry throughout the area. From that moment on he knew that he had a purpose in life. His mission was to bring greater understanding among people. He succeeded in his endeavors.

Dr. Chandler was educated at Bates, Harvard and Boston Colleges. He used his intelligence, strength and perserverance to help organize the Urban League of Greater New Brunswick. It was organized at the end of World War II and he served as its executive director for 13 years.

Dr. Chandler died earlier this month at the age of 83. His labor for the cause of decency has left an impression on all of us and he will be sorely missed.

U.S. PARTICIPATION IN THE INTERNATIONAL COFFEE AGREEMENT

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to provide for continued U.S. participation in the International Coffee Agreement [ICA]. U.S. participation in this international treaty is due to expire on September 30, 1986. This bill would authorize U.S. participation in the agreement until October 1, 1989, for the life of the treaty.

The ICA is an international treaty signed by 46 producing countries and 24 consuming countries representing 98 percent of world production and 85 percent of world consumption. The United States has participated in the ICA since 1962 in an effort to minimize fluctuations in coffee prices and balance the economic interests of producing and consuming countries.

The 71 countries participating in the ICA of 1986—up from 67 in 1976—are responsible for virtually all production of coffee and over 90 percent of world coffee consumption. The ICA itself contains no fixed price objective. Rather, each year the members of the agreement establish a price range based on current production and consumption trends, inventory levels and other factors that influence the market. The price is negotiated yearly from September to September.

Coffee is the most important agricultural commodity in the export trade of the developing world. Over 40 nations depend on coffee for export earnings. It is essential to economic growth and debt repayment in most Central and South American countries. The United States is the world's largest consumer of coffee and the U.S. participation in and full support of the ICA is important for the economies of the developing nations. Full U.S. involvement serves a foreign policy goal of improving relations with these developing countries.

As a result of the drought in Brazil last year, market prices for coffee exceeded the upper limit of the quota system price range. They went from $1.26 per pound in October 1985 and peaked at $2.35 in January 1986. Quotas were suspended on February 18, 1986.

This price rise has led to questions about the need for the agreement but, even without the economic controls in place the agreement is essential. The ICA is an incentive to producers to maintain production, build stocks and accelerate exports to improve world coffee supply and quality in an orderly manner. It has largely been responsible for efforts by producing nations to accelerate exports to bring the price level of coffee to only 25 cents higher than its October 1985 average.

To halt U.S. participation in the ICA at this time would send a negative signal to producing countries. It could trigger actions, such as efforts to form cartels, which would adversely impact the U.S. coffee industry and U.S. consumers. Continued U.S. participation in the ICA provides the United States the opportunity to influence future marketing and production policies of coffee producing countries when consumers are most vulnerable.

The U.S. imports 17.5 million bags of coffee each year. We have the largest share of the market and the largest vote during the negotiations. The United States also has the largest stake in participating in this agreement and maintaining our cordial relations with coffee producing nations upon whom we greatly rely. For all of these reasons, I urge your support for this vital legislation.

"MY HERO" ESSAY WINNER

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to recognize a special young man who out of love and respect for his uncle received the Fenwick High School Essay Award. Keith Sommer's essay, "My Hero," is a masterpiece honoring his uncle Nick Perrino's hard work, loving care of his family, and determination to become a self-made successful businessman in the restaurant business of Chicago. Nick Perrino's Home Run Inn has been a favorite of Chicagoans for many years; which has led to the endless expansion of the restaurant since its conception in 1947.

Keith's honest and straightforward style of writing is another fine example of the outstanding students within the Fifth Congressional District of Illinois. Keith is to be commended for his imagination, coherency, and sincerity for the subject matter; as well as for his writing skills.

Not only is Keith a fine author, but he has something real to say to his uncle, his family, and to us. The love and pride he expresses for his family members are truly based on the finest ideals that have made this country strong and prosperous. The family unit is being preserved in the eyes of some of our most outstanding youth.

A TRIBUTE TO MR. STEW LEONARD

HON. STEWART B. McKINNEY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Mr. Stew Leonard of Fairfield County, CT, who has been honored by the Small Business Administration as Connecticut's Small Business Advocate of the Year for 1986. This accolade is well deserved by Mr. Leonard, as his services have been as generous as his achievements have been extraordinary.

I am heartened by the Small Business Administration's recognition of Mr. Leonard, because I still find it difficult to maintain public awareness of the importance of small business to local and national economic strength. To a great extent, we as a nation often take small business men and women for granted because they so consistently and reliably meet our daily needs. We must never lose sight of the importance of small business and its success in creating new jobs, enhancing productivity, and providing the entrepreneurial spirit that has helped the United States compete in the world market. We also should not forget that most of us buy our cars, our houses, and our clothing, from small businessmen. In Fairfield County, we can't forget this because many of us buy our groceries as well from a small businessman.

Stew Leonard began his career in the dairy industry as a milkman, going door to door delivering milk in his father's truck. He eventually took over the family business with its small dairy and seven employees, but was soon forced to relocate when the State decided to run a highway right through his butter section. That was in 1966; by 1969, Stew had succeeded in securing a $485,000 small business loan from the Merchant's Bank & Trust Co. of Norwalk. With this small business loan and a few good ideas, Stew set up a new dairy a few blocks away.

Today, Stew Leonard's staff has swelled to 450. He has 50 butchers who cut meat to order. He buys produce by the ton and strawberries by the acre. Since he has opened, over 30 million customers have made their way through Stew Leonard's twisting aisle, and his store has been certified by Ripley's Believe It or Not as the largest dairy store in the world. Not only is it the largest, but it is also the most productive, with the highest sales per square foot of any retail store. In fact, in the greater Bridgeport area, Stew Leonard's does as much business with its 1 store as one of the national chains does with 12.

In his book, "A Passion for Excellence," Tom Peters says of Stew Leonard's: "It's a treat to shop there. It's a celebration of imagination and excellence. It's a show in every nook and cranny. * * * Stew Leonard has turned shopping into an event." Shopping at Stew Leonard's certainly is an experience, and for those who have had that opportunity it is clear why Stew is considered to be the intellectual heir to Walt Disney. I must admit that the first time I saw and heard his 9-foot mechanical dog singing and playing the banjo I was somewhat taken aback. But the kids love it, and as Stew has pointed out in the past, any parent whose child actually likes going to a grocery store is going to do a lot of shopping there.

It is this commitment to his customers which has allowed this small businessman from Connecticut to outsell even major national grocery chains. For instance, in his store, Stew has only two rules: "The customer is always right," and, "If the customer is wrong, reread rule one." Every day, he and his helpers go out of their way for their customers. He decides what merchandise to carry by a method he calls, "Ask the customers, and give them what they want," and he tells his people, "If you wouldn't take it home to your mother, don't put it out on the shelf." Stew Leonard knows that if you take care of the customer, the profits will take care of themselves. And as the 10,000 customers who shop at his store each week will attest to, Stew Leonard knows how to take care of his customers.

His ingenuity and constant innovation, his excellent merchandise and competitive prices, his efforts to make grocery shopping enjoyable, and his unswerving commitment to his customers, all set Stew Leonard at the very top of his class; however, it is his willingness to help other small business men and women which sets him in a class by himself. For the last 6 years, Stew has appeared as the opening speaker at the Greater Nowalk Chamber of Commerce's Free Small Business Development Center Program. And his services to small business do not end there, for it is a commitment which he honors every day of the year. Stew's office and advice are open for anyone who wants them, and there isn't a week that goes by that Stew isn't visited by people who own their own small businesses or are interested in starting one. These men and women come to Stew for advice because they know that he can help them, and he will help them.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate Stew Leonard on receiving this honor, and I also commend the Small Business Administration for their choice. It is a wonderful compliment to Stew himself that though his store makes nearly $90 million annually, it has retained the friendliness and appeal of a small town general store. Through his integrity, innovation, and desire to please his customers, Stew Leonard has made his store as big as a small business can be.

IT'S A BEAUTIFUL DAY IN PENNSYLVANIA

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, "It's a beautiful day in Pennsylvania," a popular slogan proclaims, and it will be when the town of Brockway, PA, celebrates its 150th anniversary this summer.

On June 29, vespers at the local high school auditorium will kick off a week of festivities. On July 1 and 2, pageants depicting the history of Brockway will be held. Road signs in the area will be repainted with the 150th anniversary logo to publicize the momentous occasion, and numerous souvenirs will be available.

In a country that is little more than 200 years old, a town that has been in existence for 150 years has truly reached a milestone. The residents of Brockway deserve to be proud of their town's rich heritage and of the part that they have had in perpetuating its traditions.

I know that my colleagues will join me in congratulating Brockway, PA, on its longevity and important contributions to the region.

SCITUATE, MA: 350 YEARS

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, amid anticipation of the upcoming national celebration of the Statue of Liberty's 100th anniversary, I am very proud to make a special note of an equally important celebration this summer as Scituate, MA, commemorates its 350th anniversary—an anniversary which serves to remind us all of the important historical contribution made by Scituate to our region's and our Nation's heritage of liberty. This heritage is perhaps best described by the following historical account of Scituate written by Kathleen Laidlaw, president of the Scituate Historical Society.

SCITUATE—A HERITAGE OF FREEDOM BY THE SEA

(By Kathleen Laidlaw)

This theme describes the early history of "Scituate" named by the Indian Satuit, meaning cold brook and by 1640 Scituate. The Pilgrims came to Plymouth in 1620 for their type of religious freedom and the Puritans came to Boston in 1630 because they wanted to purify the Church of England. They both set up rather rigid rules for everyone who came here to live.

Who came to Scituate and why? The town is located halfway between Boston and Plymouth and is recorded as one of the earliest towns to be settled. Nathaniel Tilden came from Plymouth and bought land on 3rd cliff which had been cleared by the Indians as early as 1624 to start his farm. Timothy Hatherly, who helped finance the Mayflower, came to Plymouth in 1623 and returned to England in 1625 to report to his "Merchant Adventurers" of large tracts of land in Scituate which would be of great value and he returned in 1633. The "Men of Kent," from County Kent, England came in 1628 and started the first settlement at the corner of Kent Street and First Parish Road on lots 8 by 80 rods. Their houses were built of logs with thatched roofs made from marsh grass. The four Cliffs reminded them of the Cliffs of Dover and the marsh grass was used to feed their cattle.

They built their first church on Meeting House Lane in 1634. The Rev. John Lothrop, a Puritan, came from England with many of his followers by the way of Boston to Scituate as the first minister of the church. By 1639 he had this town so divided he decided to go to Barnstable and took with him half of the early settlers. Rev. Charles Chauncey came as the second minister and his strong belief was "infant immersion". This idea was not accepted by the settlers so he left to go back to England. He stopped off at Harvard College and they offered him the presidency of Harvard if he would forget the infant immersion issue. He accepted. Henry Dunster was the retiring President of Harvard and he came here as the 3rd minister of the first church. Scituate had the first and 2nd Presidents of Harvard preach here. By 1636 the town became incorporated.

The population increased very rapidly because people came to Plymouth and did not feel they were allowed the freedom they came here for, so they came up the coast and settled here. James Cudworth, a Capt. in the Militia, was a very respected man in the community. When the Quakers came to Plymouth, they were run out and called the "children of the Devil". They came to Scituate and Capt. James Cudworth sheltered and protected them because he said "I am no Quaker and I am no persecutor." He felt everyone who came to America should have the freedom to do and think as they wished. He was stripped of his rank and lived as a private citizen for 15 years. Freedom for everyone was more important to him than his rank as Captain. Timothy Hatherly also supported Cudworth. The people came here to invest their talents, education and money to make this country a better place for everyone. They fought to establish the freedom that we all now enjoy.

From 1640 to 1872 over 1,000 ships were built on the North River. At the Briggs shipyard in Scituate, the Columbia was built in 1773. It was the first ship to carry the Stars and Stripes around the world and under Capt. Robert Gray discovered the Columbia River in Oregon. The tea ship Beaver was built in the Brick Kiln shipyard in Pembroke on the North River. During this period Scituate was more important than Plymouth or Boston.

In the 1600's the boundaries of Scituate went all the way to Abington. In 1727 a part of Scituate became Hanover. By 1849 South Scituate became Norwell.

In 1732 William Cushing was born at Belle House Neck. He became an associate Justice of the King's Bench. All of the Judges in the colonies were Loyalists, so during the revolution they fled but William Cushing remained as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts. He believed in fighting for freedom. He was asked by President Washington to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States of America. He refused because of his age and remained Associate Justice.

By 1810 the Scituate Lighthouse was built on Cedar Point. By 1812 we were at war with the British. Rebecca and Abigail, daughters of Simeon Bates (age 15 and 19) the lighthouse keeper, played the drum and fife behind the lighthouse and scared away the British. They have gone down in history as the "American Army of Two." The Lighthouse was lighted until 1860 when Minot's Light was built on Minot Ledge off the Scituate coast. The lighthouse deteriorated very badly and by 1916 the town of Scituate bought it for $1,000—provided the town maintain it as an historic site. In 1967, the town meeting turned the custody and administration of the Lighthouse over to the Scituate Historical Society. The Society opens it for all school children and the public during historical tours.

On January 13, 1784 Samuel Woodworth was born on Front Street. When he was 12 years old, his mother died and two years later his father married Betsy Northey and Samuel and his family went to live in what we now know as the Old Oaken Bucket Homestead. He worked the farm with his father and many times drank from the Old Oaken Bucket. He married and went to New York in 1817. He closed his office one day and went home and at the urging of his wife, he wrote the poem "The Old Oaken Bucket" about his father's plantation. It was put to music in 1852 and in 1935 at town meeting, was voted the official song of Scituate.

The town of Scituate has a very rich heritage which has been handed down to us by the early settlers who came here and under very difficult circumstances fought to give everyone the freedom to do and be whatever we want to be. We have it today because the people down through the years have continued to treasure that freedom and do whatever is necessary to keep it.

Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to congratulate the citizens of Scituate and I urge my colleagues to join with me as we celebrate the occasion of the town of Scituate's 350th anniversary.

NICARAGUA: WILL IT BE THE NEXT CAPTIVE NATION?

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend an interesting Washington Times editorial on Nicaragua to my colleagues in the Congress. Very soon, Congress will take up the issue of assistance to the Contras. All of us will again hear the now familiar arguments on the merits of providing support to the Nicaraguan freedom fighters as well as the opposing views as to why Comandante Ortega is not such a real threat to democracy in this hemisphere.

Congress has a full platter this session and there are many pressing issues which must be resolved. Given the daily demands of serving in the Congress, few Members have time to sit and reflect on the long-term impact of many of the decisions we make in this branch of Government. Although some will disagree, what happens in Nicaragua will affect the future course of events in Central America.

Should pressure from the Contras on the Sandinistas end, those Marxist-Leninists could consolidate their revolution and turn that poor country into a clone of Cuba. Nicaragua would become a full-blown police state that could increase its efforts to export its revolution to neighboring countries. Soviet, Eastern bloc and Cuban economic, diplomatic and military ties would be strengthened and Nicaragua would fall slowly but surely into the classic pattern of a Communist state.

Whether we realize it or not, our vote on aid to the Contras does matter. From a historical perspective, we are faced with a major decision that could directly affect the future of freedom in this region of the world. In recent years, many in the Congress have asked how our Government allowed Castro to come to power. His acceptance of Soviet offensive missiles and the serious tension which resulted nearly brought the United States and the Soviet Union to a major military confrontation. Let us hope that the Congress will vote to avoid future clashes of this nature. Let's help those who represent the future of democracy in Nicaragua. Let us vote to continue support for the Contras. We don't need more Cubas so near to our southern borders. The choice is ours.

With these concerns in mind, I commend the following insightful article on Nicaragua to my colleagues.

REAGAN'S MANAGUA WATCH

(By Ben Wattenberg)

Having observed Memorial Day and Memorial Day (observed), perhaps it might be useful to observe what President Ronald Reagan and the present Congress will be remembered for in years to come. After all, it is one of the cliches of politics that the president, and sometimes even members of Congress, "have their eyes on the history books."

Will the history books remember our current leaders for a new tax-reform bill, even if it passes in a form pure as the driven snow? I doubt it. Twenty years from now, new loopholes and exceptions will encrust the tax purity with sufficient barnacles for some candidate for president to run on a platform that the tax code is "a disgrace to the human race." You can depend on it.

Inflation has been reduced in recent years. That's important. How important will it look 20 years from now? Probably not very. We will have had new inflations, new recessions, new arguments about deficits.

So I offer another choice, to both the president and the Congress. Our elected officials will be remembered by the history books by what America does in Nicaragua.

Strange how history takes a poor dinky little country like Nicaragua and bathes it in the full candlepower of global importance. But I do believe it is our central issue.

Why?

Well, there is another great cliche that drives American politics, particularly the presidency: "Not on my watch."

The game goes something like this: "Did the nuclear genie get out of the bottle?"—and the answer by a president approaching retirement is "Not on my watch." Or: "Did the Communists gain one square inch of territory?" And the answer (it is hoped) is, "Not on my watch."

Ronald Reagan and the Congress are facing one of those sorts of questions, but turned a different way. It goes this way: "Did we start to turn the tide against Communism?"

Unless Reagan and the Congress act decisively on the matter of Nicaragua, they are in danger of having the history books answer, "Not on their watch—and they had a real chance."

The Congress—finally—will vote on aid to the "contra" guerrillas within the next couple of weeks. President Reagan has some fairly good news to report to suppprt his case for aid. After a three-week marathon meeting, the "contra" leadership (the United Nicaraguan Opposition) has agreed to do many of the things the administration and the Democrats have wanted it to do. It has agreed to civilian rule over the military forces, to accountability of funds, to oversight of human rights, and to a broadened base of leadership.

Moreover, the Central American nations stiffened in the recent Contadora meetings. The Honduran president made his most unequivocal anti-Sandinista statements. The Costa Rican president hung tough on the idea that a real Contadora treaty must insist on authentic internal democracy in Nicaragua.

What's the problem? Two months ago all the pundits said Mr. Reagan would get the aid. Now, no one knows. There are reports of bickering and infighting over tactics and substance within the administration.

So, first, Mr. Reagan must crack heads and lay down the law to his own people.

Then he must work over the Congress with more vigor than ever, particularly those Democrats now on the fence. The swing Democrats must pay attention to history. The question before the House is this one:

If the United States can't roll back the Communists, here, in a small way, in a tiny, poor, neighboring nation in a place where it can hurt us—when and by whom will it ever be done? By President George Bush? President Gary Hart? President Mario Cuomo?

Now is the moment: a popular president, a nearby real threat, a chance to change the tide. If our leaders dither, they must consider how the history books will answer that big question: "What was done on their watch?"

If there is no action, now, the answer may well be: not a damm thing.

CCC FUNDING RESTORED

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I share with the farmers of southern Ohio the good news that Congress has today approved Urgent Supplemental Appropriations legislation.

Contained within this legislation is a very important provision which will provide for the funds needed to restore viability to the Commodity Credit Corporation. The $5.3 billion requested will assist the USDA in meeting its current year commitments for ASCS set-aside payments. This provision, alone, will certainly be beneficial to the farmers of southern Ohio many of whom have based their operations and expenses on the promise by the Federal Government that these CCC funds would be forthcoming. Certainly, Congress has acted in a prudent fashion by reaffirming their commitment and assuring that these promised funds are now forthcoming.

During this difficult year in the history of American agriculture, it is reassuring that my colleagues have seen fit to restore these important funds.

THE LOPEZ FAMILY OF CORDOVA, NM

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleagues to join me in honoring a family of artists from New Mexico who are participating in the 1986 Folklife Festival that will begin this week.

The Lopez family of Cordova, NM, are woodcarvers who have been creating images in northern New Mexico since the late 19th century. Jose Lopez began carving to take his mind away from the fact that his son had just been sent off to World War I. Lopez was soon "discovered" by Santa Fe artists and soon his children began carving. Now their descendants are active carvers. George Lopez was a recent recipient of the National Heritage Award given by the National Endowment for the Arts for his work in woodcarving.

I am honored to have these members of the Lopez family come to Washington as representatives of the Hispanic culture. I hope that each of my colleagues will have an opportunity to visit the Lopez family during their visit to the American Festival of Folklife on the Mall.

I include the following article in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in honor of the Lopez woodcarvers and the tradition that they strive to preserve.

THE "REVIVAL" OF IMAGE-CARVING IN NEW MEXICO: OBJECT-FETISHISM OR CULTURAL CONSERVATION?

(By Charles L. Briggs)

The traditional arts have had a tough time of it during the past hundred years, as industrialization has flooded markets with mass-produced goods. Collectors have denuded the artists' communities of traditional works, thus depriving future generations of crucial prototypes. While scholars and aficionados have lamented the demise of traditional arts, their concern has often been expressed in efforts to induce the artists' descendants to "revive" their traditions. In order to enhance the economic feasibility of such efforts, artists are encouraged to orient their production toward well-to-do outsiders rather than their own less affluent neighbors. Since the patrons' cultural and aesthetic values contrast with those of the artists and their communities, "market forces" frequently alter the form, function and symbolic content of traditional arts along lines which seem alien to its producers.

This process is so pervasive that it often appears to be inevitable. One may rightly ask if artists, collectors, museum personnel and/or scholars can really change its course in any way. This short sketch of one tradition—image carving in northern New Mexico—will argue that the development of greater sensitivity to the nature of traditional art and the needs of the artists would go a long way toward improving the situation. My goal here is to stimulate the reader to ponder some basic issues—ethical as well as cultural and aesthetic—concerning the role outsiders have played in the evolution of traditional arts.

The Spaniards brought images of the saints as they journeyed north from Mexico to conquer, colonize and missionize the "interior provinces" after 1598. During the 17th and 18th centuries, religious medallions, oil paintings and even small statues, largely made in Mexico, were exported to the northern province of New Mexico. These religious images were executed in the dramatic European style of the baroque. Artisans, often the gray or blue-robed Franciscans, living in New Mexico began producing graphic paintings on tanned hides after 1700, and a few mildly baroque reliefs and sculptures in the round were locally made before 1800. The basic style, iconography and techniques used in these religious images sought to replicate European models.

But a very different style arose in late 18th century New Mexico. Hispanic artisans of New Mexico, utilizing mostly local materials except for some pigments, began to fill the region's need for sacred images with works of a folk style. The preceding orientation toward late Renaissance prototypes and styles was replaced by local aesthetic and iconographic selections. The result was the creation of a distinctly local, folk tradition. This Hispanic folk style flourished from about 1775 to 1850 in panel paintings (retablos) and persisted in sculptures (bultos) until the end of the 19th Century.

Anglo-American traders began coming to New Mexico after the opening of the Santa Fe Trail in 1821. They were followed by foreign church authorities and the railroad between about 1850 and 1900. Large quantities of lithographs and plaster of paris statues flooded into the area, and the market for locally produced images virtually disappeared by the turn of the century.

History shows, however, that the art was merely dormant, not moribund. In 1868 José Dolores López was born in Córdova, a small community in the mountains of northern New Mexico, where he worked primarily as a farmer and rancher. When Córdova lost control of the surrounding grazing lands in 1915, however, the local economy fell apart, and López and his neighbors were hard-pressed to find cash income to fill the gap. López had always been a skilled furniture maker. (Two of his brightly painted chairs are shown in Plate 1.) Having begun whittling in 1917 as one means of reducing the anxiety he experienced when his eldest son was drafted into World War I, he soon began to use his newly developed chip-carving technique on his furniture. (Chip-carving, usually with curved blades, was Spanish tradition, but the work of López featured a straight-edge chisel, producing facets rather than troughs.)

Although initially López produced works only for his neighbors and for the local chapel, he was soon "discovered" by members of the Santa Fe artists' and writers' colony visting Córdova to witness Lenten rituals. Once López was induced to sell his works at craft fairs in Santa Fe, the Anglo patrons profoundly affected the carving of this Hispano in both style and subject matter. Having convinced López that bright house paints would prove too "gaudy" for Anglo-American patrons, they also persuaded him to widen his repertoire to include items, such as "Lazy Susans" and record racks, which were popular in Anglo-American homes. Exposure to German and Swiss mechanical toys resulted in López's adaptations of these forms as well (see Plate 2).

The most profound change came when Frank Applegate induced López to carve images. By the time of his death in 1937, José Dolores López had created representations of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. Our Lady of Light, the Archangel Michael, St. Peter (Plate 3) and other religious personages, frequently drawing on 19th century polychromed works as prototypes. The bright colors were replaced by a complex array of chip-carved designs. In communicating his message to a non-Catholic audience, López frequently cut the name of the saint (along with his own) into the surface of the image.

López's work had two lasting effects on his community. First, his children began carving, and now their descendants, as well as a number of unrelated families, are active carvers. López's son George, in fact, was a recent recipient of a National Endowment for the Arts' National Heritage Fellowship award, honoring his contribution to folk arts. Second, López's images have generated controversy within the Hispano community; some considered it a sin to sell sacred images to non-believers, while others felt that he was selling central religious and cultural symbols to non-Hispanos for personal profit.

What shaped the patrons' involvement in the "revival"? Their actions reflect an attitude of what may be called object-fetishism. When they looked at Hispano New Mexican religious arts, patrons saw the products only as objects. Accordingly they filled private and institutional collections with objects—particularly images. They were less interested in understanding and documenting the meaning of these objects and the reasons that people continued to venerate them. When the aficionados did not find artists producing the types of objects they expected, they declared the art to be dead. Therefore they encouraged Hispanos to "revive" such arts as carving, weaving and colcha embroidery. Since Hispanos were seen as having lost these skills, the patrons appointed themselves as the arbiters of "Spanish colonial art," acting as judges in exhibitions and establishing craft schools to re-educate the local people in their own arts.

The problem was that the outsiders did not grasp the real nature of traditional art. Rather than merely a set of objects, the tradition of image carving involves patterns created by relationships between wood and color, design and workmanship on the one hand and between the artist and the community on the other. The nature of the art is also to be found in the dynamic ways in which these patterns intersect with each historical epoch. The objects themselves can be thought of as particular or partial embodiments of these patterns: their cultural and artistic value is reflected in the way they evoke the totality of cultural, aesthetic and historical patterns which shaped them.

Seen in this light, the patrons' efforts seem exceedingly naive. They tried to promote purely "traditional," "colonial," or "Spanish" works rather than the carvers' own syncretic traditions. This era found Hispano society, however, in a vastly different set of historical circumstances. With the loss of much of the groups' land base and their immersion as workers into an industrial system, the factors which shaped their art were vastly different. Consequently the patrons' efforts to induce the artists to remain within the narrow and artificial definition of "Spanish colonial style" forced the art out of its underlying pattern of historical relevance.

The patrons lamented the effects of industrialization and cultural homogenization on Hispano society. They believed that renewed production of 19th-century styles would help preserve "Spanish colonial" culture as a whole. Their encouragement did not, however, focus on promoting new means by which Hispano artists could serve the changing needs of their own communities; rather the Anglo patrons taught the artists profit-oriented marketing strategies and ways of accommodating the newcomers' aesthetic. The most important characteristic of the image-carving art had once been its tremendous responsiveness to the cultural and aesthetic needs of Hispano Catholics, but by prompting the artists to cater to the art market patterns of the dominant society, the patrons encouraged them to undermine the fundamental premise of the art. In the end, the patrons furthered the very process of commercialization and Americanization that they decried.

This case is not cited because it is unique, for the same process has affected innumerable traditions in the United States and abroad. Our interest in "folk" or "handmade" arts and crafts moves us to buy and sell objects as a means of fostering tradition. I am not arguing that this process is entirely bad or that a few individuals could reshape it in toto. But the case of Córdova should indicate how collectors, dealers and scholars play a role in deciding whether the actions of patrons bring objects and historical patterns into harmony or discord.

There seem to be two ways in which we can take a positive role in this process. First, because collectors, dealers and scholars affect the way in which both artists and consumers relate to art, we must direct our efforts toward fostering patron awareness of the fact that artistic traditions comprise complex sets of cultural and aesthetic patterns. While objects embody particular intersections of these cultural and historical patterns, they are not the tradition itself. We must understand and respect the full complexity of cultural and artistic diversity, since we cannot know in advance how these patterns will be reflected at any given moment.

Second, it is the artists themselves who translate the connections between culture, artistic tradition and history into visual forms, not patrons or scholars. Our interest in fostering tradition is thus best served by supporting the artists' freedom to decide how patterns come together rather than by defining for the artist the nature of tradition or excellence. Ideally, works of art promote dialogue between individuals, communities, societies and even different historical epochs. When one party dictates the terms of the discussion, dialogue becomes monologue. The central responsibility of collectors, dealers and scholars is to try to negotiate a genuine dialogue. If this can be established, traditional artists will have a better chance of communicating the richness and complexity of their message.

HONORING AN EAGLE SCOUT

HON. JOHN J. DUNCAN

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, Frank "Bud" Myers, an 11th grader at Tellico Plains High School, Tellico Plains, TN, has earned the rank and privilege of an Eagle Scout.

Bud has not only participated in Scouting activities, but is a member of the varsity basketball team, and student council. He rounds out his extracurricular interests through his membership in the youth group of the First Baptist Church. As a hard-working and diligent young man, he has worked his way through high school by doing yard work, working in local businesses, and helping his parents with the Myers Funeral Home. He also works on the family farm.

Well liked by teachers and students alike, Bud can certainly be proud of his accomplishments. He has a bright and promising future ahead.

I PRAY FOR A BETTER TOMORROW

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to bring to my colleagues' attention the work of one of my constituents, Mr. David Gimbel, who has been working for 37 years to help retarded children.

As an active member of the Association for the Help of Retarded Children, which serves more than 10,000 people in New York State alone, Mr. Gimbel's efforts have helped to provide opportunities for many others. During the last 37 years, our Nation's capacity to serve the mentally retarded has increased significantly—public schools now offer special education classes, group homes and hostels exist solely for the mentally retarded, and each year thousands of mentally retarded children participate in the Special Olympics. It is because of organizations, such as the Association for the Help of Retarded Children, and because of individuals, like David Gimbel, that such strides have been possible.

Mr. Gimbel's work on behalf of the mentally retarded includes writing poetry, and I wanted to share with my colleagues one of his poems that I found to be particularly well written.

I PRAY FOR A BETTER TOMORROW

I am a senior citizen, a widower and the father of a one and only child who is severely retarded. After I laid my beautiful wife to rest into her eternal sleep my child greeted me at the head of the stairs. She embraced me and said, "Please bring my Mommy home." I shall never forget that moment for as long as I live.

For the past 36 years I have dedicated every spare moment of my life working on behalf of the retarded, "God's exceptional children" so that parents like myself can one day find a clearing in our forest of despair.

Today with the problem of AIDS retarded children in a sense are also not wholly accepted in our society. They are always placed on the bottom rung of the human ladder. It is not our children who should be pitied but instead those who looked down upon these loveable children.

Oh what a lesson of love the people of today could learn from these innocent children! Today in every part of the globe: the Middle East, Afghanistan, Central America and the devastating famine in Africa where we see babies dying of starvation.

And all because bombs, rockets and missiles are scorching the Lord's beautiful earth while taking away the food from abundant fields the hungry require, and shelter for the poor and the homeless.

"Wake up nations of the world" or we shall all wind up as in the very beginning of time itself with only God, the sky and the devastated earth.

DAVID GIMBEL.

A TRIBUTE TO DR. KIKUO TAIRA

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the opportunity to acknowledge one of the leading Japanese-American citizens in the Fresno community, Dr. Kikuo Taira, for being awarded the "Fifth Order of the Imperial Sacred Treasure from His Majesty Emperor Hirohito of Japan."

Born in Fresno, Dr. Taira has made many contributions to the community. He was the first Japanese-American cadet officer at Fresno High School and later went on to attend the University of California at Berkeley, for his undergraduate work as well as medical school. During his medical career, Dr. Taira spent 1 year interning in Japan and later at a relocation center for Japanese-Americans in Jerome, AR, during World War II, where he headed the hospital. He has maintained a general practice in Fresno for many years.

Dr. Taira has worked all of his life to bring together the Japanese and American cultures. He was the original organizer of the Boy Scouts in the Buddhist Church. He has worked on bridging the gap between the Buddhist religion and American Christianity teachings to enable Japanese-Americans to assimilate into American society more easily. Furthermore, he has taken an active role in the people to people program with our sister city, Kochi, Japan, as well as participated in the development of the Shin Zen Garden at Woodwar Park to introduce the beauty and art of Japanese gardens. Dr. Taira also organized a judo black belt association in central California to further introduce the Japanese art of self defense in this community.

Dr. Taira is truly deserving of the "Fifth Order of the Imperial Sacred Treasure from His Majesty Emperor Hirohito of Japan," and I would like to extend my congratulations to him and his family.

MANY UNANSWERED QUESTIONS ABOUT SDI

HON. DONALD J. PEASE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply concerned about the present administration's premature and reckless claim that the Strategic Defense Initiative Program—SDI or star wars—will render nuclear weapons impotent and obsolete. There are still many vitally important unanswered questions which should be addressed before any further investment of the taxpayers' money in this program is considered.

It is unclear whether the development of SDI is in violation of the 1972 Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missiles—the ABM Treaty—agreed upon by the Soviet Union and the United States. In article V of the treaty it is stated that:

> Each Party undertakes not to develop, test or deploy ABM systems or components which are sea-based, air-based, space-based or mobile land-based.

However, the administration has chosen to avoid the question of compliance to the treaty by questioning the definition of such terms as "components" and "testing." The controversy surrounding these and other terms stems from certain ambiguities in the wording of the treaty. But, in article XIII the treaty accommodates for such problems by providing for the creation of a Standing Consultative Commission which, along with other duties, is designed to "consider questions concerning compliance with the obligations assumed and related situations which may be considered ambiguous." It does not state that in the event that either nation cannot interpret the treaty it should go ahead and develop, test, and deploy a system which may violate the terms of agreement.

If one listens to those who negotiated the treaty, such as Ambassador Gerard Smith, perhaps such consultation with the Soviets would not be necessary. He argues that developing and testing ABM systems or components based on future technologies—which the United States and the Soviet Union have previously not developed—is in violation of the treaty. Perhaps ambiguities in the treaty would be answered by reviewing the spirit of the treaty. According to its opening remarks, the ABM Treaty was created on the premise that:

> • • • effective measures to limit anti-ballistic missile systems would be a substantial factor in curbing the race in strategic offensive arms and would lead to a decrease in the risk of outbreak of war involving nuclear weapons.

Now, however, the administration believes that the creation of ABM systems in the form of SDI, which may or may not be in violation of the ABM Treaty, will somehow contain the arms race and reduce the likelihood of nuclear war. This is highly questionable. The Soviets have already stated that they will take any steps necessary to keep pace with all new United States defensive systems. Thus, the building of SDI may only increase the arms race. Indeed, as former Secretary of Defense Clark Clifford states, "We will have star wars or arms control; we can't have both."

The building of SDI may also increase, not decrease, the risk of nuclear war. If SDI proves not to be 100 percent effective against all nuclear attacks, a superpower may be tempted to attack first in a crisis situation. In this way a superpower could destroy key offensive missile installations and then use its SDI defense to destroy the other power's remaining missiles that may have survived.

It seems unlikely that the President's dream of a perfect defense can be realized and that it is more likely that only this potentially dangerous and even lethal, partially effective SDI system can be created. The SDI system is riddled with technical problems which have not yet been resolved. It is unclear whether a very vulnerable space-based system can be defended against direct attack, or whether it is possible to write and check the millions of computer code lines to the degree of accuracy necessary to anticipate all possible attack combinations. It is equally unclear whether the Soviets or other nations can develop successful countermeasures to SDI. It seems that our scientific community has little faith in the SDI system. According to the Union of Concerned Scientists, over 6,500 scientists and graduate students working in technological fields most pertinent to SDI research, including 57 percent of the 20 top physics departments, have taken a "pledge of nonparticipation" in the SDI Program. They have called SDI "ill-conceived and dangerous." Indeed, according to Paul S. Brown, Assistant Associate Director for Arms Control, Livermore Lab:

> When you consider what the President intended, which was a leakproof umbrella, I think that that's something that very few scientists think is going to be possible.

Even if SDI provided a means to stop every strategic ballistic missile launched simultaneously in a full-scale attack it may still not offer the protection the President envisions. We may not have to anticipate possible technologies that may undermine SDI far off in the future; that technology may already be on the horizon. According to Richard Perle, Assistant Secretary of Defense, the technology for creating insertable nuclear warheads, which would enable our Armed Forces to quickly transform conventional weapons into nuclear weapons, is at hand. How will SDI destroy these converted conventional weapons?

A question that always seems to be neglected is that of the effects of numerous, perhaps thousands of nuclear explosions on the atmosphere. If SDI could destroy all oncoming nuclear missiles, would we survive the effects of radiation? Even if SDI could destroy long-range strategic ballistic missiles before they reentered our atmosphere, certainly one must question what effect nuclear explosions just outside our atmosphere might have.

The administration originally called for $33.6 billion for SDI over a 5-year period. The cost estimates for a deployed system range from several hundred billion to over $1 trillion and beyond.

Developing SDI may heighten the nuclear arms race and create a very dangerous and unstable world. It would cost the taxpayers an exorbitant sum. Given the potentially dangerous, even catastrophic effects that development of SDI poses and given the uncertainties and ambiguities surrounding the system as well as its astronomical cost to the American public, it is of the utmost importance that we treat further research and possible development of SDI with far greater caution. It disturbs me that the President and his administration has failed to provide a more accurate description of the problems facing SDI development and its possible implications.

I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues just a couple of articles which appeared recently in two Ohio newspapers which voice great concern over the administration's direction on SDI.

[From the Journal (Lorain, Ohio), Dec. 9, 1985

BRIDGE OF TRUST

Since man has inhabited the earth he has dreamed of the perfect defense system, first against the animals and then against other men. No matter how sophisticated a defense network man or nations designed, though, the enemy has always found the weak spot in the armor. The same fate awaits President Reagan's Stars Wars defense system and that's one of two reasons why it will never be built. The second reason is its enormous cost.

How could the Stars Wars defense system, assuming it is built and put into place, be circumvented? Just like the Germans circumvented France's impenetrable Maginot Line in World War II. They simply went around it.

But how could any nation possibly go around Star Wars? Very easily. Look at the objective of the Stars Wars defense system: to identify, target and shoot down tens of thousands of enemy missiles. Obviously, the whole Stars Wars defense system is built on the concept that whatever nation would attack the United States would do so with nuclear missiles or at least aerial weapons. What if the attack came in another form, such as covert ground attack? What good would Star Wars be then?

What sort of covert ground attack? Why not have the nuclear weapons smuggled into the United States and placed in lockers at train stations, airports, rented apartments, rented business locations or homes all across the land. Nuclear weapons are about suitcase size, you know, but if an enemy would want larger weapons, then those could be brought in piece by piece. All the weapons could be fired by remote control and checked from time to time to make certain they are in firing order. Sound impossible? It isn't. And any nation faced with beating a defense system like Star Wars to deliver a first strike on the United States would be capable of building such a system.

The point we're making is that no defense system is perfect or long-lasting. The Soviets have people more ingenious than we at designing elaborate but inexpensive weapons networks of the sort we've described to neutralize Star Wars.

Seeking the perfect defense system is foolish. Star Wars is an impossible dream and will require billions of tax dollars to chase. And when the spending is over and the system is built, the nation will be no safer than it is today. Our enemies will be designing and building a counter-system. Defense does not rest in the heavens, it rests in the minds and good faith of men. At some point, the Soviet Union and the United States must begin trusting each other or else both nations will go broke fending off imaginary attacks from the other. Forgetting about Stars Wars would be a good place to begin building this bridge of trust.

[From the News Journal (Mansfield, Ohio), Jan. 5, 1986]

ANOTHER VIEW

High Frontier, the private group promoting President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, has been running a TV cartoon ad showing missiles bouncing off a rainbow shield that covers a house and family. The clear purpose is to persuade viewers that Reagan's so-called Star Wars plan can protect every American home from Russian nuclear rockets. It's blatantly misleading, of course, as none other that Lt. Gen. James Abrahamson, the administration's SDI director, and Richard Perle, the assistant secretary of defense, have conceded.

Questioned sharply by members of a Senate committee recently, both officials acknowledged what everyone close to SDI knows full well: that there's no such thing as a perfect shield, and that even if SDI worked effectively enough to only allow penetration by only a limited number of enemy missiles, American cities would still be devastated and millions would die.

The High Frontier people know that as well as anybody. They also know that most viewers don't understand SDI's complex technology well enough to see through their flimflam. And while TV cartoon ads opposing Star Wars likewise take some liberty with the facts implying that SDI space weapons, in the process of stopping enemy missiles, would incinerate the earth below—those ads contain at least a grain of truth: SDI X-ray laser beams would in fact be powered by nuclear explosions in space whose consequences are entirely unpredictable. The pro-SDI ad hasn't even a saving note of accuracy; it's a flat-out lie.

Despite the Abrahamson and Perle disavowals, the phony High Frontier pitch is still on the tube. Any soap seller is required to have more respect for the truth.

PUBLIC GROWS IMPATIENT WITH LACK OF PROGRESS ON ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, the American people are growing impatient with our lack of progress in cleaning up hazardous waste dumps and curbing acid rain.

A recent Lou Harris poll indicates that the American public is nearly unanimous in its feeling that contamination problems are getting more serious and its impatience is now beginning to show.

The poll shows that nearly everyone in the country is worried about toxic contamination and acid rain. In my own State of California, the environmental issue is now the key issue in the race for the governorship.

I include for the RECORD a May 19, 1986, Lou Harris poll that shows how important the environmental issue has become to the American public nationwide.

ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES COULD BECOME A FACTOR IN CONGRESSIONAL RACES

Despite the relatively low-key attention paid to environmental problems such as acid rain and toxic waste dumps, the American people are nearly unanimous in their feeling that contamination problems are getting more serious and their impatience is now beginning to show. This is according to the Harris Survey conducted by telephone between April 5th and 8th, among a national cross section of 1,254 adults.

Indeed, in the upcoming off-year elections, one of the real sleeper issues may well be that of enviromental controls. Here is how the issue might work, for example, in the case of toxic and hazardous wastes:

A big 93-6 percent majority of the public nationwide believes that "pollution of lakes and rivers by toxic substances from factories" is a serious problem. An almost as high 92-6 percent majority feels the same about "disposal of hazardous wastes." Obviously, nearly everyone in the country is worried about how to clean up toxic wastes dumps.

By 67-29 percent, another substantial majority favors passage of the $10 billion extension of the super-fund hazardous waste clean up program for the next five years. Congress has delayed passage and has just barely extended the program a few months at a time. Clearly, the public is getting impatient and upset at the lack of decisive action by Congress on the clean-up of hazardous wastes.

Finally, when the public was asked what would happen if a candidate running for Congress in their district were to take a position on an environment issue which they disagreed on, 16 percent said they would "certainly not vote for that candidate." This means that the environmental issue alone could affect as much as one vote out of every six. But when this overall indication is divided into those who are pro-environmentalist and those who are anti-environmentalist, a decisive and critical balance emerges. While the anti-environmental vote could muster 6 percent of the electorate to vote against a pro-environmental candidate, a much higher 10 percent of the electorate say they would certainly vote against an anti-environmental candidate.

Thus, the pro-environmental forces have a net four point balance in their favor. This may seem to be a small number of voters, but a swing of four points could easily mean the difference between Democratic or Republican control of the U.S. Senate this year. It could also account for the difference between a five or 10 seat pick-up for the Republicans, which might give Republicans and southern Democrats working control of the House. Or it could mean a net gain of 10 or 12 seats for the Democrats which could give the northern wing of that party solid control over the House.

The temper of the public is to be critical of business and the way it has handled environmental matters, as well as to be critical of the Republicans. For example, when asked which party they felt could do a better job of protecting the environment, the Democrats come out on top of the GOP by a substantial 49-32 percent margin.

But the mandate about business and the environment in many ways is more serious:

When asked who should pay for an injury to a person living near a landfill, and when it cannot be determined that the injury was caused by wastes from a specific company, a big 58 percent feel that the companies using the landfill should pay and another 31 percent feel that the industry producing the waste should pay. By comparison, no more than 5 percent think the government should compensate the victim of such injuries.

A substantial 79–17 percent majority of the public is convinced that "pollution from acid rain" is a serious problem. A big 73–23 percent majority of the public is convinced that a substantial part of the costs required to clean up acid rain should be borne by "the shareowners of investor-owned electric utilities." This contrasts with a much lower 51–45 percent majority who feels that such costs should be borne by "electricity consumers nationally" and the narrow 49–46 percent plurality who feel those costs should be paid by "electricity consumers in eastern and southern states where most coal and oil is burned."

There are those in politics who feel that the environmental issue has cooled appreciably over the past few years. This evidence would not indicate that. To the contrary, it would suggest that big majorities of the American people are deeply upset at what they feel is the lack of progress on cleaning up toxic waste dumps and acid rain. And, it could well be that in 1986, they mean to do something about it at the polls.

TABLES

Between April 5th and 8th, the Harris Survey asked a nationwide cross section of 1,254 adults by telephone:

"I'm going to read you some different kinds of environmental problems. For each, would you please tell me if it is currently a very serious problem, a somewhat serious problem, only a small problem, or no problem at all in this country? "

METHODOLOGY

This Harris Survey was conducted by telephone within the United States between April 5th and 8th, among a cross section of 1,254 adults nationwide. Figures for age, sex, race and education were weighted where necessary to bring them into line with their actual proportions in the population.

In a sample of this size, one can say with 95 percent certainty that the results have a statistical precision of plus or minus three percentage points of what they would be if the entire adult population had been polled.

This statement conforms to the principles of disclosure of the National Council on Public Polls.

FIELD HEARING ON ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, last weekend I had the opportunity to sponsor a field hearing of the House Select Committee on Aging in the Third Congressional District.

The subject of the hearing was problems associated with Alzheimer's disease. By now, most Americans are aware of this disease and the macabre ability it possesses to transform its victims from normal and vibrant citizens into mere living shadows. More than 2 million Americans suffer from the disease, which attacks the brain and causes initial disorientation and loss of recent memory, then progresses into profound memory loss, inability to control bodily functions, dependence on others for simple tasks and virtual personality transformations.

As expected at a forum of this type, my colleagues and I heard from a wide range of experts who confront the tragedy of Alzheimer's disease from many different perspectives. We heard from health care professionals, researchers, mental health experts and nursing home administrators. All of the testimony was both enlightening and valuable in terms of the future work that the Select Committee on Aging will be doing on this subject.

But perhaps the most compelling testimony we received came from Janet Walsh of Sands Point, Long Island, one of my constituents in the Third District. In the course of her brief statement, Ms. Walsh capsulized a virtual decade of pain and heartbreak that only the family of an Alzheimer's victim can know.

The story Ms. Walsh told was both tragic and poignant. As she said, she desperately wants other families to avoid the experiences that controlled her life. More than 120,000 Americans are estimated to die of Alzheimer's each year, but as her testimony demonstrates, people like Janet Walsh's father do not go quietly into the night. Their suffering, and that of those around them is both protracted and agonizing.

I recommend to my colleagues the following testimony from Janet Walsh as a reminder of the strides we still need to make in the world of medical science, and as a reminder of the role the Federal Government can play in this struggle:

TESTIMONY OF JANET WALSH

I am going to try and compress 9 years into 5 minutes, to try to let you understand what it is like to have someone in your family with Alzheimer's Disease. It is still very hard for me to talk about this but I need to do it because I want others not to have to go through what we did.

My father led a very full and energetic life and our home was a very happy one. He was chief engineer of a refrigeration firm, Commander-in-Chief of our local American Legion and a sergeant in the Police Auxiliary. My father was an avid hunter and fisherman, and always provided a secure environment for his family.

The disease started without any medical incident, i.e. a fall, stroke, etc. At first only my mother sensed something was wrong. My father would call and say he got lost on a hunting trip. He hunted those particular woods all his life and was an excellent tracker. Then the call would come from somewhere local, again he couldn't remember how to get home. I was 15 at the time and quite concerned when my father would drive through a stop sign as if it were not there. My parents began to argue frequently which I interpreted as they didn't love each other, were headed for divorce. Needless to say the tension was mounting in our home. I kept hoping that one morning I'd wake to find everything back to normal. Normal would not be used to describe what followed.

After repeated incidents of paranoia and the inability to cope with everyday things, we took my father to his physician. The doctor informed my mother that my father was suffering from Hardening of the Arteries and she should watch him but not so much as to annoy him. He was given medication to help soothe his anxiety.

Shortly thereafter my father was forced into early retirement by the company he worked 30 years for. It was 1971 and he was 60 years old. The union my father belonged to interviewed him in my presence and found him competent to hold down a job and therefore found him one. You must understand my father still had days when he was as normal as anyone else, they were just becoming fewer and fewer. The new job lasted a week and it was determined that my father didn't want to work. Neither our doctor nor the union doctor that examined him would put down on paper a diagnosis that would enable him to retire disabled and therefore we were forced to accept the smallest pension, which amounted to 400 dollars a month. My father previously earned in excess of 30,000 dollars a year not including the tremendous overtime he would put in. Social Security benefits were at least a year away with all the paper work and processing. Fortunately for us my mother had taken a part-time job so that I could attend parochial high school. So all of a sudden the future was quite dim for us. For the next year, my father was constantly supervised to the best of my mothers', my two sisters, and my ability. Needless to say things got much worse. It was becoming apparent that my father could no longer handle even the simplest of tasks.

My mother never drove a car so we had relied on my father for transportation. Now this man was incapable of driving a car and we had to pretend that the car was stolen to get it away from him. Similar deception unfortunately had to be used to remove the gun my father carried as a police auxiliary sergeant and also his entire collection of hunting rifles. He was accusing the neighbors of stealing his wallet and personal belongings, we didn't want him to have access to anything that might bring injury to himself or anyone else.

All hopes of attending a college away from home were thrown out the window in my senior year of high school. I attended the city university in the fall of 1973 and held down a job in the college bookstore to support myself, my mother helped as best she could. It seemed that somehow before my father left his job he took out two bank loans with two different banks and we had no idea where the money went and my father had no recollection of getting the money, so my mother's financial burden was even greater.

Our home was turned into a prison, all doors and windows had to be kept locked. He had to be watched 24 hours a day. It seemed he never slept. My father had started to hallucinate the craziest of things and could have easily fallen down the stairs.

At one point the strain became so much that I came down with walking pneumonia and had to be hospitalized for two weeks. At that time the house psychologist had suggested that I seek therapy because he felt the pain in my chest was a result of stress. I was only 18 at the time and had heard of therapy only on T.V. for the very rich or the very crazy. If only he had told me about the clinics in our area that didn't charge someone in my position. I told him I didn't have the time or the money for that and would handle it myself. I consider that a point in my life when someone had the chance to help me, a professional who could obviously see the emotional pain I was in, and just passed on the opportunity.

Soon after my return from the hospital my father became violent. My father had never laid a hand on any of his children and would certainly never strike my mother. But strike my mother is exactly what he did. At that time my sister knew a neurologist at our local hospital and she asked him to see my father. The neurologist put my father through some testing and concluded that my father was suffering from Alzheimer's Disease. It was 1973 and we had never heard of this disease and it would be many years before we would see anything in writing describing the disease in non-medical terms.

My father remained in the private hospital for six weeks, most times heavily sedated or in a straight jacket, while we tried to find permanent placement for him. Fortunately my father was a veteran and was accepted to the Northport V.A. Hospital in Northport, Long Island. Once in the V.A. system at least we knew he would be cared for and hopefully return home when he was all better. Obviously we were very delusioned. The day he was admitted to the hospital they told us we would be unable to visit with him for a period of two weeks while they removed him from the heavy sedating drug to something milder and also acclimated him to his surroundings. Those two weeks went on forever in my mind, I was happy to get a good night sleep and not have to worry about what outburst my father would have next but I also missed him very much. When we finally did see my father we sat at a big table in what looked like a conference room and we all cried with him. He didn't recognize me then and never did again.

In the beginning my father was allowed to come home on weekends and holidays. The house turned into a nursing home when he came home and we all took turns caring for him, most of the burden of course fell on my mother. One day while I was bathing my father I stepped out of the room to get something, when I came back I found my father fully submerged in the tub. I yanked him up and screamed "What are you trying to do," he looked at me square in the face and said "Kill myself." If I had known then about all the years of agony for him to follow I would have closed my eyes and let him do it.

After a while it became to hard for us to handle him at home, especially with his escaping out of the house. There was a day when he escaped from the V.A. hospital and found a car that was running and got in and drove off. The car was parked outside a grocery store and the owner just ran in to pick something up. She left a young child in the back seat of that car. Fortunately the police pulled my father over and spotted his hospital band on his arm.

The V.A. was really not equipped for someone with the early stages of this disease, so my father was placed with mostly young Vietnam Veterans who were suffering from their own hell. My father ended up in several brawls with these young patients and suffered a classic black eye on a few occasions. Eventually the disease started to get the best of my father physically and a wheelchair was required to get around.

The deterioration finally started to increase rapidly and by this third year at the V.A. hospital he was confined to a chair. He remained at that hospital shifting in and out of bed or chair for four more years. Each year the disease took more and more of the man I had called father until he died on February 20, 1981 a mere skeleton.

We need a cure for this deadly disease. I have many more heart rendering stories to tell but I think everyone will get my point. Family members need help both emotionally, financially and with respite care. With each Alzheimer victim dozens of other lives are deteriorating also.

ACADEMIC AND ATHLETIC EXCELLENCE AT POINT LOMA

HON. BILL LOWERY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. LOWERY of California. Mr. Speaker, in these days of increasing drug use among our youth, it is refreshing to learn of a group of young athletes who buck the trend. Athletes have sometimes been labeled as unintelligent, and often identified with the use of drugs. However, this is not the case with the boys on the Point Loma varsity baseball team. They are too dedicated both academically and athletically to get involved with drugs.

Not only are they skillful athletes, but also excellent students. All of the players on the team have at least a 3.0 grade point average. Motivation in the classroom has carried over into their performance in baseball. The team placed second in their league this year, after a tough playoff loss. The players are able to successfully balance their time between school and sports without neglecting one or the other.

This case is particularly pleasing to me because Point Loma is my high school alma mater. I want to wish the club the best luck and success both on and off the field.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit this article from the Star News which highlights the achievements of these outstanding young men:

The article follows:

[From the Star-News (CA), May 22, 1986]

SMART BASEBALL: POINT LOMA PLAYERS EXCEL ON THE DIAMOND AND IN CLASSROOM

(By John Geis)

The following are two recent political developments on the prep sports scene:

State Assemblyman Willie Brown has introduced legislation which would require all California high school students participating on athletic teams to achieve certain grade-point standards in the classroom.

The CIF-San Diego Section held a workshop earlier this week to discuss drug testing of high school athletes.

These two movements sprouted from a barrage of reports labeling athletes as poor students and—in some cases—drug users. Locally, however, all the news is not necessarily "bad."

For example:

Every member of the Point Loma baseball team earned a 3.0 grade-point average or better at the end of last semester.

The Pointers, disproving any myth about top students turning sour on athletic fields, are also in first place in the tough Eastern League with one game remaining on the schedule.

Dumb jocks? Strung out athletes? Not at Point Loma.

Listen to head coach Bill Hall:

"There's an interesting correlation between academics and baseball," he said. "With a 3.0 student, there's a drive to excel that carries into athletics."

Hall has 17 such players. "And that makes a better coach out of me," he said. "Occasionally, I have to hold a discussion with them, but during ball games they accept (the coaches') decisions—they know where we're coming from."

That kind of discipline, Hall points out, may go unnoticed by players, but it is invaluable to a coach.

The athletes, on the other hand, see additional benefits to fielding a team of scholars.

"I think it makes for a better environment," said senior catcher Pat Evenson, who leads the team in batting with a .492 average, 22 RBI and 12 homeruns.

And his teammates agree.

"It brings the team closer together," said pitcher Todd Bernard. "If you work hard at school, you also work hard on the baseball field."

Bernard, a senior, has earned a cumulative 3.07 GPA in seven semesters at Point Loma while Evenson has attained a 3.13 standing.

Besides bringing a hard-work ethic to the game, some Pointers insist that smart students are making smart plays on the diamond.

"A lot of teams practice situations," said senior shortstop Jim Brasher, who sports a 3.59 GPA. "We don't. I think that's partly because of our experience. A lot of us have been playing together since Little League."

Part experience and part intelligence.

"We play well together," said Eric Reading, "because we play with our heads in the game."

Reading and his twin brother, Chris, form a rather unique leadership tandem.

Eric's 4.0 unweighted GPA and weighted 4.4 mark makes him Point Loma's 1986 valedictorian. Chris' 1.38 ERA, 12-2 record and 86 strike outs in 86 innings makes him one of the top pitchers in the county. His cumulative GPA stands at 3.70 unweighted and 4.05 weighted.

"More or less he pushes me in school work," Chris said. "And I push him in sports."

And why not?

"I can get A's without working too hard," Eric said. "I don't think I'm a genius or anything. I just get my assignments done."

Chris has found batters in the Eastern League to be an equally simple challenge.

It seems athletics have not hindered either Readings'—or their teammates'—study habits. On the contrary, balancing baseball and text books has helped the Point Loma players budget their time more economically.

"During football season," said Brasher, who did not participate in that sport, "I was bored. I found myself watching TV in the afternoons. I even watched a couple cartoons."

Studying didn't start until the evening. So now that baseball has replaced Bugs Bunny, Brasher has had no trouble finding time to complete his homework.

"If you're determined," he said. "There's no reason why you can't (do well academically and athletically)."

While the Pointers' goals in the classroom seem to have been met, their goal on the field—the CIF championship—remains off in the distance.

Point Loma (7-2) leads the Eastern League by one game over defending CIF champion Mira Mesa (6-3). The Pointers' final game, however, is against the Marauders at Mira Mesa. Earlier in league play, Mira Mesa topped Point Loma 5-4 in extra innings.

If Point Loma loses again, they will fall into a two-way tie for first with Mira Mesa. But win or lose, they are assured of making the playoffs (two teams from each league advance).

"We're pretty sure of ourselves right now," Eric Reading said. "We want to win the championship, it's the goal we set out for every year."

If the Pointers do indeed advance that far, players and coaches alike say the determining factor will be team character.

"We knew we were going to be a good team at the beginning of the year," said Bernard. "And we came out playing really strong.

"The team is really together this year."

Said assistant coach Steve Horrow, who has been coaching some of the players since they were eight years old:

"I don't think the good attitude on this team is strictly dependent on winning, (but) kids like this, they're going to get their fair share of wins."

Outfielder Walt Edwards (3.68) is the sixth senior on the club who will graduate with a cumulative GPA over 3.0.

DRUG-TEST OPINIONS DIFFER

With both Point Loma players and coaches seemingly agree on all aspects of their game this year, one difference of opinion does exist.

It centers around drug testing of high school athletes.

The coaches, Bill Hall and Steve Horrow, said they are in favor of any measure that would help alleviate the use of drugs among teens.

"We've been fortunate that we haven't had a problem," Hall said. "But I'd be for anything that would change society's drug problem. If testing athletes at a young age is going to curtail (abuse), then I'm all for it."

The CIF held a workshop Tuesday detailing a voluntary drug screening program used at Edison High School in Huntington Beach. There is some sentiment to adopt the program here.

Point Loma players, however, felt no need exists to adopt such testing.

"I think it (urinalysis) is kind of ridiculous," catcher Pat Evenson said. "Pretty soon they'll be testing Pony League players."

"I know, on a team like ours, there is no drug problem," said pitcher Chris Reading. "We party every now and then, but we're like a family—we watch out for each other.

"I don't think in high school sports (testing) is the thing to do."

Some players saw drug usage as a problem with all types of youths—not just athletes.

"A lot of high school students use drugs," said senior Jim Brasher. "But on this team, there is no problem."

ANNIE ACKERMAN: A LEGEND IN HER OWN TIME

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, Annie Ackerman has been mentioned in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD before and, God willing, there will be many more RECORD statements about this truly super person.

The following newspaper story tells much about Annie, her political wisdom, her legendary "clout" and her personal courage. Mr. Speaker, I know you remember Annie from your own visit to Dade County. She has a way of making an indelible impression on everyone she meets, from local precinct officials to national leaders. Our community rightfully chose to honor this outstanding individual on the evening of June 21.

The news article doesn't mention two qualities about Annie that make her so special. First, she is the most literate private person I know. She has great taste in books. She continually reads and has the ability to absorb information and relay it to her audiences. People recognize her intellectual integrity and strength, and this credibility adds to her political effectiveness.

Second, she has an overriding sense of loyalty and responsibility to her family. Through all the years I've known her and all the activities she has undertaken, her family has always come first. Her late husband, Irving, equaled his spouse in character, tough-mindedness, and brilliance.

Annie didn't seek public office only because, as she said, "I was born in the wrong era." Her first concern was her husband and their children and grandchildren. Her power base and her strength are self-generated, but the source of it all was and is her family.

In a time when families disintegrate and generations don't communicate, Annie Ackerman has bridged the gap. She is a true matriarch of five living generations of one family, a symbol of Jewish tradition and an expression of the American character.

Mr. Speaker, our representative, democratic form of government depends on people who are willing to become involved, who care enough about their community and our country to commit their time, talent, and ideas for the public good.

Even in this special, select group, Annie Ackerman is a leader.

[From the Miami Herald, June 22, 1986]

THREE HUNDRED HONOR ANNE: "A LEGEND"

(By Richard Wallace)

Anne Ackerman and political clout still go hand and hand.

Some 300 people, judges, politicians, the politically hopeful, and just old friends and well-wishers gathered at the Turnberry Country Club in North Miami Beach Saturday night to honor the "Condo-lady," for years a major power-broker in South Florida politics.

"Half of these people aren't even running and they're still here," said Judge Joseph P. Farina. "That's because Annie produces where a lot of people just talk. She gets people involved."

"She's a legend, even in presidential politics," said Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., featured speaker at the first Anne Ackerman Distinguished Floridian Award presentation. "When you talk Florida primary, people say if you get Annie you've got it half done.

Wearing a white feather boa, white gown and gloves and a trademark hat, the diminutive Ackerman gladhanded among the throng like she was running for office.

"I've got more kisses tonight than I've had in the last 10 years," Ackerman said. "What a magnificant thing to have happen."

Former Florida Gov. LeRoy Collins, the political power who helped propel his state from the Old South toward the New South during the late 1950's, was honored as the first recipient of the award, named for Ackerman, the widowed 72-year-old, 4-foot 11-inch, populist-preaching great-grandmother who built a condominium constituency into a major political force in Dade County.

"She's an extraordinary person," said Collins. "She never makes an excuse to stay out of an issue. She really epitomizes the strength of people being involved in government."

"She epitomizes his ideals," said Evelyn Schengrund, of the nonpartisan Forum of North Dade. "They are hers also, and of course that is the reason he was chosen and that future recipients will be chosen."

The award has extra significance to those familiar with Ackerman's 5-year-old battle against cancer.

"It memorializes her name. It perpetuates her name," Schengrund said.

Ackerman, widely known as Annie, has made an extraordinary name for herself over the past two decades as an almost hypnotically persuasive speaker and the commander of a 2,000-strong condo bloc vote.

Using her apartment in the sprawling Point East condo development in Northeast Dade as a political base, Ackerman—a recent inductee in the Florida Women's Hall of Fame—has passionately crusaded:

- Against algae-spawning phosphate-laden detergents.
- For the boycott against surging coffee prices.
- Against the proliferation of handguns.
- For increased air time for WPBT, public television.
- Against anything she perceived as social injustice.
- For the interests of the state of Israel.

Ackerman's political influence is reflected by the greetings from state, local and national politicians who have met with her, been photographed with her and warmly embraced her, including Steve Clark, Bob Graham and Walter Mondale.

Ackerman's prominence has flowed from a particular gift: the ability to convert words into political action.

"The first time I heard her speak, I was on the edge of my seat," Schengrund said. "She was saying all the things I wanted someone to say. She had the courage to say them."

Schengrund sums up Ackerman as "a great person to have in your corner on any issue."

Wearing one of the omnipresent hats that have become a personal signature for her—even while sitting in her condo—Ackerman on Friday explained her passions.

"I'm a romantic and my greatest romance is with America. I'm a first-generation American of immigrant parents who taught me to love America," she said.

"They came here because they believed that if they had the opportunity, their children would be born in freedom—that they wouldn't have to face the oppression of czarist Russia."

Ackerman, who spent her first 55 years in Chicago, became interested in public speaking under the tutelage of her high school debate coach, a woman. Later, Ackerman learned of the hurly-burly of urban politics by observing a man.

"I think I was taught by the best political person in the country," Ackerman said. "His name was Mayor Richard Daley of the city of Chicago."

Ackerman has a succinct summation for success as a Dade political force:

"We found that if we could deliver a vote, we were listened to. Now is that surprising?"

She has two reasons why she has never sought direct political power by running for office.

"The first reason was that I was born in the wrong era. Families were resistant—everybody was resistant. Today is a different story," she said.

"The second reason is, I found I could be much more effective out of office than in office. I can speak out on anything I choose to speak out on and have people listen. It's something you can't do when you have to fight for votes," Ackerman said.

Recent changes in Dade's political landscape—the switch from multi-member legislative districts to single-member districts and the rise of ethic political blocs— have weakened the condo-bloc clout Ackerman developed during the 1970s.

"I think that the power that they once had has been diluted by the bloc voting of blacks and Cubans," said Vergil Shipley, a University of Miami professor of politics and public affairs.

"It has meant that the condo vote is no longer as important countywide as it once was," Shipley said.

"She could get out 90 percent of the voters, and 90 percent of them would vote the way in which she had decided, which is a very formidable power," Shipley said.

Ackerman acknowledged that redistricting, which she opposed, has brought change.

"When we had multi-member districts in this area alone we had six legislators that we could vote for and they had a cross section of Dade County that they were beholden to, not one little fiefdom," she said. "Now we have 20 little fiefdoms with nobody talking to each other.

As with most issues, Ackerman also will discuss another concern, her health, with forthright frankness.

"I was a very healthy woman, but I am not anymore," she said. "I have been fighting cancer for five years.

"Has there been a recurrence? Yes. Am I still fighting? Absolutely. And I will continue to fight and continue to use every day I have to the fullest. That's the whole story," she said.

"I'm here, I'm fighting, I'm speaking and I'll continue to do it."

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO BIKE-AID '86

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of enthusiasm and respect that I lend my support to the Overseas Development Network [ODN] for their efforts to help the needy of the world. I would also like to commend the ODN on its project Bike-Aid '86: Pedalling for Progress, which is a cross-country bike-a-thon to raise people's consciousness to the plight of the hungry and suffering in our Nation and in others.

The ODN is a grassroots organization that seeks to educate and involve students in the constructive approaches to relieving world poverty. One major goal to the ODN is to challenge students to become involved in the development process of an undeveloped area. This development includes the construction of roads, schools and sanitary facilities, the initiation of new agricultural and management techniques, and the introduction of new technologies.

This year the ODN is sponsoring Bike-Aid '86 to help fund its year-round grassroots projects. Bike-Aid '86 is a mission involving hundreds of college men and women who are sacrificing the comforts of home to improve living conditions for their fellow man. The money raised will fund projects both abroad and domestically, as well as complement the budgets of other small self-help organizations' projects.

The continuing effort of the ODN, as represented by Bike-Aid '86 is a step in the direction toward a brighter future for the world's needy. I highly commend these services, and wish the participants of this important event my very best wishes.

FELIPE GONZALEZ AND UNITED STATES-SPANISH RELATIONS

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, the New York Times ran an op-ed piece by Jose Luis Gutierrez, editor of the Spanish newspaper, Diario-16 on the reelection of Spanish Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez this past Sunday.

As Mr. Gutierrez aptly points out, the United States can certainly trust Prime Minister Gonzalez. Interestingly enough, Felipe is also a Socialist. That is a word that sometimes strikes fear in the hearts of ardent supply-siders. Yet, his brand of socialism is strongly on defense, has a flexible economic policy, and is commited to the welfare of the Spanish people. Perhaps, Felipe is not only to be trusted, perhaps we can learn from his brand of socialism as well. I submit Mr. Gutierrez's articles for the RECORD:

THE U.S. CAN TRUST GONZÁLEZ

(By José Luis Gutierrez)

MADRID.—Americans ought to be pleased by the re-election of Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez. The charismatic 44-year-old incumbent is a known risk-taker and a Socialist determined to continue on the left-of-center course he has pursued for the past four years, but he has shown himself to be a staunch friend of the United States.

Mr. González's pro-American decision to keep Spain in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization was endorsed by the electorate in a referendum in March, but this Atlanticism is often criticized by his own, left-leaning political base. People on the left deride him as "the friend of the Americans" and "Washington's man." Gerardo Iglesias, first secretary of the Spanish Communist Party, has said that "González's political program is written in Washington." Nor does the criticism come only from the left.

A strong current of anti-Americanism, sentiments that reach as far back as the Spanish-American War of 1898, runs through Spanish society, as common on the right as on the left. Disapproval of the American raid on Libya in April ran high in the conservative opposition and among supporters of the former Prime Minister Aldolfo Suárez, who expressed his "most energetic condemnation of the attack." By comparison, Mr. González's comment—that he was "not in agreement with the methods used"—was relatively mild.

Mr. González's views have been maturing for some time—since long before 1982, when he was elected Prime Minister. Ten years ago, they were quite radical, often in line with the views of the Communist Party. Today, they are so moderate that they are sometimes confused with positions of the conservative opposition.

In 1976, in a book written by a French Socialist, Pierre Guidoni, who was later appointed Ambassador to Spain, Mr. González was quoted as saying, "NATO is nothing but a military superstructure implanted by the Americans to guarantee the survival of the capitalist system." Not even two years later, after his first visit to the United States, he told a Venezuelan audience: "I would rather be knifed in the gut going into the New York subway than live 30 years safely and tranquilly in Moscow."

In 1982, he threatened to hold a referendum on a resolution withdrawing Spain from NATO. By 1985, he was asking the country to vote exactly the opposite way. The Socialists' slogan in the national elections called for "change." At the time, Spanish voters thought they meant the country. Now it looks as if they also meant themselves.

Today, after nearly four years in office, Mr. González has become an enthusiastic defender of the free market system and the private sector. In May 1985, when he attended the inauguration of President Julio Maria Sanguinetti of Uruguay, he comfronted two journalists, supporters of Fidel Castro and the Sandanistas: "I will tell you the same thing that I told my friend Castro: The Communist system doesn't work." He made a similar comment several weeks later in Moscow: after a five hour interview with Mikhail S. Gorbachev, Mr. González called the Soviet leader "a prisoner of the superstitions" of the Soviet system.

Last September, Mr. González traveled to China and Japan, and on the return flight, the presidential plane flew over Alaska. Several American fighter planes appeared suddenly out of the blue and flew alongside the aircraft. A number of people in the Prime Minister's entourage were alarmed and annoyed, but when he was informed what had occurred, he commented expressively: "Those are our friends."

In this unmistakably pro-American context, the Socialist Government's threats to reduce the American military presence in Spain cannot be taken too seriously. A number of candidates in last week's election talked about canceling the agreement that allows up to 12,500 American troops to be stationed on Spanish soil. But Mr. González can be expected to continue negotiations with Washington for a more gradual reduction. Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo, a former Prime Minister, might just as well have been speaking for Mr. González when he said, "Yanquis, go home—but not all of you, just a few." And in the long run, it seems quite clear, the United States can count on Felipe González as a confirmed friend.

THE STATE OF THE PHILIPPINES

HON. CECIL (CEC) HEFTEL

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, this is the sixth of an insightful 10-article series on the Philippines written by George Chaplin, the editor-in-chief of the Honolulu Advertiser. This installment discusses the present controversy surrounding one of President Aquino's cabinet officers, Aquilino Pimentel, and his tactics in organizing political power in the towns and provinces outside of metro Manila. The article also includes an interview with Vice President/Foreign Minister Salvador Laurel and his views on the current political climate of the Philippines.

The article follows:

[From the Honolulu Advertiser, May 23, 1986]

CABINET OFFICER MAKES TROUBLE IN COUNTRYSIDE FOR CORY'S GOVERNMENT

(By George Chaplin)

MANILA.—President Cory Aquino still has a Joan of Arc image, but one of her cabinet officers is creating big problems for her in the provinces and towns scattered across the Philippines' 7,100 islands.

Understandably, she and her associates want to dismantle the old Marcos political network throughout the country. During her election campaign she pledged to do this "with the zeal of a crusading housewife let loose in a den of world-class thieves."

But her minister for local government, Aquilino Pimentel, has started replacing the thousands of provincial and municipal officials—governors and mayors, then down to town councilmen and barrio chiefs—with an overly heavy hand.

He is widely accused of operating by whim and caprice, and with an eye to his own political future by building a personal base.

In a recent chat with journalists, Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile said field reports from the military indicate that purging elected officials and replacing them in many instances with less qualified people is creating "a law and order problem."

Aquino does not want to hold local elections until there's a new constitution, which should be written this summer by a presidentially appointed commission and submitted to a nationwide plebiscite.

Also there's the feeling that, before any elections, the registration rolls need to be purged of the names of non-existent voters. If this is not done, the concern is that Marcos people will be fraudulently returned to office.

But meanwhile, observes Mark Fineman of the Los Angeles Times who is based here, "Local government in virtually every city, town and village . . . has ground to a standstill."

He quotes Pimentel's defense: "It is important that we remove these people whose sole purpose was to perpetuate Marcos' power, and that we place people in local governments who believed in the programs of President Aquino from the time her presidential campaign began."

But, as Fineman observes, "in an island nation as fragmented and decentralized as the Philippines, a change in national leadership has far less impact than changes among local governors and mayors—positions equivalent to the traditional island tribal chiefs who controlled such vital daily concerns as jobs, food distribution and village development projects."

In some instances, incumbents have refused to leave their posts and there have been clashes between, their supporters and those of the newly named successors.

We were told that in Cebu there were two governors and two mayors and that while the military commander there treated them all with respect, he took orders from none.

The dispute over Pimentel's appointments of what are called OIC's—officers in charge—is not only evident on local scenes, where there have been fights, protest rallies, petition-signing and other activities—but within the Aquino cabinet itself.

Pimentel is president of the PDP-Laban party (Partido Democrating Philipinas), which is in a coalition with UNIDO (the United Nationalist Democratic Organization) headed by Vice President/Foreign Minister Salvador Laurel. Yet, the complaint goes, the vast majority of appointees are from PDP/Laban. UNIDO's secretary general, Rene Espina, says local residents are "being saddled with people who had either lost in the last elections or are totally unknown to them."

Even supporters of Pimentel acknowledge that there has been far too little consultation with local people before appointments are made. One observer told us that because there are so many posts to be filled. Pimentel has simply relied on hasty recommendations from friends and associates.

Espina contends that an indiscriminate choice of officials and the resultant tumult is giving the Communist Party and its New People's Army additional ammunition in its fight against the government.

The Daily Inquirer, in an editorial, said that the controversy "goes much deeper than the mere jockeying for power between the PDP-Laban and the UNIDO.

"The partisan competition between the two Aquino camps. Pimentel should know by now, is just one aspect of the problem. At the grassroots level especially, politics in this country tends to take on a cult-ish dimension. Local constituencies are, therefore, wary to accept the leadership of anyone—no matter how well recommended by the Ministry for Local Government—they know little or nothing of.

"Popular resentment is heightened by the fact that they had not voted these OICs into office. As a former popular mayor of Cagayan de Oro City, whose citizens took to the streets time and again to support his episodal brushes with the Marcos government, Pimentel should have known better."

Pimentel, of course, is not without those who feel he is doing what is necessary. A Manila Times columnist, Lito Monico Lorenzana, contends that provincial governors and mayors "were placed in office in 1980 through the manipulated vote of Marcos' 'one-party regime.'"

And, he continues, "acting as the dictator's surrogates, local officials established their own family dynastics along the model of the (Marcoses). As much as Marcos and his wife Imelda made the Philippines their kingdom, local executives turned cities and towns into their own fiefdoms.

"In the Metro Manila area, for example, the various city and town mayors presided as overlords on the order of Marcos' one-man rule, keeping the leverage of power for their families and cronies.

"They had their sons overseeing all juicy licensing and law enforcement functions or had them rampaging all over town as lords of vice and violence.

"Naturally those Metro Manila mayors and all their ilk throughout the country had to get walking papers in the general sweep designed to dismantle the old regime.

"So why all the beef when Minister Pimentel took it upon himself to sanitize the local units of the Marcos apparatus?"

The columnist said the six-year tenure of the officials ran out March 3 and on that day they should have stepped down to yield "to the people's will resoundingly articulated" in the February revolution.

The furor is more over the perception of Pimentel's politicking and questionable judgment rather than his basic integrity. He's a man who openly organized resistance to Marcos and was imprisoned several times for "inciting rebellion."

President Aquino, in an effort to defuse widespread controversy, has named a board of arbitration to review disputed appointments. It consists of Vice President Laurel, Political Affairs Minister Antonio Cuenco and Pimentel.

During an interview, Laurel was asked for his reaction.

He told us Pimentel was rocking the boat, that some incumbents were being replaced by people who were less popular or even undesirable. He suggested that all incumbent elected officials be considered first, if they're good administrators. But, on the other hand, if they're scoundrels, then they should be charged and replaced—and the next in line should be considered.

In another interview we asked Defense Minister Enrile for his views.

He replied:

With the new regime there's desire to get rid of the oppressive structure of the Marcos era, so Officers in Charge are being appointed. Many are said to be okay, but some are unwanted, and said to be of questionable judgment.

When there's an election (now seen between November and next February) I'm sure many (of those displaced) will come back.

Incumbents have in their favor, aside from the fact of having been elected, a legislative provision that they will remain until successors are elected and qualified.

There is a tendency to loosen up political stability of local government units, thus causing some national instability. I've submitted my view to the president. But since the fact is accomplished, the question is how to correct situations where some people are losing face.

Q: Is Aquino agreeing that there's a problem?

A: Yes, because she's getting the same feeling from different sources.

"SORTING OUT SANITY FROM THE MONSTROUS MADNESS"

(By George Chaplin)

MANILA.—The bloodless revolution of last February, while it ousted Marcos and restored freedom, is not finished, says Vice President/Foreign Minister Salvador Laurel.

"We have not yet achieved political stability so we're in no position to begin to achieve economic recovery. You don't talk about what to cook for lunch when the house is on fire. So let us not be over-confident that everything is all right."

In an interview, Laurel harks back to his April 19 speech to alumni of the University of the Philippines. There, he spoke of "the discontent, the impatience, the confusion and the tumult that still reverberates across the land," and cautioned that the "unfinished revolution" could "still take us to one of three possible directions."

One would be a swing to the extreme right, with a military coup, a violent takeover if the new government were to be perceived as "just as corrupt or as hopelessly ineffective" as the Marcos regime it supplanted.

A second possibility would be a swing to the extreme left, which would mean "a communist takeover, perhaps more violent and horrifying." This could result if people sensed "that the new government has failed to address (their) legitimate needs and grievances and gives them no hope of a better life."

Or, the third direction, would be "this government (which) by the grace of God may succeed, causing the tremors and aftershocks (of the revolution) to settle down and cease, allowing the return of normalcy and stability, so that economic recovery can begin and our people can start to work out a brighter, more secure tomorrow."

This course, he stressed, ironically may be the hardest to take "because it demands from us the highest measure of courage, determination, commitment, patience and sacrifice."

Now, after "trying to sort out sanity from the monstrous madness, the wanton waste, the staggering indebtedness, and the unmitigated corruption of the Marcos regime, we realize that we must wage a new war if we are to win completely our people's liberation."

The first order of business is to get a new constitution, which he feels can be drafted by a soon-to-be-named commission before the end of August and submitted to the people in a plebiscite in the fall.

The next step would be a call for elections for Parliament and provincial and local offices, with a campaign of 45 to 60 days.

Q: What about the feeling of some people that the elections probably can't be held before next January or February, because voter rolls have to be purged?

A: I don't believe we need too much to purge the voters' list. Many are padded, but it's not an insurmountable problem. This government is hellbent on having clean elections.

It can be done in November, as a transition bridge from a provisional government to full democracy.

Q: What about competition between the parties in the coalition?

A: I proposed to the president the unification of all political groups into a single party. It could be a merger or coalition, so we don't have to be jockeying for position. I submitted this position weeks ago. The president will have to decide. It's not up to Pimentel.

(This reference was to the resistance to a merger by the Minister of Local Government Aquilino Pimentel, who says he favors the idea of coalition.

(Pimentel, who heads the PDP/Laban Party as against Laurel's UNIDO, says a "merger means that an independent group like ours cannot retain its identity and its ideology and will be swallowed up by other parties.")

We asked Laurel about his relations with President Aquino.

A: I give her advice when I think I should. For instance, when going to Bali for the meeting with President Reagan, I told her what would be taking place so she could proceed intelligently.

Q: She is new to politics. You and others are politically experlienced. Is there dissension?

A: President Aquino is realistic in that respect. She delegates authority to cabinet members and allows them to work to their best.

Q: What of the U.S. bases?

A: Right now they are not in jeopardy. The government will respect the agreement until 1991 and after that all options are open depending on the world situation. We are open-minded.

My personal position is that if the U.S. is definitely interested in extending the term of the bases, there will be an agreement. One year's advance notice is required. If the Philippines responds favorably, panels from both countries will meet and negotiate a new pact starting from scratch. There were 25 unresolved issues in the 1947 agreement.

My view is that any such agreement should go to the people for a plebiscite. That's not normal, but this has been a subject of ongoing debate the last 39 years. Should the people say yes, that will end all debate and be conducive to more stable relations. If they say no, the U.S. would also have to bow to the will of the people.

The question of Philippines defense will of course be taken into consideration, as will overall U.S.-Philippines relations, which are now definitely stronger and which I expect to further improve.

Q: What about Marcos?

A: We want Marcos to stay for a while in the United States until our country is more fully stabilized.

(Laurel said that in Bali he'd told President Reagan that President Aquino wanted Marcos where U.S. court cases could be pursued against him in Manila's efforts to get back plunderered wealth, and that if he went to a third country he could get his hands on money he took and employ it to destabilize the government here.

(That, said Laurel, is why they have lifted his passport. Secretary of State Shultz has suggested that the passport should be returned, the intimation being that Marcos is proving an embarrassment to the U.S. and Washington would like to see him go elsewhere.)

Q: What about retrieving what Marcos took?

A: A great deal depends on the cooperation of the U.S. and other countries where properties are being kept. If, for example, the U.S. and Switzerland cooperated, within a short time we should be able to get a substantial portion of it.

Q: What about relations with China and the Soviet Union?

A: We don't have much contact with them. We are a small developing country and our foreign policy is to make no enemy if we can make a friend.

Q: Do you have a message for the Filipinos in Hawaii?

A: I hope you'll make Marcos comfortable so he'll stay there longer.

TRIBUTE TO COL. FRED F.Y. PANG, USAF

HON. LES ASPIN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, on October 1, Col. Fred Pang, U.S. Air Force, Director of Compensation, Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Force Management and Personnel, will retire after 30 years of distinguished military service. His retirement will create a vacuum, not only in the Office of the Secretary of Defense but throughout the uniformed services, in other agencies of the executive branch, and in the Congress.

Colonel Pang has mastered the complexities of both of the key elements affecting human resources: compensation and personnel management. He has become the focal point in the Department of Defense for all issues that have a major impact on the management of military personnel. He is the focal point not because he is assigned to key positions; on the contrary, he has been assigned to these positions and been given two of the most difficult tasks addressed in the past decade because of his unquestioned expertise and his innate ability to lead.

He has demonstrated his ability to understand and explain the most complex aspects of military personnel and compensation. Understanding and explaining the status quo, however, would not by itself be remarkable. Colonel Pang has traveled far beyond the status quo. He has played the major role in resolving two of the most difficult legislative problems we have faced in a decade: changes to the Defense officer personnel management system and changes to the military retirement system.

In each case, Fred Pang was instrumental in defining the compromise—both within the Department and between the Department and the Congress—in the context of several diametrically opposed and strongly held positions. He has been able to cut through the dogmatic folklore that surrounds many of the important issues affecting military personnel, to see the ramifications of various courses of action—as well as inaction—and to develop a compromise solution that maintains the elements important to each of the participants, that results in a program based on sound policy considerations and, most importantly, that improves the system that governs the men and women who serve in the Armed Forces.

As chairman of the Military Personnel and Compensation Subcommittee, I understand the immense task inherent in coming to grips with the problems in this area. Colonel Pang has described and defended the Department's position consistently and forcefully throughout the years. This has not hampered him, however, from providing the committee with otherwise unavailable assistance and expertise, without which we could not have fully understood the impact of our decisions. This willingness to address alternatives, "to see the other side," is what has made Colonel Pang one of the most influential forces in the field of military personnel and compensation legislation. He has rightfully earned the respect of his subordinates, his peers and his superiors as a result of his aggressive, intellectual and purposeful leadership in this area.

Few of us can point to specific accomplishments that survive the test of time. Colonel Pang has left a well-defined trail of such accomplishments. But accomplishments alone do not reflect the full measure of Fred Pang's influence. More important is the impact that these individual accomplishments have on the status of the U.S. military personnel.

Today, the quality of military personnel is the best it has ever been. Today, serious problems in the personnel arena are at the lowest point they have ever been. Today, the military personnel and compensation system stands at a pinnacle.

This is no coincidence, Mr. Speaker. I have no doubt in my mind that the critical factor in this achievement has been the collective effort of Col. Fred Pang and the people he has led.

TRIBUTE TO COL. FRED F.Y. PANG, USAF

HON. BILL NICHOLS

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer a tribute to a man who has served his country long and faithfully during a distinguished military career. Col. Fred Pang, U.S. Air Force, Director of Compensation, Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Force Management and Personnel, is an officer who could well serve as an example of the ideal leader in any text on leadership. His approach is low key, but it is effective. He has the rare ability to grasp the solution to the most complex problems and to direct his efforts and the efforts of those around him toward the achievement of the desired ends.

No where has that ability been better demonstrated than in the consideration of the Defense Officer Personnel Management Act [DOPMA]. This legislation made the most substantial change in the officer personnel management system in over 40 years. That the problem was difficult was demonstrated by the inability to reach a compromise within the Department of Defense and between the Department and the Congress on an issue that affects the very livelihood of 300,000 military officers. For over 4 years, DOPMA languished in a legislative no-man's land. And then Colonel Pang arrived on the scene. He was able to look at the problem objectively and to suggest compromises that were finally adopted by all the parties involved. In no other area has public policy benefited more from the influence of Col. Fred Pang. DOPMA is and will remain a tangible monument to his leadership.

The measure of leadership is not limited to an individual's singular accomplishments, however, but extends more broadly to the influence the individual has on the environment within which he works. As the former chairman of the Military Personnel and Compensation Subcommittee, I know of the influence Fred Pang has had on his environment.

No more knowledgeable individual has ever assisted the subcommittee. Expertise is a fundamental requirement for a good leader; Fred Pang has, from this perspective, rightfully earned the admiration of all with whom he has worked. He is a font of knowledge, and his advice is sought by the military services, the other uniformed services, the Office of the Secretary of Defense, the Office of Management and Budget, and the committees of Congress.

His influence on those he has advised has been immense because Colonel Pang has credibility. He has been willing to explore all sides of an issue, not just to limit his discussion to the Department's position. More importantly, Colonel Pang has been able to give account to congressional constraints or overall objectives that may differ from those held by the Department and offer constructive suggestions within the congressional framework. This charactertistic, perhaps more than any other, has resulted in his ability to shape policy in a direction that is most beneficial to the military personnel whose well-being he has chosen to protect and enhance as his primary objective. He does not have to indicate that this is his primary objective. His actions, his accomplishments, and his direction convince all those with whom he has worked that such is the case.

Mr. Speaker, although we in the Congress will miss the counsel of Fred Pang, the loss will be greatest within the Department of Defense. No one has better represented the Department or its position. No one has achieved legislative solutions more favorable to the military personnel he has represented. Col. Fred Pang is a true leader and a man who will be sorely missed as he retires.

THE DEFENSE BUILDUP

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, June 25, 1986, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

THE DEFENSE BUILDUP

The 1981-1986 defense build-up cost almost $1 trillion, and current plans call for a second five-year build-up of over $1.8 trillion. More than 80% of those responding to my recent Ninth District questionnaire felt that much of the money going for the recent build-up has been wasted. Hoosiers express to me considerable skepticism about defense spending. Here are some of the questions asked and my responses:

Question. Has there been a massive Soviet build-up in the last decade?

Answer. According to recent estimates by the Central Intelligence Agency and the Defense Intelligence Agency, overall Soviet military spending has increased some 27% since 1974. Soviet spending on weapons increased by 11-18%. During the same period, overall U.S. military spending grew 52%, and U.S. weapons spending increased by 113%. As for future Soviet spending, the CIA and DIA found that, rather than preparing for a military build-up, Gorbachev may be turning his attention to the Soviet economy.

Question. Were U.S. military forces severely underfunded in the 1970s?

Answer. There is no convincing evidence of a "decade of neglect". Every major conventional defense program currently in place, and almost all nuclear systems—the B1 bomber, MX missile, and Trident submarine—were researched and developed in the 1970s. During that period, the U.S. deployed more strategic warheads than the Soviets; increased the number of U.S. strategic weapons from around 4,000 in 1970 to 9,500 in 1980; developed air-, sea-, and ground-launched cruise missiles; improved the accuracy of the land-based (Minuteman) missile force; and fitted intercontinental missiles with multiple warheads.

Question. Is the Soviet Union's military arsenal superior to the U.S. arsenal?

Answer. The two superpowers have different military needs. As President Eisenhower said, "We need what we need, not what the Russians happen to have." The Soviet Union must spend heavily to protect its long border with China, while the United States faces no comparable border threat. According to the CIA and the Pentagon, some 15-20% of all Soviet military spending is directed toward China. In conventional weapons, the Soviets lead in the quantity of weapons, but U.S. weapons are technologically superior. In nuclear weapons, both sides are basically even. The Soviets have a commanding lead in land-based missiles, but the U.S. has superior bomber and submarine forces. In addition, the U.S. has strong, economically independent allies, while the Soviets' allies are largely economically dependent on the Soviet Union and are generally considered to be unreliable in the event of war. For the last 20 years, the NATO allies have outspent the Warsaw Pact every year.

Question. To negotiate real arms reductions with the Soviets, is it necessary for the U.S. first to build up its military forces?

Answer. Despite the largest peacetime build-up in U.S. history, the U.S. and the Soviets have failed to negotiate a single arms reduction agreement in over six years. In fact, the history of arms talks shows little correlation between arms negotiations and the level of defense spending. Most of the major U.S.-Soviet arms agreements were reached during periods in which U.S. military budgets were either declining in real terms or growing only modestly. Rather than encouraging arms control, increases in defense spending often create larger domestic constituencies that oppose cuts. The proposed Strategic Defense Initiative, for example, which the Pentagon hails as the bargaining chip that brought the Soviets back to the negotiating table, is itself non-negotiable and is already creating a network of supporters including researchers and contractors.

Question. Is it possible to reduce defense spending without jeopardizing national security?

Answer. The build-up has created a huge backlog of funds approved by Congress, but not yet spent by the Pentagon—some $300 billion by 1987. A broad range of defense analysts believes that it is possible to halt the growth in the defense budget and maintain a strong defense capability. They claim that large savings can be achieved by eliminating ineffective and duplicative programs, slowing the pace of weapons procurement, deferring construction, stripping inflationary padding, and re-estimating costs. At the same time, continued funding would be provided for readiness and most operations and maintenance accounts.

Question. Can the Pentagon manage a $1-2 trillion five-year budget effectively?

Answer. Many defense analysts agree that the rate of spending has been too fast to ensure proper cost control and effective management. They worry that huge budget increases have virtually eliminated any pressure on the Pentagon to develop a clear and consistent strategy, eliminate unecessary weapons systems, or conduct adequate testing before production. As an example, average unit costs of major weapons systems have risen by over one-third, although the Pentagon had argued that the faster rate of spending would decrease unit costs. Without doubt we are engaged in a military "spend-up"; it is much less clear that it is a build-up. The Congressional Budget Office found that, when compared to the previous four years, the Pentagon paid 91% more to buy only 6% more missiles; paid 148% more for only 30% more tanks; and spent 75% more for only 9% more aircraft. A former senior advisor to six Defense Secretaries also notes that there is great duplication in the strategic nuclear forces. For example, the Pentagon supports the air-launched cruise missile, the B-1B bomber, an advanced cruise missile, and the Stealth bomber—all of which have very similar missions against Soviet air defenses.

Question. Is the Pentagon receiving its fair share of federal tax revenues?

Answer. According to several recent studies, about 50 cents of every federal income tax dollar paid by individuals goes for military-related programs. That translates into an annual military tax bill of $1500—2000 for many single taxpayers and $3000-4000 or more for two-income families.

NORWOOD HONORED AS "NEIGHBORHOOD OF THE YEAR"

HON. BEN ERDREICH

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. ERDREICH. Mr. Speaker, I have often talked with pride about the many neighborhoods that make up Birmingham, AL. Birmingham has been cited as having one of the top citizen participation programs in the country, and the residents of the city's 95 neighborhoods have contributed greatly both to the economic and cultural vitality that makes Birmingham a great place to live, work, and raise families.

I would like to take a few moments to tell my colleagues in the House about one particular neighborhood in Birmingham that has received national recognition. The Norwood Neighborhood Association was recently named "Neighborhood of the Year" at the Neighborhoods, USA Conference held in St. Paul, MN.

Neighborhoods, USA is a network organization representing 61 cities across the country. Each year model neighborhood projects submit presentations in different categories to be judged on criteria including self-help capacity, ability of organized groups and resources. A panel of distinguished jurors select special projects for recognition.

The Norwood Neighborhood Association's presentation focused on the networking of several groups to assist with the social needs of the neighborhood's residents. During the past year, Norwood has opened a community center operated by neighborhood volunteers, and worked closely with the new North Central Middle School. The neighborhood has established other programs for youth, focusing on drug prevention education, graduation activities, an official youth association, and athletic programs. The Norwood Neighborhood Association was also involved with the city of Birmingham in a "Paint for Pride" program as well as targeting all homes close to Norwood Boulevard for housing improvements. Over 80 people and organizations were cited for their work in improving life in Norwood.

Other neighborhood associations in Birmingham also received recognition for their community participation. The North Titusville Neighborhood Association was cited for their work in housing and community development projects, and Jefferson County was also cited for its work in the Rosedale community.

I am certain my colleagues are aware of the vital importance that strong citizen participation plays in the successful operation of programs to enhance and improve our neighborhoods. I would like to congratulate the Norwood Neighborhood Association for being named "Neighborhood of the Year", and commend all of the neighborhood associations in Birmingham for their efforts to make their communities and the city of Birmingham the best they can be.

HARD TRUTHS OF LEN BIAS' CASE

HON. BUD SHUSTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw my colleague's attention to the following article by the distinguished columnist Haynes Johnson which appeared in today's edition of the Washington Post.

HARD TRUTHS OF LEN BIAS' CASE

In one of the countless commentaries on the death of Len Bias, superstar basketball player and local hero, the commentator recalled a W.H. Auden poem about the tragedy of an athlete dying young.

A better analogy exists in the tale of Daedalus and Icarus, one of those stories of gods and heroes from the ancient world of the Greeks, as reprinted in Bulfinch's "Mythology":

"Icarus, my son, I charge you to keep at a moderate height, for if you fly too low the damp will clog your wings, and if too high the heat will melt them. Keep near me and you will be safe."

Daedalus fitted the marvelous, intricate wings he had fashioned with thread and wax and feathers to his son's shoulders, kissed him, "not knowing it was for the last time," then flew off, encouraging Icarus to follow. As they flew above the earth, a shepherd stopped his work to watch, "astonished at the sight, and thinking they were gods who could thus cleave the air."

The fable proceeds to its tragic, preordained ending:

"The boy, exulting in his career, began to leave the guidance of his companion and soar upward as if to reach heaven. The nearness of the blazing sun softened the wax which held the feathers together and they came off. He fluttered with his arms but no feathers remained to hold the air. While his mouth uttered cries to his father it was submerged in the blue waters of the sea . . . ."

Whichever of the versions you prefer, the modern or the ancient, the Bias story was immediately treated as another near-mythical tale of tragedy: the godlike young athlete untimely taken as he is about to soar toward the sun. Initial accounts of his death reinforced these pleasant illusions: he was a perfect young man, a poet, a churchgoer, an inspiration and model for other youths and his college teammates.

It is no disservice to Bias to suggest that his story and example provide lessons that lie in harsh reality, not myth. Less than a week after his sudden death, hardly anyone connected with it looks good—not the University of Maryland, his teammates, the college athletic establishment, the police. It is hard to escape the conclusion that the truth is the lat thing they seem to have wished to face.

In his last semester, Bias was enrolled in five courses and passed none. He withdrew from two and failed three others. What does this say about scholastic standards there and the way superstar athletes are treated? The reality, of course, is that, at Maryland and other major institutions, star athletes are treated as commercial commodities, not students.

His teammates have drawn a veil of silence over the episode, abetted, it appears by their coach, who reportedly advised them how to respond to questions about the case. More disturbing is that those in the dormitory where Bias died have refused to be interviewed about what really happened there.

Inexplicably, even police accepted that situation, maintaining that they cannot question those young men because their attorneys will not permit it. This occurred although police immediately judged the death "suspicious," Bias was reported to have ingested cocaine, a "white substance" was found in his car and a possible criminal investigation was under way. Given these facts and yesterday's official finding that he died of "cocaine intoxication," why were those who refused to cooperate with the official investigation not held as material witnesses until statements were taken?

None of these facts detracts from the tragedy; they reinforce it. They cry out for the truth about his case to be known and its larger lessons understood by the widest possible audience. If and when that is done, Bias undoubtedly will be seen not as unique but as a victim of circumstances beyond his making and control.

Does anyone want to grapple with that greater meaning? Ironically, the poet Auden concluded in the negative when he addressed that question and related it to the ancient tale of the boy who flew too high:

Brueghhel's Icarus, for instance; how everything turns away
Quite leisurely from the disaster; the ploughman may Have heard the splash, the forsaken cry,
But for him it was not an important failure; the sun shone
As it had to on the white legs disappearing in the green
Water; and the expensive delicate ship that must have seen
Something amazing; a boy falling out of the sky,
Had somewhere to get to and sailed calmly on

TRIBUTE TO COL. FRED F.Y. PANG, USAF

HON. ELWOOD HILLIS

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. HILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I cannot let the occasion of the retirement of Col. Fred Pang, U.S. Air Force, Director of Compensation, Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Force Management and Personnel, pass without acknowledging his outstanding contributions.

As the ranking Republican member on the Military Personnel and Compensation Subcommittee, I have seen the remarkable progress made in the field of military personnel and compensation in recent years. Colonel Pang has been intimately associated with the most concentrated confluence of changes affecting the military personnel and compensation system. Certain programs stand in continuing testimony to the impact he has had. Few leaders can look back over their careers and see the impact they have had. The Defense Officer Personnel Management Act and the soon to be enacted changes to the military retirement system are among the programs to which Fred Pang will always be able to point with pride.

Both programs required herculean efforts to reach fruition. Less substantial changes would have been easy and less than satisfactory changes would have required little effort. But that is not Fred Pang's way and that is not the way that results in programs that will stand the test of time and changing circumstances.

The Defense Officer Personnel Management Act [DOPMA] has already stood the test. I am firmly convinced that the officer personnel management system is more equitable, more efficient and more flexible as a result of the change 5 years ago, and I am not aware of anyone who would disagree. The key measure of success is how it is being received by those to whom it applies and here again the evidence indicates overwhelming success. This outcome is a direct result of the leadership of Colonel Pang.

The changes to the military retirement system were embroiled in perhaps the most emotional environment of any change ever made to the military personnel and compensation system. In this kind of an environment, clear understandings of important factors and critical decisions are difficult to make. The counsel of Colonel Pang provided the framework within which to make good decisions. The retirement system for new entrants was not desired by the Department of Defense, but future service members will be under a sensible and effective system—a result, I believe, that can be directly attributed to the quiet, but effective, diplomacy of Fred Pang.

These programs and many others will continue to serve as the foundation for military personnel and compensation for years to come. They will serve as the models for efficient and effective programs.

Colonel Pang has assisted the committee innumerable times. Each time we have benefited from the help. We did not always agree, because we held different objectives at times; but we always understood the ramifications of our decisions better as a result of Fred Pang's help. And the military personnel and compensation system is, today, significantly better for it.

However, the ultimate reward for Fred Pang for his years of dedicated and distinguished service is the mark he has left on service members. That is the bottom line; that is the final measure of success. Service members are better off today than they have ever been. Their well-being has been the singular, overriding concern of Colonel Pang; and their well-being could not have been in more capable hands.

Few service members know Colonel Pang; not many recognize the debt of gratitude they owe him. He is an unsung hero, and an untiring and faithful public servant. His retirement highlights an era of enlightened leadership that will be extremely difficult to maintain.

Mr. Speaker, we wish Col. Freg Pang the best in the future; he has unquestionably and unselfishly given all military personnel his best in the past.

DEATH BY HANDGUNS: A NATIONAL INSANITY

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, each year, about 10,000 Americans are killed by handguns. If these deaths were caused by a disease, Congress would probably have the National Institutes of Health looking for a cure. Rock musicians would hold aid concerts and movie and television stars would appear on telethons to raise research funds and to help the victims.

But death by handgun is not a disease. NIH is working on other problems, and there have been no concerts or telethons. About all that has happened in recent months has been passage of the McClure-Volkmer bill which actually weakens Federal firearms laws and makes it easier for criminals to obtain handguns.

A comparison of statistics on handgun deaths among several nations shows the extent of our problem: Great Britain, 4;

Canada, 6; Japan, 92; West German, 17; United States, 9,800. Clearly, it is time to do something about this insanity.

In south Florida, Dr. Lawrence Brant has launched a special effort to control handguns. Dr. Brant's wife Shirley, a remarkable, committed woman of many talents, was cruelly murdered this month by a robber armed with a handgun. In her memory, and in an effort to prevent such tragedies from recurring in our community, Dr. Brant established the Shirley Brant Memorial Fund Against Handgun Crime.

I would like to share with my colleagues a recent newspaper story about this matter:

[From the Miami Herald, June 19, 1986]

OUTRAGED, WIDOWER PUSHES FOR GUN CONTROL

(By Charles Whited)

In the aftermath of it Wednesday, friends still came in hushed, respectful clusters to the comfortable family home in North Miami Beach. In the Jewish tradition, the wall-length mirrors were covered with white paper for the time of grieving.

Dr. Lawrence I. Brant, the dentist, looked ashen and rumpled, his deep outrage putting a cutting edge to grief. Even now, he could not believe that this could happen to them.

"It always happens to someone else," he said. To calm himself, he sat at the work processor and wrote about her, about Shirley and what she had meant to him, and this sudden disaster that had ended it all.

"Inwardly and outwardly, you feel as if it never happened," he wrote. "You feel as if you're acting out a part in a play and expect your beloved to walk into the room in the next moment."

But she didn't, of course. And she wouldn't. Shirley Brant, mother of four grown children, blond and remarkably attractive at 49, former professional singer and model turned real estate agent, family matriarch and tireless activist for causes that stirred her, was dead and buried. . . .

Shot by a would-be robber in her North Miami Beach real estate office.

Six hundred people went to her funeral.

Now, five days after the murder, mild-mannered dentist Lawrence Brant was marshaling a campaign in his wife's memory, hoping to curb the proliferation of handguns in a Dade County where violent crime is running amok.

Something, he said, has got to be done to stop the slaughter of the gun control referendum to force tougher laws on the sale and possession of handguns.

"There is no reason why our community should have all these people running around loose with handguns," He said. "Other civilized countries have laws restricting the possession of small arms by citizens, while preserving their rights to own properly registered guns for hunting and sport.

"My rights are being violated when I cannot walk the streets of my community in safety, when we must live in fear, when my wife can't work in her place of business . . . We are middle-class people. We work, we pay the bills. And yet we look away; we don't relate violence to ourselves."

To finance the effort, Brant has established the Shirley Brant Memorial Fund against Handgun Crime. Donations should be sent to the fund at Universal National Bank, 17701 Biscayne Blvd., North Miami Beach, Fla. 33160.

Shirley Brant would have approved.

After 31 years of marriage, she was the light of her family's life and a vigorous worker for causes.

She inspired family activism for captive Soviet Jews, had been to Russia with her husband and once even staged a hunger strike in their behalf.

She worked for Jewish charities; the City of Hope, a cancer hospital in California; the Jewish Federation; and Beth Torah congregation. She was on the parents' board of Alexander Muss High School in Israel.

"Everything she did," said a close family friend, "she did well."

In a lighter mood, Shirley Brant still sang for bar mitzvahs and special occasions and liked to dabble in horoscopes and fortune telling. The stars told her she would live to be 80.

To help ease her husband's burden of financing a family of college-educated youngsters, she had launched her own real estate company with eldest son Benjamin, 29, as a partner. She was licensed as a commerical real estate broker.

Last Friday, as she talked with a client on the telephone in the firms' upstairs office at 16375 NE 18th Ave., two men came in off the street, apparently intent on stealing. One of them tried to take a secretary's purse.

The client on the phone heard Shirley Brant shout "Don't shoot?"

She was shot in the face with a small-caliber handgun. Police theorized it was a cheap, easily obtainable Saturday Night Special. The men fled empty-handed.

Thirty minutes later, at about 4:30 p.m., Lawrence Brant called his wife's number at the office. There were many things to discuss. They were having 70 people in for dinner on Saturday evening, to celebrate.

A son, Steven, 26, had just graduated from medical school at the University of Florida. Son Robert, 18, was to graduate a week later from North Miami Beach Senior High. A cousin, Edward Blumenthal, would be married on Sunday. Shirley's 50th birthday was coming up, on Saturday, June 21.

A policeman came on the line. He told the dentist that his wife had been shot and taken to Parkway General Hospital trauma center.

"I asked, 'How is she?'" Brant recalled. "He said they didn't know. I knew, then. When you're not told anything, it's very bad."

One of Brant's dental partners drove him to Parkway. A doctor told him his wife was dead.

Lawrence Brant's gun control campaign came as an afterthought. Mourners kept asking what they could do in Shirley's memory. The senseless crime, and their terrible loss, lay like an open wound.

The talk naturally turned to guns. "The only way you're going to get meaningful gun control is from the bottom up," politically knowledgeable friends told Brant. "You're not going to get it at the state level."

Steven delivered a eulogy at his mother's funeral. In it, he said, "I don't think I should be afraid to live in my own community, to be afraid to walk the street or greet somebody at my office or in my home. We made this community. We built this community. We have to do something to make it safe again."

Ironically, we spend hundreds of billions of dollars on all kinds of sophisticated nuclear weapons to make us safe from the Soviets when our citizens face a more immediate threat to their safety in their own communities. Just one percent of the amount we are spending on the MX missile and the Strategic Defense Initiative would go far toward helping our police, prosecutors and penal authorities protect us from the very real danger posed by criminals.

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO MR. GORMAN BROWN

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to Gorman Brown, the first employee to retire from KVIE/Channel 6 in Sacramento. KVIE/Channel 6 signed on the air in 1959 and Gorman has been instrumental in its initial and continued success. He retires as the most senior employee of KVIE/Channel 6 on June 30, 1986.

Gorman joined KVIE/Channel 6 in December 1958, as a transmission supervisor. In January of 1960, he was awarded the position of chief engineer for the station. He retires as the special projects engineer, a post he had held since July 1, 1979.

KVIE/Channel 6, Sacramento's only public television station, has consistently provided Sacramento residents with interesting and informative programming. This excellence in broadcasting, and the station's popularity and longevity, is largely a result of Gorman's efforts.

Mr. Speaker and my distinguished colleagues, please join me in extending warmest congratulations to Mr. Gorman Brown for his 28 years of loyal and dedicated service. His contributions to the continued success of public television in Sacramento will always be remembered. We wish Gorman a happy and satisfying retirement.

HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSE IN PARAGUAY

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, yesterday exiled Paraguayan political leader, Domingo Laino attempted to return to his home in Asuncion. He was accompanied by former U.S. Ambassador Robert White and a Uruguayan legislator Roberto Asiain. Not only was Mr. Laino denied entry into Paraguay, he was also brutally beaten by the Paraguayan police. Ambassador White and Mr. Asiain were also struck by the police.

This kind of behavior is inexcusable. It is a blatant disregard for human rights. If Paraguay is to have a future beyond General Stroessner, then it must begin to open up the political process. Our Ambassador to Paraguay, Clyde Taylor, has been doing a fine job trying to carry on a dialog with opposition parties in Paraguay. I certainly hope that he and the State Department will complain in no uncertain terms about the treatment of Mr. Laino, Ambassador White, and Mr. Asiain.

I am inserting in the RECORD an article on this incident from today's Washington Post.

POLICE BEAT PARAGUAYAN, EX-U.S. ENVOY

ASUNCION, PARAGUAY, June 24.—Paraguayan police beat up exiled opposition leader Domingo Laino and former U.S. ambassador Robert White, who was escorting him off a plane here today on his fifth attempt to return home, witnesses said.

"Laino fell to the floor and even then he was subjected to a brutal beating. I think he had two broken ribs," Roberto Asiain, a Uruguayan legislator also accompanying the exile on his return, told reporters at the airport.

Laino later reboarded the plane that had brought him to Paraguay, and returned to Montevideo, the Uruguayan capital. He has been living in exile in Argentina.

White, who served as former president Jimmy Carter's ambassador to Paraguay and to El Salvador, flew with Laino from Montevideo as the exile tried to defy a ban imposed by the 32-year-old military government of President Alfredo Stroessner.

"When [Laino] started coming out of the plane, he was savagely beaten by plainclothes police with truncheons," White said. "Deputy Asiain and myself were also beaten."

White, 59, added that he thought he and Asiain could have been struck in the confusion rather than on purpose.

"It was evident that Laino was the one they meant to hurt," said White, who left his El Salvador post in 1981, soon after President Reagan took office and has been a vocal critic of U.S. policy in Latin America since. "This is an open violation of human rights," he said of the airport attack.

Police did not comment on the incident.

[In Washington, Lindsay Mattison, director of the International Center for Development Policy, which White heads, said the escort was organized to focus attention on Laino as a "foreign leader and a democrat" and to protect his attempted return.

[The center also organized a delegation to accompany South Korean opposition leader Kim Dae Jung on his return to Seoul last year, to prevent an attack such as that in which exiled Philippine opposition leader Benigno Aquino was slain when he returned to Manila in 1983.]

White said he would spend one or two days in Asuncion with the other members of Laino's party to meet local politicians and hold talks with the exile's wife, Rafaela.

Several Argentine and Uruguayan politicans and human rights activists also accompanied Laino today.

Laino is one of the leading opponents of the rightist government of Storessner.

The Boeing 737 of the Uruguayan state airline Pluna was met on its arrival here by a security cordon of a least 200 policemen around the airport.

Other passengers on the scheduled flight were allowed to disembark in the Paraguayan capital.

White said the group escorting Laino would lodge the appropriate complaints.

The attack on Laino came after growing antigovernment demonstrations and strikes in mid-March and April and an admission by Stroessner that there was dissent within his ruling Colorado Party.

After two rallies in March by the banned Radical Liberal Party, police broke up a rally by the Authentic Radical Liberal Party on March 28 and arrested its general secretary and other party leaders.

Police using whips, chains and machetes broke up another rally in April, and prevented thousands of supporters from entering the town.

Some reasons for the unrest have been traced to recession and to growing unemployment and inflation. Other factors are the recent return to democracy in neighboring Brazil and Argentina.

HAWAII LOOKS FORWARD TO ENHANCED TOURISM PROMOTION

HON. CECIL (CEC) HEFTEL

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, Hawaii's foremost industry is tourism. The tourism trade has provided great economic benefits to Hawaii and made important contributions to local Hawaiian culture, the national economy, and American life. The economic, social, and cultural welfare of Hawaii is largely dependent on tourism. In the State of Hawaii alone, over 176,000 jobs are generated by the tourism industry, one out of every five in the work force depends on tourism for his or her livelihood, and $5 billion were spent by visitors and added to the 1984 economy.

Because of its tremendous cultural and economic benefits, efforts to promote tourism are evident at Federal, State, and private levels. Most recently, in the private sector, the Hilton Hawaiian Village unveiled an $80 million master plan to move the complex into the 21st century. The first phase of the project will be finished in August and the rest of the renovation should be completed by the summer of 1987. The theme of the project is "Return to Paradise" and the plans include relocation and redesigning of various facilities currently on the "village" grounds. Most notable are guest room renovations to the three towers in the hotel, the relocation of several restaurants on the property to an oceanfront location, the refurbishing of the entire Mid-Pacific Confrence Center, and the construction of a new freeform design pool in a tropical setting.

This development is an exciting project for the Waikiki community and the entire State of Hawaii. It will surely add a new dimension to the tourism trade by providing a great overall meeting/resort destination in the Pacific. Hilton should be commended for its farsightedness and initiative to promote tourism in Hawaii.

SUPPORT FREEDOM OF RELIGION IN THE MILITARY

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support and urge my colleagues to support the Military Chaplains Faith Balance Act, legislation that would increase the number of priests and rabbis in the military services. The present imbalance denies the men and women of our Armed Forces the security and comfort that religion provides. In time of peace, it is still essential that those in the military have a chaplain of the same faith to turn to. Life in the military sometimes exacts huge sacrifices that religious faith is well-designed to deal with. This legislation would go far in making certain that our Nation's Armed Forces are spiritually prepared to go to war if that possibility should ever come about.

As evidence of its broad appeal, this bill has the support of many different religious and military organizations, such as the National Federation of Priests' Councils, the Jewish War Veterans of the U.S.A. and the American Ex-Prisoners of War, as well as strong bipartisan agreement in Congress. Only by taking action such as this can all Americans in the military enjoy freedom of religion in the fullest sense. Failure to address the serious shortage of priests and rabbis in the services will only have grave consequences on the recruitment of quality personnel to defend our country. Indeed, it would be a tragedy should Congress fail to take action on such an important piece of legislation.

REEXAMINE NATIONAL SECURITY PRIORITIES

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, naval power has played a vital role in the defense and security of the United States throughout our history. Without our ability to protect important sealanes, the United States would not be the economic and military power it is today.

Not only the Navy protects our shipping and sealanes, but the merchant marine complements the Navy in both peacetime and in times of crisis with its sealift capability. It is the merchant marine which has been neglected since the end of World War II while at the same time the Soviet Union has been rapidly building up its merchant marine fleet in preparation for any possible crises. Because of our neglect of our own fleet, we lack the necessary sealift capability to rearm our forces in times of crisis. We must rebuild our merchant marine, along with our Navy, to make sure we do not end up on the short end in the battle for the seas.

The accompanying article by Rear Adm. George Miller, U.S. Navy (retired), aptly illustrates the problems we face if we do not maintain our sealift and sea protection capabilities. I urge all my colleagues to read it closely.

[From the Washington Times, Apr. 25, 1986]

REEXAMINE NATIONAL SECURITY PRIORITIES, SAYS RETIRED ADMIRAL

(By George Miller, Rear Admiral, U.S. Navy (ret.))

One of the problems plaguing our national security seems to be that defense leaders have become so engrossed with big weapons that national strategy has suffered. Strategy is a procedure for attaining a goal, and to achieve a goal or objective requires an understanding of history, geography, and the opposition.

Naval historian Alfred Thayer Mahan counseled us to "understand the broad sweep of history." For example, Greece, Rome, and England achieved power through colonization of less-developed lands and shipping choke-points. They built navies to protect shipping lanes from competitors. In their later years, they became involved in overseas land wars, which bled away their human and material resources and hastened decline.

Napoleon said that "terrain is everything." Favorable geographic position is essential to global strategy, just as terrain is everything in land war.

The Soviet Union's drive for world domination includes particular interest in favorable geographic positions, such as shipping choke-points. As Soviet influence in these areas increases, U.S. access to them becomes more costly and less reliable.

Highly essential to successful strategy is understanding your competitor. You must know him so well that he cannot surprise you.

At the close of World War II, the Soviets undertook a comprehensive review of national security.

Heeding the lessons of history, the Soviets undertook a major naval and merchant shipbuilding program in the early 1950s. They have been "colonizing" the important shipping choke-points. For the first time in history, their defense-oriented "colonizing" and trade promotion are experiencing only half-hearted competition from Western nations—and no naval opposition.

The government of the United States, at the close of World War II, swept aside the experience of history, and in violation of its own Constitution, created a standing army. The Army and Air Force combined with the Navy and Marine Corps into a single, land-war bureaucracy. The U.S. merchant marine, which by law is necessary for national defense, has virtually disappeared. Consequently, the United States seems unable to act in its national interest except in land war, where each military service can have its "share" of the action and budget pie.

The constitutionality and indeed the relevance of the present U.S. national security arrangement need re-examination.

BOGGY CREEK AND FATHER JOE ZNOTAS

HON. J.J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, in a few days, we will be meeting in Austin with the Assistant Secretary of the Army to sign the final agreement between the Corps of Engineers and the city of Austin for the Boggy Creek flood control project. It has been more than 10 years since we started planning for this project, and if there is one man whom we all remember as being the driving force behind this project, it was Father Joe Znotas. It was Father Joe who called the early meetings, conferences, and rallies in support of this project. And Father Joe, who passed away in 1979, if you're listening now, it now appears that your labors have finally paid off.

This Boston bred man of the cloth became an Austin advocate for the poor people in Austin. Father Joe, as he was affectionately called, liked to say that he worked on the things that affected people every day—their schools, their unpaved road, and flood control projects. He did. He was a persistent gadfly to all governmental authorities—local, State, and Federal, but he was respected by all. Father Joe was always on the right side of the issue, but he was not always on the popular side of the issue. But that didn't matter to Father Joe. His calling was for a higher order.

When the rains came and floods threatened the residents of East Austin, it was a common sight to see Father Joe standing on the banks of Boggy Creek knee deep in mud and water, helping people escape the flooding, or remove household items to safer ground. He was like a beacon of hope offering solace and comfort to the residents of East Austin. It has been said that Father Joe believed in moving mountains stone by stone, with hope and patience. With regard to the Boggy Creek project, that hope and patience is now being rewarded. This project is still far from complete. But when the raging waters of Boggy Creek are finally brought under control by this project, it will be Father Joe, more than anyone else, who we will remember standing on the banks of Boggy Creek lending a hand to those in need.

I am proud to have worked with Father Joe and the many Austin citizens who have faithfully pursued this project to a successful ending.

A SALUTE TO NICK FRATTO AND PAUL PERHOSKY

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANLIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, It is with great pleasure that I want to recognize two outstanding educators who will be shortly retiring from their current positions after years of tremendous public service to the people of the Carlynton School District.

Dr. Nicholas Fratto and Mr. Paul Perhosky have served a superintendent and assistant superintendent, respectively, since the late 1960's. This year we will lose their educational skills as they take well-deserved retirements.

Dr. Fratto became superintendent of the Carlynton School District in 1969, after years of service as a high school teacher, guidance director, high school principal, and assistant superintendent. A graduate of Duquesne University, Dr. Fratto earned his doctorate from the University of Pittsburgh.

Married to Carole Ann Marusak, the Frattos are the parents of four children and active in the local community. Dr. Fratto has been president of the South Hills Area School District Association, the Carnegie Lions Club, and the Carnegie Salvation Army. He is currently president of the St. Barbara Church Council.

Paul Perhosky became assistant superintendent of the Carlynton School District in 1969, after working his way, like Dr. Fratto, through the ranks of education as a junior high teacher, junior high principal, high school principal, and elementary education supervisor. A graduate of Indiana State College, Mr. Perhosky earned his masters from the University of Pittsburgh.

Paul and his wife Justine are also involved in local community affairs. Mr. Perhosky has been president of the South Hills Curriculum Advisory Council and active in a variety of educational associations. An avid sportsman, Mr. Perhosky is a member of the Lakewood Rod and Gun Club. The Perhoskys are also members of the Holy Trinity Ukranian Catholic Church.

Mr. Speaker, I want to salute Nick Fratto and Paul Perhosky. These have not been easy years to lead our Nation's schools. Yet Nick and Paul have done so with great skill. They have given tremendously of themselves to improve the quality and reputation of the Carlynton School District. We salute their contributions and thank them for their work on behalf of our children. Their hard work, dedication, and commitment to quality education will never be forgotten.

ECONOMIC SANCTIONS HAVE HURT LIBYA

HON. JOE BARTON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, since 1981, the Reagan administration has steadily increased the economic pressure on Libya in order to persuade its criminal government to abandon its support for worldwide terrorism. Although the lack of cooperation from other countries has limited the effectiveness of these sanctions somewhat, the fact remains that United States sanctions have had a negative impact on the Libyan economy.

The Libyan economy has contracted every year since 1980. The foundation of the libyan economy is revenue from oil exports to the West, since the tiny country does not produce any other commodity of value to the world. Annual Libyan oil income has plummeted by more than half since 1980, when it was $22 billion. Foreign reserves in cash and gold have decreased from $14 billion a few years ago to $2 billion today. Libya is no longer riding high, and people are beginning to feel the pinch of a sharp economic downturn.

While much of the decline in Libyan oil income can be attributed to the fall in world oil prices, another very important consideration is the decline in Libyan oil production. Since 1979, Libyan oil production has plummeted by roughly half, from 2 million barrels per day to the current level of 1 million barrels per day. Much of this decline in oil production can be traced to the economic sanctions imposed by the Reagan administration, which encouraged the flight of United States technicians from Libya. The lack of oil technicians led to the sharp decline in Libyan oil production, and lower Libyan oil income.

The sharp downturn in the Libyan economy promises to strain the ability of Libya to launch military expeditions against her neighbors such as Chad and sponsor international terrorism against the United States and the West. Since Libya spends about 40 percent of her oil income on the military budget, any reduction in oil income undermines the ability of Libya to finance military adventurism and terrorism. Last year, Libya was forced to cancel $700 million in military construction projects because of lowered oil income.

Libya also has apparently fallen $4 billion to $5 billion behind in their payments to the Soviet Union for arms purchases. Qadhafi changed the terms of Libyan arms purchases from the Soviets to include the barter of crude oil as a portion of the purchase price. To demonstrate its displeasure with these new terms, the U.S.S.R. slowed delivery of MIG–23's and withheld the assignment of antiaircraft radar technicians.

It is clear that reduced Libyan oil income will make support for military adventurism and international terrorism more of a burden for Colonel Qadhafi. He will not be able to deliver on all of his grand promises to his people and continue his generous support for terrorism if Libyan oil income declines by another half, as is now projected. It is possible that he will decide to keep his seat of power and reduce his support for terrorism. If he continues his support for terrorism it is possible that the strain on the libyan economy may encourage the military to launch a coup d'etat against Qadhafi. Obviously, either development would be good for the United States and the West.

COMMEMORATING THE 20TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join our colleagues today in commemorating the 20th anniversary of the signing of the Freedom of Information Act. As one of the original proponents of this landmark legislation, I am honored to join in the celebration of its 20th birthday. July 4, 1966, is a day to be remembered for opening the doors on Government information and secrecy.

The adoption of the Freedom of Information Act made information about Government activities available to the American people. Passage of the bill insured the public's right to Government documents, as well as the right of citizens to be fully informed about the policies and activities of the Federal Government. The access to such information provided by this law was long deserved by the American people, and it is illustrative of one of the most important elements of a strong and responsive democracy. The Freedom of Information Act is itself a symbol of a healthy democracy and the value placed upon public access to Government information.

In the 20th year of the operation of the act, it is essential that we recognize the importance, review its utility, and not hastily adopt efforts of those wishing to restrict its scope. Mr. Speaker, I cannot emphasize the importance which the passage of this bill has had on the right of all Americans to know what their Government is doing—a right which is basic to the maintenance of our free and democratic society.

INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO PROVIDE FOR THE SALE BY THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR OF THE SLY PARK UNIT OF THE CVP TO THE EL DORADO IRRIGATION DISTRICT

HON. NORMAN D. SHUMWAY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to introduce a bill which will authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell the Sly Park unit of the central valley project in California to the El Dorado County Irrigation District.

The Sly Park unit, consisting of the Sly Park dam and reservoir, Camp Creek Diversion dam and tunnel, conducts and canals, was originally authorized under the American River Act of 1949. Since its construction, the facilities have been operated totally independent of any of the other CVP facilities, although virtually all operation and maintenance responsibilities have been undertaken by the El Dorado Irrigation District. Despite this separation from the rest of the CVP, the Sly Park unit remains financially integrated with the CVP.

At a time, Mr. Speaker, when the Federal Government is reducing its involvement in water project construction and operation, particularly for smaller, independently operated projects such as the Sly Park unit, it makes sense both from fiscal and resource management standpoints to encourage this kind of local responsibility. In the long run the county of El Dorado and the Sly Park users will benefit from total independence in operating and maintaining the Sly Park unit; the Federal Government, as well, will recoup its original investment and cease to incur any more operating and maintenance costs.

As a matter of policy, there is plenty of precedent for this kind of sale. In fact, starting in 1956—after the Sly Park unit was authorized—reclamation contracts were written to allow for conversion of the contracts "under stated terms and conditions mutually agreeable to the parties * * * (so that) the remaining amount of construction cost which is properly assignable for ultimate return by it can be repaid to the United States."

The El Dorado Irrigation District is a political subdivision of the State of California, duly organized, existing and acting pursuant to State laws. It has ably demonstrated that it is capable of operating and maintaining the Sly Park unit, and it is the sole beneficiary of the project. I am aware of no opposition to this proposed sale of the Sly Park unit; in fact, the CVP Water Users Association officially supports this effort.

THE RAKKASANS FORM AGAIN

HON. HARRY REID

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker, "Rakkasans," members of the famed 187th Airborne Regimental Combat Team, the only airborne unit of the Korean war, and the only airborne warfare regiment of the Army, whose colors bear 15 citations and 21 campaign streamers from World War II, Korea and Vietnam, will form again for their annual reunion in Las Vegas, NV, July 9–14, 1986. These veterans of the past will join with their comrades of the present five battalions of the regiment now on active duty to honor "fallen Rakkasans" and to renew their dedication to America.

The colors of the "Rakkasans" bear witness to the proud history of the regiment and of those units that joined to form the combat team. The regiment and its companion artillery battalion—674th Airborne Field Artillery—were activated on February 25, 1943. The regiment's colors have seen combat in New Guinea, Leyte, Luzon, Korea, and Vietman; they led in the occupation of Japan, pacified Koje-do; and maintained peace in Lebanon in the fifties.

The Rakkasan colors have never been furled and have never been struck in defeat. They fly today, as they have since first unfurled, in proud testament to the elan, esprit, and pride that make the airborne the elite of America's military forces.

The people of the great State of Nevada, the city of Las Vegas, welcome the "Rakkasans" and extend their best wishes for a successful reunion.

ACID RAIN LEGISLATION SHOULD BE CONSIDERED

HON. FERNAND J. ST GERMAIN

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, along with over 160 of my colleagues from all parts of the Nation, I have cosponsored H.R. 4567, the Acid Deposition Control Act of 1986.

This is hardly the first piece of acid rain legislation to be introduced in the House. For a number of years I have sponsored legislation which would establish controls on sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions. Initially bills were introduced which established these controls but ignored the costs to those who would have to pay for the controls. Representing a State which does not produce a measurable amount of acid precipitation, this seemed a reasonable position for me to support.

But, of course, compromise is the heart of the legislation process. In the 98th and now in the 99th Congress, I have supported bills which recognize the expense of controlling these emissions. H.R. 4567 achieves the necessary reduction in acid precipitation, at the same time providing a Federal subsidy to assure that no residential customer will see electricity costs increase by more than 10 percent because of pollution control costs. The costs will be shared by areas receiving the benefits of emissions controls and by areas responsible for the emissions. States are allowed the flexibility to choose the way in which they achieve emissions reductions, rather than a particular method's being mandated by Congress.

H.R. 4567 has received national support. The bill has been marked up in the Health and Environment Subcommittee of the Energy and Commerce Committee. Now it deserves to be considered by the full committee. For too many years we have delayed in addressing this problem. In the spirit of compromise, it is time that the House have the opportunity to consider acid rain legislation and I am convinced that H.R. 4567 should be acted upon without further delay.

CHILE MOBILIZES AGAINST PINOCHET

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the face of an encouraging trend toward democracy in South America that has brought expanded political freedom to such nations as Uruguay and Brazil, Chile remains an island of authoritarian rule. However, as the following report from the Council on Hemispheric Affairs [COHA] explains, the regime of Gen. Augusto Pinochet is facing increasing domestic opposition. In May, the "Civic Assembly," which includes leaders of 18 of the largest mass organizations in Chile, and represents 2.5 to 3 million people, delivered to the Presidential Palace the "Demand of Chile" calling for free elections and widespread democratic reform. Throughout April and May, opposition protests were numerous and well attended. But General Pinochet has refused to alter the 1980 constitution, which came into force through a rigged plebiscite, and which was custom tailored to allow him to remain in office until 1989. Chile's security forces continue their flagrant human rights violations.

This report first appeared in the May 28 issue of COHA's biweekly publication, the Washington Report on the Hemisphere. It was written by COHA research associate Lawrence Boudon. I commend his findings to the attention of my colleagues.

CHILE MOBILIZES AGAINST PINOCHET

(By Lawrence Boudon, Research Associate, Council on Hemispheric Affairs)

Encouraged by May Day demonstrations throughout the country—in which over 5,000 people were detained by the Chilean police—leaders of 18 of the largest mass organizations, known as the "Civic Assembly," marched to the Presidential Palace May 5 to deliver a document called the "Demand of Chile." Led by the President of the Federation of Professional Colleges, Dr. Juan Luis Gonzalez, the protesters were cheered along their path through the streets of Santiago and allowed by the police to reach the Palace. The protesters carried petitions which demanded a return to democracy and gave the government of Gen. Augusto Pinochet until May 30 to respond, at which time, according to Assembly Secretary Francisco Rivas, "we will set a date for a national strike during the month of June."

The Civic Assembly includes such organizations as the National Union of Workers, Workers' Democratic Center, Retail Commerce Confederation, Peasants' National Commission, and the Neighborhoods Coordinating Board. It represents, according to Dr. Gonzelez, 2.5 to 3 million people, or almost one-third of the total population. Its stated goal is to achieve democracy without violence, and it conforms to the plan of struggle set forth by the political parties that are signatories to the opposition National Accord. Gonzalez explained that "our intention is for the Civic Assembly to be a rallying organization for all the citizens of the country," with a strategy including "actions from sit-ins to strikes and boycotts."

The "Demand of Chile", which was delivered both to Pinochet's residence and to Interior Minister Ricardo Garcia, calls for free elections, the lifting of the "state of exception" (a form of a state of siege), dissolution of the secret police, the return of 211 exiles, reparation for victims of torture and assassination, creation of independent justice tribunals, and massive programs to create jobs and build housing.

In the past month, Pinochet has encountered increasing domestic opposition. A tour around the country sparked violent student protests in Temuco April 22 and Valparaiso April 25. The massive rallies and marches on May 1 ended in arrests, blackouts, barricade confrontations and dozens of injuries. Over ten thousand people were detained during the following ten days as police conducted dragnets through poor neighborhoods in and around the capital. Some 500 remain under arrest. Cardinal Juan Francisco Fresno charged Pinochet with "instilling fear and insecurity in the population, particularly in children." The State Department meekly commented that such actions "only help to prolong the cycle of violence" and "hinder progress towards democracy," a genteel formula that it also uses in dealing with violence in South Africa. Privately it says more, but is still worried over the prospective role of the left in a post-Pinochet Chile.

The protests continue, nevertheless, as one hundred journalists and photographers marched through downtown Santiago May 13 to demand freedom of expression. As Pablo Portales, leader of the Guild of Journalists addressed the group in front of the Ministry of Labor, police dispersed the crowd with tear gas and clubs. That same day, Christian Reitze, leader of the Humanist Party (PH), called upon Chileans to turn off their lights May 30 in a sort of informal "plebiscite" on Pinochet's rule, "to reflect upon the darkness in which Chile is living." Eight PH youths were arrested for handing out leaflets advertising the event.

The Chilean Communist Party (PCC), which did not sign the National Accord, issued its plan of struggle May 4 known as the "Military Task of the Masses," outlining actions to "demoralize, wear out, and disunite the armed and security forces" thus rendering the country "ungovernable." The document, which goes into great detail, declares the final goal to be a "National Insurrection."

But Pinochet remains intransigent. He reiterated April 23, following the disturbances in Temuco, that he had no intention of altering the Constitution of 1980, which he claims was "approved by the sovereign will of the people." Under its terms, Pinochet can legally remain in power until 1989. Moreover, Admiral Jose Toribio Merino, a member of the governing junta, declared May 6 that the security forces would continue their dragnets, saying that the efforts to restore order were "well done, in accordance with the law."

On May 8, the Chilean Human Rights Commission released its report which claims that in the past four years, Pinochet's security forces are responsible for 231 deaths, 694 attempted murders, 835 cases of torture, and 2,599 injuries. The Commission reported that it receives an average of 100 reports of human rights violations a month. In light of the escalating violence, Christian Democratic leader Gabriel Valdes called on May 8 for immediate free elections as the only peaceful solution to the country's crisis.

MEDICARE COVERAGE FOR THE DISABLED: PROVIDING INCENTIVES TO RETURN TO WORK

HON. JAMES T. BROYHILL

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to remove a longstanding disincentive for the disabled in this country to return to work. Although the Federal Government has made a significant commitment—approximately $60 billion—to individuals with disabilities through programs that provide income support and health benefits, there have not been adequate efforts made to promote independence and self-sufficiency. Many of the disabled who could return to work are reluctant to take advantage of the trial work periods currently allowed under the Social Security Disability Insurance Program. Disabled people fear that taking the entry-level positions or low-paying service jobs most find available could leave them with less income and no health insurance as their Federal benefits expire. This is because disabled individuals with preexisting health conditions have a difficult time obtaining adequate health insurance from their employers.

In an effort to remove these penalties of returning to work, I am today introducing a bill which will allow disabled individuals who were entitled to benefits under the Social Security Disability Program to purchase Medicare coverage on the basis of a fee schedule related to their income. The legislation requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to determine the premium cost for Medicare benefits and to assess qualified individuals a minumum payment amount of 25 percent of the full premium cost and a maximum payment amount of 8 percent of the individual's adjusted gross income.

In developing this legislation, I must credit Ms. Deborah McKeithan of Charlotte, NC, who brought to my attention the discouraging facts the Nation's disabled face when they seek employment. Ms. McKeithan, a victim of multiple sclerosis and epilepsy, has not only returned to work but has established her own business. Together with a group of friends, Deborah McKeithan established the Handicapped Organization for Women [HOW], which now provides needed community services through 50 chapters in 30 States. In tribute to her efforts, Deborah has been honored by Newsweek, which profiled her achievements in its recent Collector's Edition article entitled "100 New American Heroes."

In May Deborah McKeithan came to my office to discuss the problems the disabled have in obtaining health insurance upon returning to work. She was concerned that such difficulties discouraged individuals who were receiving Social Security payments and health benefits from reaching their full potential as productive members of our society. Under the current system, eligibility for Social Security disability benefits and Medicare is based on the inability of an individual to engage in substantial gainful activity. Therefore, once an individual begins earning more than $300 a month, cash assistance is discontinued, and within 24 months, Medicare eligibility also expires. This leaves the disabled individual who has been back in the work force for 2 to 4 years unable to purchase health insurance at an affordable price.

With a fuller understanding of the problems of the disabled, I decided that it was time to change the disincentives which exist today and provide for a redirection toward greater self-sufficiency. Ms. McKeithan has convinced me that there are individuals currently receiving disability benefits who will seek employment given the opportunity to purchase health insurance at a price within their means. While I am aware that the bill I am introducing today will not solve all the problems which the disabled citizens of our country face, it will allow those individuals who were employed prior to their disability to return to work knowing they can purchase health insurance at an affordable price.

A summary of the legislation follows:

SUMMARY OF THE BILL

The legislation establishes a new section within Title 18 of the Social Security Act to allow certain disabled individuals to purchase Parts A and B of Medicare on the basis of a fee schedule to their income. Eligible individuals must be under 65 years of age; have been entitled to Medicare benefits under the Social Security Disability program (SSDI) and lost those benefits due to their engagement in substantial gainful activity; be determined on an annual basis to continue to have the physical or mental impairment that qualified the individual for SSDI; and be enrolled for benefits under this program since the first month in which they were entitled to benefits.

An individual who qualifies may enroll in the program during a seven-month initial enrollment period which begins the third month before he or she satisfies the requirements for the program. Special enrollment periods are also provided for in the legislation for eligible individuals previously enrolled in group health plans due to their employment. The monthly premium for individuals participating in this program would be the same as the premium determined for other individuals who are permitted to purchase Medicare under Section 1818 of the Social Security Act except for two qualifications: (1) the premium assessed cannot exceed 8% of the adjusted gross income of the individual, and (2) the premium assessed cannot be less than 25% of the full cost of the Medicare premium. If the individual purchases Medicare Part A, he or she can also purchase Part B. The sliding fee schedule would also apply for the Part B premium amount.

In addition, if an individual is enrolled in a group health plan due to his/her employment and has enrolled in this program, Medicare benefits would become secondary to benefits under the employer's group health plan. The legislation would take effect 60 days following enactment.

BALTIC FREEDOM DAY

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in recognition of a very famous day in world history. June 14, is not only Flag Day, but it is also celebrated as Baltic Freedom Day. Because this day fell on a Saturday, I want to take this opportunity now to pay tribute to the Baltic people who still suffer under Soviet domination.

A few weeks ago, the Congress passed legislation to declare June 14, Baltic Freedom Day, and the President signed the measure into law a few days later. While I am heartened by the overwhelming congressional support this measure has received, it is nevertheless distressing to note that such a resolution is necessary at all. The brutal and oppressive occupation of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia by the Soviet Union continues after 45 years.

In June 1940, Soviet troops invaded and illegally annexed the Baltic Republics, which had stood as independent, sovereign states for 22 years. The Baltic peoples have individual and separate cultures, national traditions and languages, distinct from Russia. These are people who cherish the fundamental principles of liberty and justice and who want nothing more than to manifest their national identities through independent statehood.

The continued domination of the Baltic peoples by the Soviets is indeed one of the saddest human tragedies of our time. For the last 46 years, the Soviets have ruthlessly endeavored to suppress Baltic nationalism. Baltic peoples have been systematically and forcefully deported from their homelands to Siberia and masses of Russians have been relocated in the Republics. The Soviets have totally eradicated any semblance of democracy, civil liberties, and religious freedom in the Baltic States. Families have been separated, and many individuals have been jailed at hard labor, while others have suffered vile and unspeakable forms of persecution, including death, for any exercise of their religious or ethnic beliefs. The human rights violations endured by the Baltic peoples are atrocious.

Yet, even under these extreme and terrible conditions the Baltic people have maintained their national identities and have continued their struggle for freedom. As the leader of the free world, the United States has an obligation to help the Baltic people and others who suffer under the heavy hand of oppression. As the chairman of the House Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, I will continue to endeavor to spotlight the abuses of the Soviet regime and to pressure Kremlin authorities to improve that country's human rights record.

I am submitting additional information to the RECORD for my colleagues' review.

THE BALTIC HOLOCAUST HASN'T ENDED

(By Ojars Kalniņs)

In the early morning of June 14, 1941, two heavily armed agents of the Soviet security police invaded the home of a Latvian in Soviet-occupied Riga. They ordered him out of bed and informed him that he was to be immediately deported to Soviet Russia as an "undesirable element."

They gave him fifteen minutes to pack. He was not even allowed to say goodbye to his wife, who was paralyzed and thus unable to go with hm. "Her heart rending screams are still sounding in my ears," he stated later in a letter to the Latvian Minister in Washington, DC. He was one of the lucky few to survive the Soviet-Nazi alliance to destroy the Baltic people. His wife was not. Although she lived through the first Soviet occupation of Latvia, she was later killed by the Nazis.

The above episode is typical of thousands experienced by Latvians, Lithuanians and Estonians on the night of June 13, 1941. During the previous year of occupation, when Baltic governments were toppled and leaders murdered, the people of these nations had already begun to feel the political consequences of Soviet rule. This night would bring the true meaning of "Sovietization" home to friends and loved ones.

It meant terror, beatings, deportation and death. In one fiendishly coordinated night of activity, the Soviet secret police arrested and deported over 15,000 Latvians. With similar sweeps in Estonia and Lithuania, the Soviets dragged off over 50,000 Baltic men, women and children and packed them into railroad cattle cars for a terrifying journey to Siberian slave labor camps. Many died in transit. Others died in the camps.

What began on June 14, continued for several weeks until over 100,000 Balts had been torn from their homes and families and sentenced to deprivation, degradation and death in Siberian forests, sub arctic tundras and arid steppes. They had received no warning. They had been charged with no crimes. To the Soviet regime in Moscow, they were simply annoying obstacles in the way of the Soviet invasion and absorption of the Baltic States.

If the viciousness of the Soviet takeover of the Baltic States sounds similar to what the Nazis did in Eastern Europe, it shouldn't come as a suprise. The Soviets and Nazis were both spiritual and political allies. In the 1939 Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact Moscow and Berlin agreed to a neat division of Europe. The Soviets could have the Baltic States. Finland and part of Romania. The Nazis could have everything due west.

Thus, like brothers in blood, Stalin and Hitler proceeded to carve up and cut out the hearts of countless ancient Northern and Eastern European nations, cultures and people.

Hitler, of course was finally stopped after destroying more than 11 million innocent lives. Stalin, however, eventually joined the Allies against Hitler, and thus had a free hand to ring up a total of more than 20 million dead.

Today, the Soviet/Nazi engineered destruction of the Baltic States continues. The nations of Lativa, Estonia and Lithuania remain under illegal Soviet rule. Mass deportation has been replaced by systematic repopulation. The extermination of individuals has been superseded by the extermination of cultures, languages and traditions. What Hitler and Stalin wrought Gorbachev continues.

French journalist Jean Francois Revel has stated that "Soviet imperialism is irreversible not because it is invincible, but because it achieves recognition as legitimate under international law: sooner or later de facto power is accepted as rightful power.

Baltic Freedom Day. June 14, was created to make sure that the illegal Soviet occupation of the Baltic States is not accepted as "legitimate under international law." It calls attention to the beginning of Soviet genocide against the Baltic peoples. It is observed in the White House, the U.S. Congress and in nations throughout the world. It is a day of rememberance for a night of terror that has continued for 45 consecutive years. It is a chilling reminder that the Soviet war against the Baltic people has not ended.

RON COLEMAN'S DEMOCRATIC RADIO ADDRESS

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, this past Saturday, my good friend and colleague from Texas, Congressman RON COLEMAN, was privileged to deliver the weekly Democratic radio address. The focus of his comments was how to make the best use of hard-earned taxpayer money when it is spent for foreign aid. When we are cutting programs vital to the health and safety of our citizens, does it make sense to funnel tax dollars to Nicaraguan Contra forces when we have no accurate accounting of where the $27 million already allocated has gone?

I commend Mr. COLEMAN's incisive comments to my colleagues' attention as we undertake this debate on expanded aid to the Contras:

RADIO ADDRESS TO THE NATION

Hello. I'm Congressman Ron Coleman from Texas.

When the House of Representatives once again considers the President's foreign aid request of one hundred million of your tax dollars for the Contras, the issue will not be whether communism should be curbed at every opportunity. This is not a litmus test of anyone's patriotism. We're all Americans, and we are gravely concerned at even the hint of a threat to our national security interests.

The question before the House next week is how to best make sure that your taxpayer-funded foreign aid money is wisely spent, and that this aid actually reaches the people it is intended to help.

Communism, in its many forms, cannot be stopped merely by throwing money at selected regional crises. Certainly the taxpayer-funded spending sprees of former Philippine President Marcos and his wife should have taught us something about being able to account for our foreign aid.

Buying Imelda Marcos over three thousand pairs of shoes and underwriting her Swiss bank accounts did very little to fight the communist insurgency or effectively serve our national interests. Before Congress decides to let the President hand over another $100 million in foreign aid to the Contras, some tough questions need to be asked—and answered.

Such as: Where did the $27 million in humanitarian aid that my colleagues and I voted for last year end up going?

Three weeks ago, when I visited a contra base camp with a bipartisan congressional delegation, the troops included ill-fed, poorly-clothed thirteen and fifteen year-old boys and girls. The field hospital lacked the most basic of medical necessities.

So where did the taxpayers' $27 million go?

The agency that keeps an eye on how our tax dollars are spent—the General Accounting Office—discovered that more than half of it disappeared without a trace . . . and that the State Department has no idea if any of those funds were properly spent.

Of the money that could be traced, nearly $1.5 million went to the armed forces of Honduras, including one $450,000 check for cash to its commander-in-chief.

And there are disturbing new reports that our own government officials may have deliberately violated the law that prohibited any open or hidden U.S. assistance for military operations inside Nicaragua during part of 1984 and 1985.

Because of the Administration's reluctance to publicly respond to allegations about this behind-the-scenes operation, I will this week introduce a formal Resolution of Inquiry to get at the truth. This is a serious step I do not take lightly, to deal with what may have been an intentional disregard for our own democratic process. I believe it will be supported by my colleagues in the Congress as well as you, the American people.

We Democrats think it's high time the American people know how their tax dollars are being spent—and that foreign aid, if it's needed, serve American interests. Imelda doesn't need another pair of shoes.

In these tough budgetary times, when the government says no to our farmers, no to education, and no to our working families, how can we hand over $100 million in foreign aid without getting any answers to some very basic questions?

We've already spent $927 million of your money for the war in Nicaragua. The President now wants Congress to approve another $100 million. How much will the President ask for next year?

And then what? Military advisers? Troops?

The mothers in El Paso and Pecos, Texas, don't want their sons sent off to an unnecessary war. Oh, they'll sacrifice, as we all will, if our nation or our freedoms are threatened.

But isn't there a better way?

Twenty major religious denominations oppose aid to the contras. Our democratic allies in Central America, South America, and Europe also oppose it.

And there is a simple reason: There are ongoing diplomatic efforts to pressure the Nicaraguans into a peaceful settlement that could contain the communist threat, or reduce arms, or establish freedom, and prevent the location of any communist-supplied offensive weaponry into the region.

U.S. diplomatic pressure on all of our allies could be brought to bear if this Administration wasn't so bent upon a military solution. We Democrats want to pursue a policy—one we believe reflects the commitment of the American people—that promotes peace, stability, reform, and hope as the best way of advancing democracy.

And, if—as a last resort—we are compelled to use force or support the use of force, and as you know, we always retain that option, we want you . . . the people who sent us here to serve you . . . to know that our efforts and your dollars will not be wasted.

This is Texas Congressman Ron Coleman, saying thank you very much, and have a good weekend.

PRESIDENT KENNEDY'S LEGACY ON ARMS CONTROL

HON. JIM MOODY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, 25 years ago this month President John F. Kennedy delivered a bold and courageous speech at the American University in Washington, DC. Kennedy's speech was dedicated to the pursuit of peace, peace which in his words would be:

[G]enuine peace—the kind of peace that makes life on earth worth living—and the kind that enables men and nations to grow and to hope and build a better life for their children—not merely peace for Americans but peace for all men and women—not merely peace in our time but peace in all time.

On that day 25 years ago, President Kennedy announced his efforts to conclude a comprehensive ban on the testing of nuclear weapons. Kennedy said:

The conclusion of such a treaty—so near and yet so far—would check the spiraling arms race in one of its most dangerous areas. It would place the neclear powers in a position to deal more effectively with one of the greatest hazards man faces * * * the further spread of nuclear weapons. It would increase our security—it would decrease the prospects of war.

Kennedy and all successive Presidents up to this one believed that a comprehensive test ban was a vital step toward reducing the threat of nuclear war, a vital step toward reducing the threat of reliance on nuclear weapons, and a vital step toward genuine peace. I share their view.

Yet we find ourselves commemorating Kennedy's words and vision at a time when hopes for a test ban and any arms control are being deliberately sabotaged by the Reagan administration. Kennedy's vision is being systematically shredded by those in this administration who oppose all arms control, those who see conflict as inevitable, accommodation as impossible, and communication as nothing more than an exchange of threats. This is precisely the world view that Kennedy cautioned us against.

Unlike John Kennedy, this administration sees no value in a test ban. Its officials argue that we must continue nuclear testing in order to complete President Reagan's strategic modernization plan and to develop star wars. Indeed, scientists at the national laboratories say each nuclear driven weapon in SDI—like the x ray laser—will require 100 to 200 nuclear explosions to develop.

Thus it is painfully clear that the administration is more than willing to abandon and avoid arms control in order to build more nuclear weapons, both on land and in space.

Mr. Speaker, I believe a nuclear test ban will enhance our national security far more than the production of new and more sophisticated nuclear weapons. A test ban will enable us to prevent weapons technology from outpacing arms control. A test ban would enable the United States and the Soviet Union to meet their obligations under the Non-Proliferation Treaty, and it would help slow the spread of nuclear weapons to third countries.

No one in this House has any illusions that negotiating treaties with the Soviet Union is easy, but in this era of nuclear weapons, in which our fate is so tightly linked to the fate of our adversary, we must make the effort.

As President Kennedy said 25 years ago:

We can seek a relaxation of tensions without relaxing our guard * * *. Even the most hostile nations can be relied upon to accept and keep those treaty obligations, and only those treaty obligations, which are in their own interest.

So, let us not be blind to our differences—but let us also direct our attention to our common interests and the means by which those differences can be resolved. For in the final analysis, our most basic common link is that we all inhabit this small planet. We all breathe the same air. We all cherish our children's future. And we are all mortal.

The administration's failure to face the challenge of cooperation and peace is a tragedy for all of us who have hopes of a safer world for our generation and those to come. I urge President Reagan to enter into negotiations to end nuclear testing. He cannot do so too soon.

THE TORCH OF LIBERTY

HON. JULIAN C. DIXON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, as the 100th birthday celebration of the Statue of Liberty approaches, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues the work of one of my constituents, Miss Alberta Dredla. Miss Dredla is the author of the winning entry in the California Federation of Woman's Clubs 1986 Inspirational Poetry contest. I believe her poem, "The Torch of Liberty," expresses for many of us the patriotic and self-reflective spirit of this anniversary. It is a pleasure to share Miss Dredla's accomplishments with the House of Representatives, and to offer her my warm congratulations.

THE TORCH OF LIBERTY

Hold high the torch
of Liberty,
Tell the story
Just once more.

Listen to the voices
We cherish across the years
Telling us
To love and protect
This land of ours.

Hold high the torch
of liberty,
In a land where founders
Pledged to one another
Their lives, their fortunes
And their sacred honor.

In a land where strangers came
Homeless and tempest-tossed,
To a welcoming lamp
Beside a golden door.

Hold high the torch
of Liberty,
In a land where men breathe free,
Where faith and courage
Have changed the course of history.

Hold high the torch,
The timeless light of liberty—
The love of country
That lives in all our hearts.

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH TELECOMMUNICATIONS PLAN

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a House concurrent resolution which provides for the development and implementation of a coordinated telecommunications system for the House of Representatives, the Senate, and several agencies of the legislative branch.

As a result of hearings recently held by the Subcommittee on Legislative Branch of the Committee on Appropriations on the subject of legislative branch telecommunications, it became apparent that the deregulation of the telecommunications industry, our rapidly expanding telephone and data communications requirements, and current fiscal constraints have presented an opportunity for the legislative branch to benefit if these problems are worked out in a concerted, cooperative manner. In order to do that, most of the agencies and outside expert witnesses at those hearings suggested the development of a coordinated plan for meeting our telecommunications needs.

Fortunately, both the Committee on House Administration and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration have taken important steps to acquire the necessary installations for their respective bodies. What is needed now is overall coordination throughout the legislative branch so that the technology can be shared. If we are careful and timely, we have the potential to vastly improve our current communication systems for the decades ahead.

The resolution I have introduced assigns responsibility to the Joint Committee on Printing to develop an overall plan for the acquisition and management of compatible telecommunications systems for the House of Representatives, the Senate, and the agencies of the legislative branch. The resolution directs the joint committee to consult with the relevant committees of each House of Congress and to use the technical assistance of the Architect of the Capitol. Moreover, and only for the purposes of the matter outlined in the resolution, the membership of that committee is expanded to include the chairman and ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Office Systems of the Committee on House Administration and the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Government Operations. Comparable Senate membership is also provided.

The resolution also prohibits the expenditure of funds for legislative branch telecommunication system components that are not in compliance with the approved plan. The plan is subject to approval by the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate.

THE RETIREMENT OF GENERAL CHARLES A. GABRIEL

HON. WILLIAM L. DICKINSON

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I take time today to publically acknowledge the distinguished military career of Gen. Charles A. Gabriel. General Gabriel is retiring as the Chief of Staff, U.S. Air Force, a position he has held since July 1982.

General Gabriel has provided the military leadership to bring the Air Force to a position that is second to none. Under his guidance, the Air Force has initiated or taken delivery of new weapons systems which keep us on the leading edge of technology—the B–1B and Peacekeeper, LANTIRN and AMRAAM, the C–5 and C–17, and several additional systems to expand our special operations forces. These systems add capabiity while increasing reliability and maintainability. Due to General Gabriel's personal attention, improved acquisition procedures are bringing systems on line that are under cost and ahead of schedule.

The focus on new weapons did not lessen Charlie Gabriel's sensitivity and concern for Air Force men and women who provide the real qualitative edge. He has worked hard to make sure his people have the right resources to do their jobs and an adequate level of compensation and benefits. His efforts have resulted in the highest quality, best educated, and most realistically trained force we have ever seen. They are the dedicated people, active duty, civilian, guard and reserve, who keep our nation safe and secure. We are indebted to Charlie Gabriel for leaving this legacy to the country.

Congress and the American people should salute General and Mrs. Charles A. Gabriel as they leave active duty. We will miss them, but we know they are true patriots who will continue to serve this great Nation.

MONTFORD POINT MARINE ASSOCIATION

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, on August 9–16, 1986, the St. Louis Chapter of the Montford Point Marine Association and the Marine Family will host the first Marine reunion convention in St. Louis, MO. Regrettably, I will not be able to participate in the National Marine Awards Dinner on August 16. However, in honor of this momentous occasion, I am delighted to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues in Congress the proud history of the Montford Point Marine Association.

HISTORY MONTFORD POINT MARINE ASSOCIATION

Since 1775, the United States Marine Corps has served our country in peace and war. Today, the Marine Corps continues to serve the nation as a force in readiness, prepared to go wherever the national interests require. Through out its proud history, the Marine Corps has had in its ranks the finest of young American manhood. These Marines have made the Corps one of the world's most respected military organizations.

The Montford Point Marines are proud to be a part of this outstanding organizaiton.

Forty-two years ago, the President of the United States decided that a longstanding tradition which had eliminated participation of a segment of our population from active or inactive duty in the United States Marine Corps should be abolished. As a result of this Presidential thinking, blacks were recruited for the Marine Corps.

These men of color came from all states. Many had graduate degrees. But these "Choosen Few" were not sent to Parris Island or San Diego, the long time traditonal Marine Corps boot camps. The black recruits were sent to Montford Point, where a black Boot Camp training site was established at Camp Lejeune, N.C.

Historymaking events at Montford Point have been too numeous to mention, for almost every event at Montford Point has been history making. For example, the 51st and 52nd Defense Battalions, two anti-aircraft outfits, broke every record set by the corps .

It's a matter of military record, though not highly publicized, that these men distinguished themselves and did credit to the Globe and Anchor and to our country in whatever capacity they were asked serve. Even in the midst of tremendous adversity, they overcame whatever obstacles they encountered in the form of abuse, disrespect, and denial of human dignity. These adversities served to bind them together because communal suffering had been a common thing.

In 1965, a National Association of the first black men accepted for enlistment in the Marine Corps was organized. The organization was named the "Montford Point Marines Association" and the first annual reunion was proudly held in September 1965 in Philadelphia, Pa. National conventions have been held since 1965 in major cities around the country where chapters exist.

Hence, the birth of the Montford Point Marines Association, the purpose of which is: "To promote and preserve the strong bonds of frindship born from shared adversities and to devote ourselves to the furtherance of these friendships as Marine through the sharing of experiences and accomplishments to insure more peaceful times."

The objective of the Associations is one of Comradeship, Fellowship, Esprit De Corps, and Civic Services.

We are bound together with Marines everywhere and our motto is: Semper Fidelis (Always Faithful).

TRIBUTE TO MARVIN HALPERN

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to salute Mr. Marvin Halpern, a Bronx-born resident of Rockland County and a distinguished educator who is retiring after 37 years in the Bronx school system. Mr. Halpern was born and raised in the Bronx, attending Public School 80 and DeWitt Clinton High School. After receiving a B.A. and M.A. from the City College of New York, Mr. Halpern returned to the Bronx where he taught for 10 years at the intermediate level.

Mr. Halpern was named acting principal of Junior High School 55 in 1959 and in 1963, he was appointed acting principal of Junior High School 115X where he served as principal until his retirement this year. Mr. Halpern has touched many lives during his long tenure with his commitment to his students and his commitment to overcoming obstacles in order to provide the best education possible to the children of the Bronx.

I am sure that after 37 years of distinguished service to his community, Mr. Halpern will enjoy the opportunity to spend more time with his wife of 37 years, Ethel and their three children, Leslie, Lori, and Jeffrey. I wish him a wonderful and enjoyable retirement and the very best for the future for him and his family.

SAN JOSE CITY COUNCIL OPPOSES IMMIGRATION BILL

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I want to share with my colleagues a resolution which the City Council of San José adopted yesterday by an overwhelming vote. The resolution, authored by the distinguished Councilwoman Blanca Alvarado, urges the Congress to reject the Simpson-Rodino immigration bill.

The city council, like many other groups across the country, is especially concerned with making employer sanctions the linchpin of the immigration law revision bill. As the council's resolution points out, it is inevitable that employer sanctions "will lead to discrimination against the residents of San José who are immigrants and the children of immigrants."

I commend the resolution to the attention of my colleagues.

The resolution follows:

RESOLUTION AGAINST SIMPSON-RODINO BILL

Whereas: There is currently pending before the United States Congress legislation commonly referred to as the Simpson-Rodino Bill (S-1200 and HR 3810) to reform federal immigration laws; and

Whereas: The pending legislation contains provisions known as employer sanctions which will penalize employers who knowingly hire undocumented workers as a means of curbing the entry of undocumented immigrants into the United States; and

Whereas: Employer sanctions will place an undue burden on employers who will be required to become experts in recognizing valid immigration documents and will be subject to possible civil fines and/or criminal penalties if they mistakenly hire undocumented workers; and

Whereas: The added burdens and costs to employers implicit in such sanctions will result in employment discrimination against United States citizens and lawfully admitted immigrants of foreign appearance who apply for jobs; and

Whereas: The pending legislation will expand the temporary workers program which will only create a more controllable source of foreign labor with few rights;

Now therefore be it resolved that the Mayor and the City Council of San José oppose passage of the Simpson-Rodino immigration legislation on the grounds that it will lead to discrimination against the residents of San José who are immigrants and the children of immigrants, and that it will unduly burden the business people of San José.

Adopted this 24th Day of June, 1986.

HONORING SID SUSSMAN

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor and a privilege for me to recognize Sid Sussman of Bernardsville, NJ. Sid has spent the last 35 years working with the Fresh Air Fund. He first heard about the program in 1950 and has been actively involved ever since.

His charitable contributions have enabled hundreds of inner-city kids the chance to spend their summers away from the glass and asphalt of the city. His gentle manner and genuine concern has made these kids feel at home.

Every year Sid thinks that he has done enough yet he keeps coming back. I cannot thank him enough for his dedication and urge him to continue working with the Fresh Air Fund for another 35 years.

"SINGIN' IN THE RAIN"—WE NEED MORE HELP FOR THE HANDICAPPED

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the handicapped in America have long suffered due to the lack of adequate facilities across our country. The failure to provide the necessary rampways, shelters, and other handicapped facilities places an unfortunate burden upon the handicapped and is an indictment of our concern for these less fortunate citizens. There is an unfortunate lack of interest and concern on the part of many administrators in assuring the most basic services for the handicapped.

Recently, I received a touching account from a constituent which I would like to share with this House. Rose Ann Feingenbaum has sought assistance in eliminating some of the problems faced by handicapped individuals. She shares a common experience, and I commend her heroism in coping with an invalid husband, who must use a wheelchair and is barely able to communicate. Her moving account brings an awareness that even under the most stressful circumstances kindness persists.

Mr. Speaker, I insert an excerpt of this moving article in the RECORD:

SINGIN' IN THE RAIN

(By Rose Ann Feingenbaum)

Monday mornings are bad enough when it's raining and a person has to go out in it, but it's doubly troublesome when you're in a wheelchair and you have to get in and out of the car and get to your destination without getting soaked.

There was a time when Stan and I loved to go out in the rain. That was before his accident when he could move about normally. Now, if we're snug in the house listening to the water dance on the roof and cascade out of the drain pipes, we love it. But going out in it is another matter, because my husband Stan is now wheelchair bound and needs my total help. He is also particularly vulnerable to respiratory problems.

(Rose Ann then gives a blow-by-blow account of the difficulty of getting from the car to the hospital in a torrential downpour. The result is that Stan is soaked and confused by the traumatic experience.)

I can't wait to get Stan into physical therapy and out of this quagmire. My feet are squishing as we cross the street and make for the side door of the Core building. It now occurs to me that my raincoat is wet a foot up from the hem. I can't think clearly anymore, I just push Stan's wheelchair up onto the sidewalk, scrunching all the small pine cones that have blown down from the wind and rain, and I open up the heavy glass door and we struggle inside, wet and bedraggled, trailing water all the way down the hall, and I don't care.

The conclusion of this sensitive piece stirs the conscience of all of us who are concerned about the handicapped. Why do we not have adequate rain shelters at hospitals? As Rose Ann thoughtfully asks in her closing remarks:

Why is it so easy to lower the flag to half mast in respect for those now dead, but yet so hard to raise a rain shelter at hospitals for those who didn't die, and who are trying so hard to live.

TRIBUTE TO JUDGE JOSEPH C. BRUNO

HON. THOMAS M. FOGLIETTA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding citizen of Philadelphia, Joseph C. Bruno, judge of the court of common pleas.

This Saturday, June 28, Judge Bruno is being honored as the next governor of district 745 of Rotary International. He will take office on July 1. District 745 encompasses most of eastern Pennsylvania with 44 local Rotary clubs within its jurisdiction.

Those of us who know Judge Bruno are not surprised by his selection to this high office: As district governor, Judge Bruno joins a select group of only 392 from 160 countries. He is a community leader, actively involved in the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Union League of Philadelphia, the Boy Scouts of America, and the Philadelphia and Pennsylvania Bar Associations. He has traveled extensively to most countries of the world visiting courts and penal institutions. He has made indepth studies and lectured widely on the subjects of juvenile gang warfare in Philadelphia, the problems of narcotics and crime, and the judicial system. He is the recipient of the Distinguished Service Award from the Chapel of the Four Chaplains and of the Silver Medal Award from the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution. He has been a lay speaker in churches in the United States and Europe.

Before his selection as district governor, Judge Bruno was president of the Rotary Club of Philadelphia—one of the largest Rotary clubs in the world.

What makes a man or woman truly deserving of an honor like the one being bestowed on Judge Bruno is a commitment of spirit to public service. Judge Bruno exemplifies this commitment. When asked what it means to be district governor, he humbly notes Rotary International's commitment to "Polio Plus"—a Rotary effort to eradicate 2,000 childhood diseases worldwide. He humbly notes with rotary's effort to upgrade the quality of medical care in Mexico and Nigeria by providing these nations with used and surplus medical equipment from the United States. He humbly notes Rotary International's effort to foster international understanding through an exchange program of business and professional leaders and a scholarship program for undergraduate and graduate students. Rotary International awards 13 times more scholarships than the Rhodes Scholarship Program.

Not once does Judge Bruno mention his own significant contribution to these humanitarian efforts. Yet, they are significant: He was awarded the Cavaliere Ufficiale by the Republic of Italy for his work with Rotary International and now has been elected to the district governorship by this peers at Rotary International's 1986–87 annual convention in Los Angeles.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said, "The world is sustained by study, by service, and by deeds of kindness." Clearly, Joseph C. Bruno is one of those who helps to sustain the world. I am delighted that so many have chosen to honor him on June 28, and I am pleased to add my voice to those who thank and congratulate him. His commitment to duty and to others is an example to us all.

A SALUTE TO SHERIFF BEN CLARK

HON. ALFRED A. (AL) McCANDLESS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. McCANDLESS. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, July 17, 1986, the California Inland Empire Council of the Boy Scouts of America will be honoring Sheriff Ben Clark of Riverside County, and Roy Rogers of San Bernardino County. I have the honor of representing Sheriff Clark here in the Congress, and would like to take this opportunity to salute him. My colleague from California, Mr. LEWIS, has the honor of representing Roy Rogers, and will be paying tribute to him, in which I join him.

Sheriff Ben Clark has been in the Riverside County Sheriff's office since 1950, and has been sheriff since 1963. In many ways, his name is synonymous with Riverside County. He has witnessed, and been a dynamic part of, the dramatic growth in our area in the past 36 years.

Sheriff Clark has worn many hats—that of the symbol of strong, honest, and progressive law enforcement, that of the community activist, that of a teacher, a humanitarian, a husband, a father, a grandfather, and a friend. How does he do it? He is privy to the exact same number of hours a day that we all have, yet he manages to do so much. He is surrounded by people who know that if you want to get something done, ask the busiest person you know—and in this case, that's Sheriff Ben Clark.

I am proud to call him a friend of mine, and wish him many more years of sheriffing, Ben Clark style.

MICHIGAN VETERANS' FACILITY

HON. PAUL B. HENRY

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, in 1886, 100 years ago, Michigan became the seventh State in the Union to establish a home for war veterans. After much debate lasting several years and I might add, denial of funds from the Federal Congress, the Michigan Legislature in 1885 adopted a law establishing the Michigan Soldiers' Home. Several months later, Grand Rapids was selected as the site for the new home, and in March 1886, ground was broken.

The home's cemetery was dedicated on May 31, 1886, and a time capsule was placed in the cornerstone of the Old Main Building on June 30, 1886. One hundred years later to the day, a new time capsule will be loaded into the cornerstone of the New Main Building, the major project of the 1980's now under construction. The Honorable N.A. Earle of Grand Rapids when dedicating the home in 1886 stated:

The institution . . . is built not as a charity, but as a fulfillment of a sacred trust, as making good a solemn promise, as the payment of an honest debt.

This sacred trust has been carried out through the years by the caring of more than 22,000 veterans from all of America's wars, except the Revolutionary War and the War of 1812. In 1894 the first women members were accepted and have continued to make up a small portion of the number of residents which today total over 700.

In the midfifties, social trends began to bring about changes in this country's domiciliary care institutions. New social and medical programs allowed elderly people to live independently for a longer period of time. As a result, people coming to the facility were generally older and less able to care for themselves than in the past. Maintaining the home as a small hospital became impossible and during the 1970's, the hospital operation was phased out in favor of developing an institution which would meet all the requirements of a first-rate nursing facility. Equipped with state-of-the-art therapy programs, on-site, registered professionals in physical and occupational therapy, speech, hearing, inhalations, psychological, and alcoholism therapies, the facility has developed into one of the best nursing care providers in the country.

Newly named the Michigan Veterans' Facility in 1944, the growing demand for additional beds, as well as modernization requirements have resulted in numerous building campaigns. The future promises even greater growth. With the majority of American's veterans not having yet reached an age where they will require nursing care, it is estimated that between 1990 and 2020, there will be an influx of veterans from World War II, and the Korean and Vietnam wars needing the services of nursing homes.

By upgrading the physical operations and the replacement of the outmoded Mann Building to accommodate the growing demand for skilled nursing care, the institution is embarked on what is hoped to be the last major expansion of the Michigan Veterans' Facility. Rather than enlarge the institution in the future, the Michigan legislature seems inclined to build new veterans' facilities in other parts of the State, such as the one now open in Marquette, MI.

Mr. Speaker, the Michigan Veterans' Facility has worked diligently to provide compassionate and first-class care to Michigan veterans and their families. Currently under the leadership of Commandant Frederick A. Traill, the facility hopes to expand its services to the veteran community throughout western Michigan—offering both night care and day care services, and respite care. Encouraging veterans to function at their maximum possible level, the facility will continue to place emphasis on greater flexibility and adaptability to members' individual needs and desires. As the Michigan Veterans' Facility begins its second century of services, its administration pledges to not lose sight "of the humanness of the people we are caring for, and the needs of those human beings * * *."

Please join with me, Mr. Speaker and colleagues, in offering congratulations to the Michigan Veterans' Facility on the occasion of the facility's 100-year anniversary and best wishes for continued success in servicing the needs of America's veterans.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, June 26, 1986

The House met at 11 a.m.

The Reverend Dr. Calvin O. Butts III, pastor, Abyssinian Baptist Church, New York, NY, offered the following prayer:

God of our fathers and mothers, called by many names and residing in many houses of worship; we thank Thee for the privilege of the liberties we enjoy in this good land. Strengthen us to defend our liberties and empower us to mold into one people the masses who come here, those who were brought here, and those who were already here, that this may truly be one Nation under Thee.

Anoint, O God, with the spirit of wisdom, this great House of Government that it might stay loyal to the high aims which have been set before it, that there may be justice and peace at home and that we may show sympathy with all the peoples of the Earth in their quest for life and liberty.

Save us from violence and confusion, from pride and arrogance; forgive us our national and personal sins. Prosper the affairs of our industry, encourage the hearts and minds of our young, and reveal unto our hearts the true meaning of love.

And now, O Lord,
Shadowed beneath Thy hand,
May we forever stand,
True to our God,
True to our native land.

Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 4841. An act to amend the Carl D. Perkins Vocational Education Act with respect to State allotments under the Act.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 2798. An act to amend title 38, United States Code, to prohibit discrimination in employment because of the status of certain individuals as a member of a reserve component of the Armed Forces or as a member of the National Guard; and

H.R. 5036. An act to make technical corrections to the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965.

REV. CALVIN BUTTS

(Mr. RANGEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to thank Rev. Calvin Butts on behalf of the House, not only praying for the Nation but for this Congress.

Some 15 or 16 years ago, Reverend Butts came to the Abyssinian Baptist Church in central Harlem at the same time I was privileged to come to the U.S. Congress. One thing that we both have in common is that we both succeeded the late and the great Congressman Adam Clayton Powell.

I have tried desperately hard in this House to gain the respect of my colleagues in making certain that the people and the constituents in the 16th Congressional District received adequate and competent representation in Congress.

Reverend Butts has done more than just succeed Rev. Adam Clayton Powell, but has been a dynamo of a spiritual and community leader in central Harlem in our city, in our State, and in our Nation.

For all of those reasons, it is abundantly clear that when the final record is made for Adam Clayton Powell that it was not two people who succeeded and tried to replace him, but it will show that he has one of the best and most effective records that any legislator has had in the U.S. Congress, and Harlem and the Nation is a better place because we have Rev. Calvin Butts.

NATIONAL SPECIAL OPERATIONS AGENCY

(Mr. DANIEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, there is one element of our Armed Forces which is absolutely critical in every emergency, from a terrorist incident up through global war. That is our special operations forces—the Army Special Forces, civil affairs and psychological operations, and Ranger units; the Navy Seals and Special Boat units; the Air Force Special Operations Wing.

Although they represent a fraction of 1 percent of our military structure, they are, in a very real sense almost 95 percent of the usuable military capability available to the President at any given time. They, alone, are able to function throughout the spectrum of military activity, not as a deterrent, but in an active role, day-in and day-out, all around the world.

The Armed Services Committee has devoted over 3 years, within the Readiness Subcommittee and the Special Operations Panel chaired so ably by our colleague from Florida, EARL HUTTO, to the question of how to insure the readiness of our Special Operations Forces.

Our hearings, meetings, briefings, inspections, and visits over the past 3 years, Mr. Speaker, have convinced us that there must be thorough reorganization of our Special Operations Forces.

There must be a radically streamlined and unified command and control organization established; there must be total civilian control, accountability, responsibility, and oversight; and there must be an effective system established to guarantee that minimum necessary resources are provided to the Special Operations Forces.

If we don't assure those improvements, Mr. Speaker, oversight, command and control, and adequate resources, combined with a coherent national strategy and doctrine for their employment, then we are facing very dangerous and potentially disastrous problems worldwide, in our employment of our Special Operations Forces.

As a result, this morning, Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill for the establishment of a National Special Operations Agency. To be headed by a civilian director reporting to the President through the Secretary of Defense, the agency would unify command and control, resources, and doctrine and strategy for special operations.

The Special Operations Agency will permit continuous oversight, accountability, and responsibility for these activities.

I am joined by most members of the Armed Services Committee as cosponsors of this bill, Mr. Speaker, including our distinguished chairman and subcommittee chairmen.

The problems this bill seeks to address are very real, Mr. Speaker, and we believe the solutions proposed to be the minimum necessary to adequately address them.

Our Special Operations Forces are crucial to us—and we owe them this attention and support.

NEED FOR KOREAN WAR MEMORIAL

(Mr. PARRIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday marked the 36th anniversary of the beginning of the Korean war. The face of America and the lives of at least 5.7 million Americans who served there were changed forever. Of these Americans who served during that war, over 103,000 were wounded and, most important, 54,00 of them made the ultimate sacrifice.

It is deeply disturbing to me that, after 36 years, there is not yet a memorial in our Nation's Capital to honor these great Americans who served and sacrificed in the Korean war—The only group of war veterans not to be so honored. These individuals have been leap-frogged by time overlooked and ignored. It is within our power to see that this disservice is not permitted to go unremedied.

On November 6 of last year, the House-passed legislation providing for the erection a memorial to these veterans by a vote of 406 to 0. The other body on the other hand, has taken no action. As a matter of fact, tomorrow marks the first anniversary of the day the Senate companion bill was referred to the Energy Subcommittee on Public Lands and Reserved Water. It has been languishing there ever since. You may ask yourself, why have they been sitting on this bill? They say it is because there are already too many memorials in Washington.

I have but one thing to say in response to this travesty: the other body appears to have misplaced its national priorities. Imagine that with all the memorials to individual persons who have made measurable contributions to our Nation, we cannot find a small plot of land to memorialize those 54,000 men who gave their lives for their country and the ideals of freedom and self-determination—the ideals which form the foundation upon which this Nation rest and from which it gets its sustinance.

To be honest, Mr. Speaker, I am deeply saddened by the logic of the other body in this matter—or the lack thereof. I am hopeful that they will see the light before the close of this Congress.

VOLUNTARY RESTRAINT AGREEMENTS ON STEEL IMPORTS

(Mr. APPLEGATE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, there has been very little success in getting foreign steel producers to abide by voluntary restraint agreements on their imports of steel products into the United States. We must start now to close some of the loopholes that some of these same trading partners are utilizing in shipping their products through small, developing nations that have no steelmaking industry in and of themselves.

I am today introducing legislation that will close these loopholes by denying generalized system of preference benefits to those countries that aid or abet in the transshipment of steel products produced by those nations that have already entered into or plan to enter into voluntary restraint agreements with the United States.

If we are truly serious in getting steel imports down to the level that the Reagan administration promised in 1984, then we must begin to put some teeth in the voluntary restraint agreement program. I would welcome the support of the Members of this Chamber who feel as I do about this very important problem and ask for your cosponsorship.

THE HELL IN AFGHANISTAN

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, there are horrible atrocities being committed whose perpetrators escape the condemnation they deserve through apathy and ignorance of the American press, pubic officials, and citizens.

Children are kidnapped for reeducation in a place thousands of miles away and worlds apart. Crops are destroyed by invading troops. Chemical weapons are said to be used against civilian populations in hope of dampening their will to fight. Bombs shaped as lighters, pens and even toys are littered about, with knowledge that children will be the most likely victims.

Mr. Speaker, these crimes and more are being committed every day against the proud and once free peoples of Afghanistan at the hands of the invading Soviet forces. Yes, we must be vigilant to avoid further deterioration of human rights in places as South Africa, China, Chile, and Romania. But we must not give up as lost, those people who face perhaps the most desperate human rights situation in the world today, the Afghan freedom fighters.

SENIORS: BEWARE THE TELEVISION PITCHMEN

(Mr. WYDEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the message from yesterday's Aging Committee hearing on private insurance supplements to Medicare was a simple one: Beware the television pitchmen.

Day after day, we see on our television sets celebrities and stars pitching insurance policies that promise the elderly so much. Invariably, they claim that just one call to a toll free number will guarantee modestly priced, quality insurance coverage to the older applicant.

Yet what the Aging Committee heard yesterday was that there is often a great gap between what the television advertisement says the policy covers and what it actually does cover.

Mr. Speaker, the stars who advertise these policies are not mean, evil people. Many have been involved in countless charitable and community endeavors. They may simply not be reading the policies they are advertising.

Given that this may be the case, I am writing to the stars and to their professional organizations to request that they take steps to review these policies more carefully before they endorse them. I am also going to ask the networks, their affiliates and the National Association of Broadcasters to be watchful for obviously misleading policies to supplement Medicare.

No Member of Congress wants America's elderly to waste money on Medicare supplement insurance policies that are worth little more than the paper they are written on. Let's all call on the stars and celebrities to become careful about putting their prestige and stature behind the insurance policies they endorse on the airwaves.

PAY RETENTION FOR FEDERAL BLUE COLLAR EMPLOYEES

(Mr. KOLBE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill that addresses a major concern for my district and that could become a problem for all of us in the very near future. My bill provides for a 2-year pay retention for Federal blue-collar employees who would be subject to a loss of pay due to a drop in the local wage survey.

As a result of the 1985 private sector prevailing wage survey in southern Arizona, blue-collar Federal workers in my district faced immediate pay cuts of up to 15 percent. The blame for this situation is placed on the elimination of over 600 jobs in the copper industry from the Tucson prevailing wage area. The preliminary report on the 1986 private sector prevailing wage survey indicates another reduction, although not as severe as 1985.

An amendment to the budget reconciliation package froze the 1985 pay cut. This pay freeze runs out at the end of this fiscal year. My bill would make all Federal blue-collar employees eligible to the pay retention provisions in title 5 of the United States Code that exist for regular civil servants.

This is an important piece of legislation that addresses a growing national problem. Last year Chicago and Louisiana narrowly avoided a similar situation. There are preliminary indications that there will be another round of reductions, with southern Arizona, Texas, and other single source economy areas to be the hardest hit. I ask my colleagues to support this legislation to save these hard working Federal employees from painful cuts in pay for arbitrary reasons.

MAINTAINING A NUCLEAR WEAPONS BALANCE

(Mr. DARDEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, we are at a crossroads in maintaining the balance of nuclear weapons between the United States and the Soviet Union. The proposed abandonment of SALT II raises the possibility of a new and costly arms race.

Certainly, the President has the power—as Commander in Chief—to respond as he deems appropriate to the treaty violations already committed by the Soviets. However, we should remember that removing all restrictions will only provide the Soviets an excuse to increase the pace of their arms buildup—and that their totalitarian regime will commit unlimited resources for weapons construction.

This body has gone on record as supporting continued adherence to the numerical limits of SALT II. I believe that path—along with the prompt negotiation of a new, comprehensive and mutually verifiable arms treaty—offers the best hope for avoiding a nuclear holocaust and fiscal disaster for both nations.

REMARKS OF ISRAELI FOREIGN MINISTER SHAMIR

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues, remarks by Israeli Foreign Minister Shamir during a June 17 visit to Holon, Israel, in a lecture to students.

We are mainly fighting against Arab terrorism. But we know that those organizations and others cannot cause much damage without being supported by states who help them with money, weapons, training areas, etc. That's why we believe the war against international terrorism—war in which the United States plays a leading role—is absolutely vital.

The U.S. attacks on Libya are of the utmost importance in that framework, and they have already deterred other states from walking along this path of supporting terrorism. International terrorism is an international monster that exceeds all bounds. We see this terrorism in Libya and we see it in other places such as Central America. We see it from Libya to Nicaragua.

We know that the PLO had assisted the Sandinistas and had cooperated with them in Nicaragua. The Sandinistas in turn have established a PLO base in Nicaragua. We welcome the American activities aimed at struggling with the danger of terrorism in that part of the world as much as we welcome the U.S. activities in Libya. There is a direct connection between Libya and Nicaragua, and this is a terror connection that spreads over continents and oceans. We believe that whoever is trying to deal with this threat has results and will have results.

Mr. Speaker, by contrast, last weekend the Foreign Minister of Iran was in Nicaragua,

THE NAVAJO-HOPI RELOCATION

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, Assistant Secretary of the Interior Ross Swimmer, the Director of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, recently issued a press statement declaring that "there will be no Federal action to evict the Navajos remaining on the Hopi partitioned lands on July 6." I am pleased that he finally made this statement publicly. I am concerned, however, that his statement is too little, too late to defuse the volatile atmosphere which permeates this issue. His statement is important, because it will help to counter the misinformation being circulated by groups trying to manipulate this tragedy for their own advantage. I am upset, however, by the timing of his statement. Coming only a few weeks before the July 6 date, Mr. Swimmer has done little to allay the fears and anxieties of the traditional Navajos who remain on the land. Had he made such a statement several months ago, these individuals, mostly older people, could have experienced far less anxiety about their future.

Congress has determined that no Navajo families on the disputed land can be relocated until such time as replacement housing has been provided for them. The real questions I would like to see Mr. Swimmer now address focus on his agency's role in the disaster which relocation has turned out to be and his plans for insuring that such disasters do not continue. There are stories and pictures which graphically depict the inadequacies of the Relocation Commission's and the BIA's attempts at relocating individuals and families. How, Mr. Swimmer, are you going to address these problems? As a concerned representative of Navajo people, I am requesting that the Interior Committee hold oversight hearings on relocation—its grisly past and the plans for its future.

July 6 is almost on us. Mr. Swimmer has spoken publicly to soothe public concerns. After July 6, the situation will not disappear—we will not forget the people involved. What faces us all next is, where do we go from here?

I have introduced a bill, H.R. 4872, to place a moratorium on forceable relocation of the Navajo's on this land. The bill would also establish a Presidential Commission of Navajo and Hopi elders, and Navajo and Hopi leaders and experts on the issue to try to develop a solution to the problem. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

ADOPTING A BUDGET RESOLUTION

(Mrs. JOHNSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, taxing and spending are the fundamental responsiblities of Government and nothing is more important than this Congress adopting a budget resolution before we go off for a 2-week recess.

Earlier this year, we took the low road and we let the 1986 cuts be driven by the formula in Gramm-Rudman. So I have senior citizens who no longer get Meals-on-Wheels because of that formula-driven, mindless budget. I have Head Start slots that were lost to children, but I saw regional offices making some economies but clearly able to do more.

What I am saying is that the mindless priorities that result from a formula-driven budget are intolerable. The only way they can be avoided is for us to take the responsibility to write a budget. That Gramm-Rudman snapshot that is going to be taken in August is going to be a measure, not of our rhetoric, but of our actions.

It is incumbent upon us to agree to a budget resolution before we leave so that we will be able to take those actions that will assure this Nation that we, the Congress, can plan both to reduce the deficit and to provide the vital services that our people need and that the free world depends upon. So I urge my colleagues to oppose adjournment until we have agreed to a budget resolution, the first vital step to adopting budget bills upon our return. The first vital step to avoiding Gramm-Rudman's hatchet.

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT

(Mr. ENGLISH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, this year, the Fourth of July will be a very special day for America. On the fourth, we will celebrate the 210th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence as well as the 100th anniversary of the Statue of Liberty.

There is another anniversary that falls on the fourth. The Freedom of Information Act was signed into law by President Lyndon Johnson on July 4, 1966. This year marks the 20th anniversary of the act.

The Freedom of Information Act plays an increasingly important role in the operation of our democratic society. The FOIA provides a means by which the public and the press can obtain information about how the Federal Government operates. The act is used regularly by those outside of Government who have no other way to obtain information.

The FOIA has been such a great success that now every one of the 50 States has enacted its own version of an open records law.

Mr. Speaker, an informed citizenry is essential to the American way of life. Democracy can thrive only in an open society. The Freedom of Information Act converts these ideals into enforceable rights. It has enabled Americans to live safer and healthier lives, and to govern themselves more efficiently.

The Freedom of Information Act is a modern American contribution to democracy, and it is fitting that we mark its anniversary each year on the Fourth of July.

FEDERAL ACCOUNTING PRACTICES REVIEW COMMISSION ACT OF 1986

(Mr. SHAW asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker—

I think it an object of great importance * * * to simplify our system of finance, and to bring it within the comprehension of every member of Congress * * * we might hope to see the finances of the Union as clear and intelligible as a merchant's books, so that every member of Congress, and every man of any mind in the Union, should be able to comprehend them * * * .

Although these words were spoken 184 years ago by Thomas Jefferson, the finances of the Union are anything but "clear and intelligible." To correct this situation I have introduced the Federal Accounting Practices Review Commission Act of 1986. This bill has the cosponsorship of all the Members of the House who are current or former certified public accountants.

Yesterday, the Government Affairs Committee of the other body reported out a bill which would establish such a Commission. They recognize, as we should, that it is time to bring our accounting practices up to the level envisioned by Thomas Jefferson in the 19th century before we start the 21st.

GRACE COMMISSION LEGISLATIVE PACKAGE

(Mr. ROEMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, today Grace caucus members in both the House and Senate are introducing a package of cost-saving legislation reflecting recommendations of the President's private sector survey on cost control—commonly known as the Grace Commission.

This package of bills is designed to save American taxpayers at least—let me emphasize that—at least $7 billion over the next 3 years. That's an honest, conservative estimate from the Congressional Budget Office, put together without any blue smoke, mirrors, or tap dancing.

I know $7 billion won't balance the budget. But it's a start and a good one. It's the kind of effort the average taxpayer back home expects of us in Congress.

As cochairman of the House Grace caucus, I realize not every Member is going to support every bill in our package. That's not our goal or our expectation. But we think we have a legislative package with the greatest potential for support—from the Grace caucus and the entire House.

As I said when we organized the caucus, I'm excited about this. I think we can do some real good, that we can save the taxpayers some money. Now, isn't that a radical idea?

DESIGNATION OF HON. THOMAS S. FOLEY TO ACT AS SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS UNTIL JULY 14, 1986

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

WASHINGTON, DC,
June 26, 1986.

I hereby designate the Honorable THOMAS S. FOLEY to act as Speaker pro tempore to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions until July 14, 1986.

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the designation is agreed to.

There was no objection.

THE PRESIDENT SHOULD ENFORCE LAWS PROHIBITING IMPORTATION OF GOODS MADE IN SOVIET SLAVE LABOR CAMPS

(Mr. WOLF asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, as we go home, back to our congressional districts for the district work period, and as we celebrate the Fourth of July, our independence and our freedom, we should remember something: We should remember that there are millions of Soviet citizens who are in Soviet prison-gulag prison camps for their religious and their political beliefs.

We should realize that in those camps they make, with slave labor, goods—chess sets, bubushka dolls, tea and other items that are imported into the United States.

A number of us Republicans and Democrats are sending a letter to President Reagan, asking him to urge and mandate that the Treasury Department enforce the law to prohibit import into the United States goods that are made in Soviet slave labor camps.

Mr. Shcharansky said when he was released:

Weak agreements only make those suffering behind the Iron Curtain more despondent. They are taking the tough line on the front; the least Western diplomats can do is to remember them in between the caviar and cocktail parties.

Mr. Speaker, I urge that we remember them over this Fourth of July recess, and we can do this by signing this letter to the President asking him to enforce the law.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY SELLS ELK HILLS OIL FOR HALF PREVAILING MARKET PRICE

(Mr. SHARP asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, today the taxpayers of the United States will lose $300,000 in revenues from the sale of oil from the Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserve.

Yesterday the taxpayers lost $300,000 as well as for many days before that. In fact, the U.S. Government will lose $300,000 every day until September 30, unless the Department of Energy rebids the current contracts for the sale of the oil from the U.S. Government oil field.

The General Accounting Office has reported that the Department is selling some Elk Hills oil for less than half the market price in that area. Some oil was sold for $6.30 per barrel at the same time our government was buying oil at $12.60 a barrel for the strategic petroleum reserve.

Department officials acknowledged the mistake; they are trying to revise the bidding procedures for the contracts to be let in October, but under the current contracts they may rebid those contracts and the Secretary must bite the bullet and help us save taxpayers' dollars.

CONGRATULATING THE HUNTS OF CHICAGO ON THEIR 50TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

(Mr. HAYES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor Mr. and Mrs. Wilson and Lula Hunt, two residents of the city of Chicago who will soon celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary.

The love and dedication the Hunt's have shared throughout their years together should serve as an example for many of our young people today, that marriages can succeed if two people put their hearts into it. I am certain their marriage has been a shining example to their family, their friends, and their neighbours. Fifty years for many of us is a lifetime. For the Hunts, it has been a lifetime of love, love for each other, and love for their family.

Mr. Speaker, I know my distinguished colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives will join me in wishing my constituents, Wilson and Lula Hunt not only a very, very happy 50th wedding anniversary, but also many more years of harmony and happiness together.

TAXPAYERS SHOULD OPPOSE SO-CALLED TAX REFORM

(Mr. MARLENEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend is remarks.)

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, the American taxpayers have one last chance. A more appropriate time could not have been provided than the Fourth of July recess when all of the elected Representatives will be home. This is the time for them to revolt, a time to say "no," a time to express their opposition to so-called tax reform which has passed both bodies of Congress. Those who are about jobs, those who are about generating investments, those who care about business should generate heat on their elected Representatives, heat aganst so-called tax simplification. The great flimflam is "Let's get rid of your protection against overtaxing abuse in exchange for a lower rate." Can visualize 2 years from now when they come back and raise that rate and you have no shelter, no protection?

Defeat so-called tax reform.

"CRACK"—EPIDEMIC IN NEED OF A CURE

(Mr. BIAGGI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, there is a very serious tear in the fabric of our society, and it's called crack—smokable freebase cocaine. It's killing our kids, and sending violent crime statistics sky high. Having just come onto the scene in the last year, crack is one of the most addictive drugs known to man.

What are we doing about this crisis? Tragically, very little. Under current law, a person must possess the equivalent of 15,000 doses of crack before they are subject to maximum penalties. I am introducing a bill today that would trigger maximum penalties for dealing in just a 15-dose amount, enough to get about five people addicted to the drug for life. My bill would also provide tough, enhanced penalties for crack traffickers who conduct business near schools, and who hire young people to do their dirty work—a common practice in the crack trade. Finally, it would establish a maximum penalty of up to life imprisonment if a person distributes crack and it results in death. I urge my colleagues to join as cosponsors.

BETRAYERS OF UNCLE SAM SHOULD NOT BE ABLE TO REAP PROFITS FROM THEIR CRIMES

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, the "Son of Sam" legislation was adopted by the Congress of the United States and now constitutes the law of the land whereby a convicted murderer who, while sitting in prison or for his dastardly crimes, could reap millions of dollars of profit by writing articles and newspaper stories and books on his experiences, thereby adding indignity and insult to the victim who already lies in the grave.

Today I am introducing legislation or beginning the circulation of the bill among you for cosponsorship which I can aptly call the nephew-betrayer of Uncle Sam, whereby the same kind of prohibition that we now apply against "Son of Sam" people should be applied to those who would betray the United States of America in the various espionage and treason trials that are going on. And those who have been convicted of those crimes against the national security of the United States should be brought under the same kind of prohibition.

So while they are resting in prison they should not be able to benefit from the writings and books that they might be called upon to execute. We want to divert those kinds of profits into crime victims compensation, just as we have done for "Son of Sam" dastardly crimes.

THE ORIGINAL IDEA BEHIND THE STATUE OF LIBERTY

(Mr. OWENS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, it is very important as we celebrate the centennial of the Statue of Liberty over this coming Fourth of July holiday that we understand the broadest and most profound meaning of that statue and the concept behind it.

One fact that has been lost in history seems to be the fact that the original conceiver of the idea, the conception of the idea of the Statue of Liberty came from a man named Edouard Rene Lefebvre de Laboulaye. De Laboulaye was very interested and concerned about slavery in the United States. He was the head of the French antislavery society and a friend of the American abolitionists.

The statue was conceived 20 years before it was actually executed. Bartholdi was a friend of De Laboulaye. Bartholdi attributes the idea of the statue to De Laboulaye. Most people do not realize this. But I have the verification and documentation from the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress. De Laboulaye was an admirer of President Lincoln. De Laboulaye conceived the statue not only as a tribute to the friendship between France and America and their joint enterprise in fighting for the American Revolution but also as a means to congratulate America for having freed its slaves. So as we celebrate this holiday, let us understand that the Statue of Liberty symbolizes liberty for everybody. It has a very broad meaning. We should not accept any narrow-minded conception of it, we should not accept a definition of the idea of liberty for an alien group. It belonged to everybody.

BOVINE GROWTH HORMONE

(Mr. GUNDERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that many of us in this Congress have spent a lot of time dealing with the surplus production of milk in this country. Today we have in place the whole herd dairy termination program trying to achieve a supply demand balance. Yet while we have that legislation under way, new technology is coming on board, the bovine growth hormone to increase the production of milk for a cow anywhere from 10 to 40 percent. Farmers in my district say this is the last thing that we need; we do not need that any more than a drunk needs another drink. Yet it is coming.

However, I would like to suggest to my colleagues today that I will be introducing legislation to respond to this, not to stand in the way of progress, not to outlaw new technology but rather to require that the Secretary does not OK for commercial sale bovine hormone until three things happen. Until the Food and Drug Adminstration has completed an environmental impact statement and until the Department of Agriculture has done two things. One, study the impact of this growth hormone on the Dairy Price Support Program and its cost to the Federal Treasury. And, most importantly, do an impact on what this bovine growth hormone will do the structure of American dairy agriculture, in particular our family farms across this country. I call it to the attention of my colleagues. I encourage them to join with me in simply asking for answers, nothing more, nothing less.

I JUST THOUGHT I WOULD SAY THANK YOU

(Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am not here to talk about a budget. We will be doing that later. That is kind of a surprise.

It is to thank people.

The other day I had to rush around with a slip to put something into effect that Congressman GARCIA and Congressman HANSEN are going to help me with in a minute.

The reason I want to talk about it is because I think all of us have somebody like this in our district.

This idea is that the bells are going to ring across America just after the Statue of Liberty has had her torch relighted. It is going to make the 3d of July "Let Freedom Ring Day."

It was an idea of a man in his eighties who bugged me unmercifully, who has worked for years on Fourth of July celebrations, who is not rich, who is not famous but who cares about stuff like this.

Every single one of us has a man or woman or men and women like this in our cities, our towns, our rural, and city areas.

I think that is special. I think that maybe that makes it all worthwhile. It is going to happen in a little bit. He is going to be happy. A new tradition is starting. Lots of people, Republican, Democrat, helped make it happen very quickly.

So, I just thought I would say thank you, thank you all very much.

BANK BRIBERY AMENDMENTS ACT

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3511) entitled "An act to amend title 18, United States Code, with respect to certain bribery and related offenses," with a Senate amendment to the House amendment to the Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendment to the House amendment to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment to the House amendment to the Senate amendments, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment to the Senate amendment numbered 3, insert:

"(d) Federal agencies with responsibility for regulating a financial institution shall jointly establish such guidelines as are appropriate to assist an officer, director, employee, agent, or attorney of a financial institution to comply with this section. Such agencies shall make such guidelines available to the public.".

Mr. CONYERS (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment to the House amendment to the Senate amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LELAND). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so in order to ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS] to relate briefly the theme of the bill and the contents of this legislation.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONYERS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3511 was initially passed by this House last October to address the problem of an overly-broad bank bribery provision enacted by the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984. That provision makes it a crime to engage in conduct that is neither morally blameworthy nor violative of accepted and common business and commercial practices. The provision not only exposes people to selective and vindictive prosecution, but also breeds disrespect for the law in general.

The other body took up our bill earlier this year and passed it with three numbered amendments. Two of those amendments made salutary changes in the bill and were readily acceptable. Amendment No. 3, however, raised some problems, and we attempted by formal negotiations to work out a compromise. On April 22, we sent the bill back, agreeing to amendments 1 and 2 as passed by the other body, and to an amended version of amendment No. 3. We continued discussions with the other body about amendment No. 3 and worked out a further modification of that amendment. The other body has not returned the bill with that modification. The bill as it presently is before us deserves the support of this body so that it can be sent to the President for signature.

Amendment No. 3 as originally passed by the other body would have required the Justice Department to issue a "unified set of guidelines for identifying conduct which is prohibited" by the bank bribery provision. The amendment also provided that "compliance or noncompliance" with the guidelines was "relevant but not dispositive in determining whether a violation of this section has occurred."

We in this body saw no need for such an amendment. The bank bribery provision as originally passed by the House provides adequate notice as originally passed by the House provides adequate notice of the prohibited conduct. The Subcommittee on Criminal Justice has not received complaints from anybody that our language creates doubt or uncertainty about what is required, and I am sure that the subcommittee would have received complaints if lack of clarity were a problem. Amendment No. 3, in short, seeks to provide a solution for what is not really a problem.

Nevertheless, in a spirit of compromise, we attempted to accommodate the other body by agreeing to a modified version of amendment No. 3. Our modifications were essential to avoid the serious problems created by amendment No. 3, as originally passed by the other body.

For example, a defendant's failure to comply with the guidelines is relevant, if at all, only on the issue of defendant's state of mind—i.e., whether the defendant acted "corruptly" within the meaning of the bank bribery provision. To show that a defendant acted corruptly, the prosecution must establish that the defendant acted with a specific intent to disobey the law. See H.R. Rep. No. 335, 99th Cong., 1st Sess. 6, nn. 24, 25 (1985). If the defendant did not know of the guidelines or had not read them, however, then the guidelines cannot be relevant, for they could not have affected the defendant's state of mind at the time the defendant engaged in the conduct. Amendment No. 3, nevertheless, would have mandated the relevance of the guidelines.

Our modifications to amendment No. 3 required that the Justice Department issue prosecutorial guidelines and make those guidelines public. The Justice Department objected to this approach, as well as to the original amendment No. 3, and we continued to negotiate about further refinements in that amendment. Those negotiations have resulted in a jointly drafted guideline provision.

The best approach, in light of our views and the Justice Department's, would have been to drop amendment No. 3, but that was acceptable to the other body. We did insist upon, however, and the other body accepted, the next best approach—permitting, but not requiring, the issuance of guidelines; giving the guideline drafters the greatest possible discretion to formulate the guidelines and not mandating that any guidelines that may be issued are automatically relevant to a prosecution under the bank bribery provision. Thus, the provision, which was jointly drafted, requires that Federal bank regulatory agencies, acting together, issue "such guidelines as are appropriate to assist an officer, director, employee, agent, or attorney of a financial institution to comply" with the bank bribery provision. Any guidelines that are issued must be made public.

This provision does not mandate the issuance of guidelines, for the bank regulatory agencies may determine that guidelines are not appropriate. In determining whether to issue any guidelines at all, those agencies can consider all relevant factors, including the time and expense necessary to draft and promulgate such guidelines; the likelihood, in the collective judgment of those agencies, that guidelines will significantly aid in ensuring compliance with the bank bribery provision; and the frequency of prosecutions under the bank bribery provision. The nature and specificity of the guidelines, moreover, is within the discretion of the bank regulatory agencies. Thus, those agencies may decide to issue guidelines that simply identify factors to be considered by a bank official in determining whether to accept something of value from another. Indeed, if the bank regulatory agencies decide that guidelines are appropriate, guidelines that identify factors to consider would probably offer the greatest assistance to bank officials in complying with the bank bribery provision.

Finally, the provision, in the interest of uniformity, requires that the bank regulatory agencies act together, so that any guideline that is issued will reflect the collective judgment of the bank regulatory agencies. Thus, any guideline issued under this provision will be relevant to any bank employee or official, no matter which bank regulatory agency regulates the bank with which that official or employee is affiliated.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS], the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, for his support and assistance in moving this legislation. There is a need to correct current law, and H.R. 3511 meets that need. I urge support for the bill.

Mr. GEKAS. Further reserving my right to object, Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his conscientiousness in bringing this matter to the attention of the House in such an expeditious manner.

Mr. Speaker, I remember very well when I introduced the legislation early in the session, which is the forerunner of what we have here today, I did so responding to the many horror stories that we heard around the country on innocent transactions between bank officials and customers, real estate agent and bank teller, secretary, if you will, in banking institution with a customer, in which it would be possible to convict either the customer or the secretary or the teller, of a crime where an innocent transaction of a presentation of a Christmas calendar as a gift or a luncheon or something that would be in the ordinary work-a-day world a totally innocent gesture.

Responding to that, our committee under the chairmanship of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS] I say to the gentleman, was able to hone in on rectifying this situation. The result is this bill, which says that those innocent transactions, unless it can be proved there was an intent to corrupt, should not be visited with the possibility of criminal action.

That is what we are about here today.

Further, when the gentleman from Michigan adds to his discription of the bill the fact that the Senate wanted to insert some guidelines to be part of the Federal agencies' part in regulating this particular aspect of it, I do believe that it was unnecessary, remains unnecessary, and it is possible of interpretation, I hope, that it will only take place when and if there are some ambiguities that arise that will require further explanation through regulations or guidelines.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GEKAS. Continuing under my reservation of objection, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONYERS. I thank the gentleman. I think the point of the gentleman is very important because what we are saying is, rather than take the entire Congress to a vote on a matter that is essentially technical, that we will leave that to the good judgment of the Federal banking agencies, who will be the parties that will make the ultimate decision, that this colloque between ourselves on behalf of the House of Representatives will indicate to them how we think this matter ought to be resolved.

I want to thank the gentleman for his initiating the legislation which led to what I think improves the Criminal Code in a way that makes it real.

Unless our criminal laws mean what they say, there is no way that we can expect to catch little fish and serious criminals, white collar crime, underworld crime, unless we continue to refine our statutes. I am indebted to my colleague, the ranking minority member from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS], and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, with that I withdraw my reservation of objection and ask that the legislation be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LET FREEDOM RING DAY

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 664) to designate July 3, 1986, as "Let Freedom Ring Day," and to request the President to issue a proclamation encouraging the people of the United States to ring bells on such day immediately following the relighting of the torch of the Statue of Liberty, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not object, but simply would like to inform the House that the minority has no objection to the legislation now being considered.

Mr. Speaker, under my reservation of objection, I yield to the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA].

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Utah for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to take a second, Mr. Speaker, because after today's session, most of us will be going back to our respective districts and we will not return here until July 15. But I think that over the next 2 weeks a great deal is going to happen across the country especially in the city of New York with the lighting of the Statue of Liberty and the unveiling of the Statue of Liberty on its 100th birthday.

I think it is significant what our colleague, the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. MARTIN] talked about. This proclamation, this resolution, was put forth by an average American, a person who, like millions of others, dreams of the moment in which they can pass a resolution on this floor.

It just seems to me that it is so appropriate that in New York we will be celebrating and we will let the freedom ring and bells will be ringing all over the United States, and that it would originate out of the Midwest. I think it is appropriate. I think that is what this country is all about.

So it is to that end that I would hope that all my colleagues, as we leave today, remember that it is the 100th birthday of the Statue of Liberty. We are completing the 99th Congress with this second session, and next year we will start the 100th Congress, another anniversary.

So lots of things are happening across America in 1986 and 1987, and I think it is a tribute to that gentleman who lives in Mrs. MARTIN's district, whoever he may be. We congratulate him on this fine resolution.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation of objection, I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I just want to thank everyone.

While they are celebrating in New York, let freedom ring will start in Mount Morris, IL, with Sandy Sandstrom.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 664

Whereas the United States has, for over two hundred years stood for liberty, justice, freedom, and opportunity;

Whereas the Statue of Liberty has, for one hundred years, symbolized the freedoms and liberties that we as a Nation so deeply cherish;

Whereas Liberty Weekend, a division of the Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Foundation, has requested that individuals and groups across the United States ring bells on July 3, 1986, immediately following the relighting of the torch of the Statue of Liberty in New York City; and

Whereas such ringing of bells across the United States in conjunction with the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the Statue of Liberty should inspire all Americans to honor our Nation's heritage: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That July 3, 1986, is designated as "Let Freedom Ring Day". The President is requested to issue a proclamation encouraging the people of the United States to ring bells immediately following the relighting of the torch of the Statue of Liberty which is scheduled to occur at approximately 10:53 p.m. on such day.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SENSE OF CONGRESS FOR A MOMENT OF SILENCE DURING OFFICIAL CEREMONIES FOR THE STATUE OF LIBERTY FOR RETURN OF AMERICAN CAPTIVES IN LEBANON

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 362) to express the sense of the Congress that a moment of silence be held during the official ceremonies for the Statue of Liberty for the return of the American captives in Lebanon, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not object. I would simply like to inform the House that the minority has no objection to the legislation now being considered.

Mr. Speaker, under my reservation of objection, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA].

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, on that same note, while we will all be celebrating here in the United States the 100th birthday of the Statue of Liberty, I think this resolution is timely and I think it is important, because there are Americans today who are being held captive through no fault of their own just because they are good Americans.

Mr. Speaker, the bottom line is that, while we are having a good time over this Fourth of July weekend, I would hope that we make it very clear that we have not forgotten these hostages and that this resolution is for that moment of silence.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in favor of the passage of House Concurrent Resolution 362, a resolution I sponsored to express the sense of Congress that a moment of silence to remember the United States hostages in Lebanon be held during the official ceremonies for the Statute of Liberty.

The relighting of Liberty's torch will be a great event for our Nation, an event celebrating our Nation's heritage of independence and freedom. However, these principles remain elusive for the five Americans who remain captive in Lebanon—Father Lawrence Martin Jenco, Terry Anderson, David Jacobson, Thomas Sutherland, and William Buckley.

Mr. Speaker, many of my colleagues and I have devoted many hours toward helping the families of these hostages and urging the administration to redouble its efforts to secure the hostages' release. How sad if our country forgets these Americans as it celebrates the birthday of its independence.

During the Fourth of July recess, we will return to our districts to join our families and friends. This holiday will be a time for all of us to reflect on the search for freedom and liberty which sparked our Nation's fight for independence. When we are visiting with our constituents during the recess, I urge my colleagues to take the opportunity to mention those Americans in Lebanon whose freedom remains only a dream. For the families and friends of Father Lawrence Martin Jenco, Terry Anderson, David Jacobson, Thomas Sutherland, and William Buckley, the Fourth of July will be yet another day of hope and remembrance.

Mr. Speaker, I invite my colleagues to join me in remembering the United States hostages in Lebanon and in renewing our Nation's efforts to secure the freedom and liberty of these Americans.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 362

Whereas the Statue of Liberty stands as a tribute to the principles of freedom;

Whereas this year, the United States will rededicate itself to the freedom and dignity of all people by relighting the torch of the Statute of Liberty;

Whereas on July 4, the United States will again celebrate its independence; and

Whereas Father Lawrence Martin Jenco, Terry Anderson, David Jacobsen, Thomas Sutherland, and William Buckley remain captive in Lebanon: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that during the official ceremony of the lighting of the torch of the Statue of Liberty, a moment of silence be held and that the light of hope for the return of the Americans held captive in Lebanon be rekindled.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO THE PREAMBLE OFFERED BY MR. GARCIA

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the preamble.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the preamble offered by Mr. GARCIA: In the last clause of the Preamble, strike out "Father Lawrence Martin Jenco, Terry Anderson, David Jacobsen, Thomas Sutherland, and William Buckley" and insert in lieu thereof "five Americans".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the preamble offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA].

The amendment to the preamble was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the various resolutions just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

SENSE OF CONGRESS IN SUPPORT OF A COMMEMORATIVE STRUCTURE WITHIN THE NATIONAL PARK SYSTEM

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 666) expressing the sense of Congress in support of a commemorative structure within the National Park System dedicated to the promotion of understanding, knowledge, opportunity, and equality for all people, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DELLUMS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL] to explain this resolution.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, this is a simple, bipartisan resolution, cosponsored by over 100 Members of the House, including the chairman of the Subcommittee on National Parks, Mr. VENTO, and the ranking Republican member of the subcommittee, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, and my counterpart, the ranking Republican member of the full committee, Mr. YOUNG.

I want to emphasize that this resolution involves no Federal expenditure. Its purpose is to encourage the National Council on Economic and Educational Development to develop a detailed plan for an Afro-American museum and cultural center.

The Council will focus attention on Afro-American history and will gather scholars, planners, and architects together to mold a specific plan for the center. At the same time, it will initiate a campaign to raise private funds to implement the plan.

The NCEED is a nonprofit, charitable, and educational organization incorporated in the District of Columbia. It is operated exclusively for charitable and educational purposes and has been recognized by the Internal Revenue Service as coming within section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code. The present membership of the board of directors includes:

Honorary Chairman: Lena Horne.

Board of Directors: Tom Mack, president; Johnny Johnson, treasurer; Phyllis Tate, secretary; Hon. MICKEY LELAND, Member of Congress; Hon. WALTER FAUNTROY, Member of Congress; Hon. Willie Brown, Speaker of the California Assembly; Carl Rowan, Jr.; and Broadus Butler, Ph.D.

Once this resolution is approved, it is my hope that the National Council for Education and Economic Development [NCEED] will begin to raise funds to make the necessary studies and to develop the plans that will be needed to make this concept a reality. The Council should develop a specific plan, including: Details for a structure; plans for perpetual operation and maintenance; estimate of funding requirements and the potential for private donations, and an outline of the role, if any, the Government should play in the future of the project.

The job of making this project a reality will be the responsibility of the NCEED. What we are doing is offering that organization encouragement and support.

The objective of this legislation is to help develop an understanding of Afro-American heritage and to help present and future generations to cope with the challenges of current-day society. This joint resolution is a step in that direction. We hope that, in the years ahead, we will have a structure, built with donated funds, which will tell this part of our history.

Mr. Speaker, I have no direct communication from the administration on this proposal, but letters have been received by NCEED from the Director of the National Park Service and the Secretary of the Interior supporting the concept of this measure. I feel it is appropriate to include them in the RECORD at this place.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 24, 1985.

Mr. TOM MACK,
President, National Council for Education and Economic Development, Inc., P.O. Box 24029, Washington, DC.

DEAR TOM: I am pleased to learn of your plans to raise a private endowment to finance a commemorative structure within the National Park System dedicated to research and educational/interpretive programs to foster understanding, knowledge, opportunity and equality of all people.

I applaud the goals of the National Council for Education and Economic Development, Inc. This private initiative is wholly consistent with the President's objective to encourage voluntary efforts by the private sector in the preservation and interpretation of America's heritage.

While we cannot commit the Department or the Park Service to provide funds or to endorse legislation that provides funds, we look forward to a beneficial working relationship with NCEED.

Sincerely,

DONALD PAUL HODEL.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, NATIONAL PARK SERVICE,
Washington, DC, June 19, 1986.

Mr. TOM MACK,
President, National Council for Education and Economic Development, Inc., P.O. Box 24079, Washington, DC.

DEAR TOM: I appreciated your recent briefing on the incorporation of the National Council for Education and Economic Development, Inc. (NCEED), a non-profit organization, having for its primary purposes examination of the economic, constitutional, legal and social conditions and ramifications of slavery; the history of Afro-Americans; promotion of education and understanding among all people of the American slave experience and its role in the history of the United States; and elimination of barriers of every kind and nature to learning and opportunity faced by disadvantaged children of all races.

You propose to raise an endowment to assure a permanent location of a commemorative structure within the National Park System, together with research, development, implementation and communication of educational and interpretive programs dedicated to understanding, knowledge, opportunity and equality for all people, and that my endorsement of this commendable project does not commit the National Park Service to provide funds or endorse legislation that provides funding.

I understand that your interpretive programs would be developed jointly with the programs of the National Park Service as we move to strengthen our own interpretive programs of the richness and diversity of America's natural and cultural heritage.

I applaud your creative initiative and am pleased to note the significant progress NCEED has already made in pursuit of your very worthwhile goals. The President strongly encourages voluntary efforts from the private sector. With the continued effort of dedicated volunteers, such as you, I am confident that, together, we can make a valued contribution to the preservation and interpretation of our shared American heritage.

With warmest regards and all good wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM PENN MOTT, Jr.,
Director.

Mr. Speaker, when carried to its ultimate conclusion, this resolution is only the first step toward erecting a significant pubic structure dedicated to Afro-American history and the heritage we all share. At this stage in the process, House Joint Resolution 666 represents recognition of the concept that there should be a place so dedicated, but it also is a positive contribution toward making the concept attainable.

Certainly there should be a place—probably in the National Park System—dedicated to Afro-American heritage. it should be a place for all Americans to learn and understand Afro-American history, but it should also be a place in which everyone can take pride. It should be a place which will reach out to young people of all races in a spirit of brotherhood and unity.

In these days, when there is so much bitterness and bloodshed, we, in America, should be proud that by working together, we have found better ways to achieve equality for our people. This is not to say that ours is a perfect society, but only that we are trying to make it better. House Joint Resolution 666 is another contribution to that effort.

As we look forward to the celebration of Independence Day and to the rededication of the Statue of Liberty, let us not forget the great principles that they symbolize. For over two centuries, this Nation has struggled to give real meaning to the phrase in the Declaration of Independence "that all men are created equal". Great progress has been made, but the ideal has not yet been fully achieved.

And let us not forget, Mr. Speaker, that the Great Lady in the Harbor of New York who gave hope to "the tired, the poor, the huddled masses" was not present to greet the ancestors of most black Americans of this Nation. Their hopes and lives were shaped by different and difficult times. And yet through all the turmoil of past centuries a spirit of brotherhood and a spirit of hope and liberty for which that Lady stands has held this Nation—with all its diversity—together.

Mr. Speaker, the ultimate purpose of this legislation is to bring pride in, and reality to, the principles upon which this Nation is founded and to bring understanding and new opportunity through education and knowledge. We hope it will help bring all people of all races closer together. This joint resolution is like a small seedling deep in the forest looking for light and nourishment to grow into something meaningful and beautiful. This joint resolution can lead to—and I believe will lead to—a lasting place to tell the story of Afro-American history.

Great strides start with little steps. I hope this House will join all of the cosponsors of this legislation in taking that first little step.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LELAND].

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution we are considering today is an important first step in the development of a commemorative structure dedicated to the history of black Americans and the institution of slavery in America and throughout the world. As envisioned, the commemorative structure will be privately funded and will consist of a museum and cultural center. It will be a living institution that will contribute to the education of all Americans. It will provide scholars with an opportunity for research, and visitors of all ages, races and nationalities with an opportunity to learn about an important, but often ignored, chapter in our Nation's history.

Mr. Speaker, the history of this Nation with regard to slavery and the treatment of black and other minority Americans has not always been a proud history. But, as a nation we have worked and continue to work to overcome the devastating human tragedy that resulted from slavery and racism. We must, however, never forget the costs of such practices.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to offer this legislation to my colleagues this morning. This joint resolution encourages and supports the efforts of the National Council for Education and Economic Development, Inc., to raise private funds for the development of the commemorative structure. Passage of this resolution will not result in the expenditure of any taxpayer dollars, but it will pay a considerable dividend to all Americans.

As we as a nation struggle to learn the lessons of our history, it is exceedingly appropriate that we support the National Council for Education and Economic Development. Every American will benefit from a structure dedicated to the promotion of understanding, knowledge, opportunity, and equality for all people.

Before yielding back to the gentleman from Arizona, I would like to thank the chairman of the House Interior Committee for his leadership on this legislation. I also would like to commend and thank Mr. VENTO, the chairman of the Subcommittee on National Parks, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, the ranking Republican member of the subcommittee, and Mr. YOUNG, the ranking Republican member of the Interior Committee for their support of this important legislation. Finally, I would like to thank and commend the efforts of the staff of the Interior Committee in preparing this legislation for consideration by the House.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state my endorsement of the spirit of House Joint Resolution 666. The experiences and accomplishments of Afro-Americans have not been appropriately included in American history. The National Council for Education and Economic Development, Inc. [NCEED] proposes to raise private funds to establish a living memorial to our Afro-American past to help remedy this. Their effort to construct such a museum will complement the National Park Service's historic sites, seven of which are specifically related to Afro-American history. Such a museum would also complement the excellent work the American Association for the Study of Afro-American History and Life has done for so many decades. Historic sites with other primary themes incorporate in them much Afro-American history that is not adequately interpreted to the public. This lack of recognition for black sites, structures and artifacts goes far beyond our Nation's parks. In spite of the enormous outpouring of scholarly research on black history, the public still has relatively little access to sites and museums of black history. The National Council for Education and Economic Development, Inc., is to be commended for its effort to recognize more fully this history so integral to American history.

I am supportive that Federal contributions be made to establish and develop this museum. I am concerned, however, that lands other than National Park Service lands be chosen for this museum and am therefore pleased that an amendment has been agreed to which directs the review of other land within the WDC appropriate for this site. Certainly we can all agree that the National Park Service's mission is not to create historic resources. Much as I believe in the need for better inclusion of Afro-American history in all of American history, we should review and question carefully whether this museum is placed under National Park Service jurisdiction. National Park Service experience and knowledge will be helpful in focusing the need and framing an appropriate program as envisioned along with other Federal, State, and private sector participation. It is my hope that this ferment and competition of ideas will achieve the laudatory goals of this joint resolution.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

PERMITTING USE AND LEASING OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS BY THE UNIVERSITY OF NEVADA

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 1625) to permit the use and leasing of certain public lands in Nevada by the University of Nevada, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object, but I will ask the gentleman to explain the legislation for the benefit of the Members of the House.

I yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL] for his response.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, this Senate-passed bill is simple and straightforward.

The lands involved here are lands that the University of Nevada has already acquired from the United States under the Recreation and Public Purposes Act.

As usual in such cases, the patent to the university contained restrictions on the uses to which the lands can be put.

The university uses the lands for its Desert Research Institute, and it plans for that use to continue. However, the university wants to arrange for the private sector to play a role in the research activities carried out on these lands, and it would also like to be able to enhance the funding available for the research institute.

To achieve these ends, the university wishes to be able to lease the lands to private concerns who would be involved in the research activities. However, the administration has interpreted the restrictions in the patent to preclude this sort of arrangement, even though it appears that in at least one case (involving the University of Utah) similar restrictions were interpreted as permitting a similar arrangement.

At our subcommittee hearing, the administration's witness testified that they believe that the university should be required to pay to the United States the fair market value of removing the restrictions now in the patent, if the university wishes to proceed with its plans to lease the lands. The administration's testimony was that this would mean a payment by the university of approximately $3 million.

Because of similar objections by the administration, the Senate amended the original bill so that the reversionary clause would remain in the patent but the university would be explicitly authorized to lease the lands. The university testified that this is acceptable to them, and that is what the Senate-passed bill now before us provides.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Senate-passed bill is a fair and equitable compromise. I believe that the administration's continued opposition is unreasonable. I urge the House to approve the bill.

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I support S. 1625 and am pleased that this legislation was passed out of committee and is now one step closer to enactment.

The lands described in S. 1625 were patented to the University of Nevada at Reno in 1972 and 1974 under the Recreation and Public Purposes Act. These lands are being used as a research park for Desert Research Institute, a component of the university, and a campus for a community college. This legislation will allow the university to lease these lands to public and private companies to engage in research and development programs that are compatible with the university's. There is no cost involved to the Government.

This is not a new concept. The University of Utah has a research park also operating under the Recreation and Public Purposes Act that leases land to the private sector for research purposes. To date, this venture has been very successful to the University of Utah, as well as the citizens of this country. This is the research park where the Jarvick artificial heart was developed and is made. In January of this year, Congress also permitted lands to be leased in Calcashieu Parish, LA, to be used as an industrial airpark. The ruling statute is the Recreation and Public Purposes Act.

This is a very important piece of legislation to Nevada. It will afford the university, whose research and development programs are largely publicly funded, to work closely with and benefit from collaboration with the private sector.

Thank you for your consideration and I urge passage of S. 1625.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 1625

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) notwithstanding the provisions of the Recreation and Public Purposes Act (43 U.S.C. 869 et seq.), the Secretary of the Interior shall permit the University of Nevada to use (either directly or by lease) the lands described in subsection (b) of this Act as a site for a research and development center.

(b) The lands referred to in subsection (a) are described as follows:

(1) T. 20 N., R. 19E, Sec. 25: Lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 11, SE ¼ NW ¼, NE ¼ SW ¼, Mount Diablo Meridian, Nevada, containing 309.11 acres; and

(2) T. 20 N., R. 19E, Sec. 25: Lots 6, 7, SW ¼ NE ¼, NW ¼ SE ¼, Mount Diablo Meridian, Nevada, containing 158.22 acres.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

DIRECTING SECRETARY OF INTERIOR TO CONVEY CERTAIN LANDS TO THE HUNTLEY PROJECT IRRIGATION DISTRICT IN MONTANA

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3005) to direct the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain lands, withdrawn by the Bureau of Reclamation for townsite purposes, to the Huntley Project Irrigation District, Ballantine, MT, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object, but I would ask the gentleman to explain the legislation for the benefit of the Members of the House.

I yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL] for his response.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs reported this bill favorably after adopting an amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the bill's sponsor, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MARLENEE].

The bill would direct the Secretary of the Interior to transfer to the Huntley Irrigation District a total of about 31 acres of lands, divided among five different tracts.

Each of the tracts is located in an unincorporated community in Montana and is used for recreational or similar purposes.

The transfer of these tracts to the local communities is not possible under applicable law because the communities are not incorporated. The Huntley Irrigation District, however, has the status of a municipal corporation under Montana law.

As reported, the bill includes standard language to make clear that there is no attempt to effect a change in the ownership of any of the minerals associated with these lands, and a reversionary clause of the type usual for transfers under the Recreation and Public Purposes Act.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is a meritorious measure, and one which is not controversial. I urge its passage.

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3005, which is a bill to convey title to approximately 32 acres of Bureau of Reclamation land, Federal land in Montana, to the Huntley irrigation project. The land is divided up into 5 parcels located in 5 small towns in Montana. The land is used as parks. I know of no opposition to the bill.

I would like to thank the gentleman for his support and urge approval of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3005, a bill to convey title to approximately 32 acres of Federal land in Montana to the Huntley irrigation district.

The land is divided up into five parcels located in five small towns along the Yellowstone River. The towns have been using the land as local parks since the early 1900's when the land was withdrawn for reclamation and irrigation purposes.

Under normal circumstances the 1906 Townsite Act would have allowed for automatic transfer of the lands to the towns for park purposes. However, the 1906 act required that the towns be incorporated.

The five towns have never reached the size which would warrant incorporation and the transfer was never made—a technicality which was completely overlooked at the time.

It was not until recently when the Bureau of Reclamation was reviewing its land records that the oversight was discovered. My bill authorizes the transfer to the water district which has the same status as a municipal corporation under Montana law which the act envisioned for the towns.

The lands have been maintained by the respective towns and considerable time and money has been spent to develop recreational facilities such as ball parks, walking trails, and picnic areas.

The Osborn Park is particularly interesting in that a group has located a museum on the site known as the Huntley Project Museum of Irrigated Agriculture. Using some historic buildings and constructing others, the museum has grown to where it now contains over 3,000 items dating back to the early homesteading days.

Section 3 of my bill, as amended by the committee, contains the standard type of reverter clause used in bills of this type to insure that the lands being conveyed are used for the intended purpose. In this case, the bill requires that they continue to be used for public park and recreational purposes, including the museum complex already located at the Osborn Park. It is also our intention in drafting the bill this way to allow such improvements as a waterslide which the community plans to construct. The parks are developed parks and these types of activities certainly fall within our meaning. I say this only to have it on record and I believe the chairman of the Public Lands Subcommittee will concur in my remarks.

I know of no opposition to our bill. The Department of Interior's Bureau of Land Management, testified in full support and I urge my colleagues to support it as well.

Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 3005

Mr. UDALL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I think we have adequately explained the bill and I know of no objection to it. I ask for approval of the amendment and passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

PROVIDING FOR SETTLEMENT OF CERTAIN CLAIMS RESPECTING THE SAN CARLOS APACHE TRIBE OF ARIZONA

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration in the House of the bill (H.R. 3526) to provide for the settlement of certain claims respecting the San Carlos Apache Tribe of Arizona.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the San Carlos Apache Indian Tribe for several reasons were unable to fully pay Federal unemployment taxes for the years 1975, 1979, 1980, 1981, and 1983 for some employees. The tribe has since implemented changes in its financial systems to prevent this happening again. The Internal Revenue Service subsequently assessed back taxes, penalties, and interest. Additionally, the IRS attempted to levy upon the trust assets of the tribe.

The Department of the Interior disagreed with the IRS on levying on trust assets and suggested that the tribe and the IRS negotiate an agreement for a settlement of the past tax liability. H.R. 3526 represents the final step in the agreed upon settlement.

The tribe has paid the back taxes in the amount of $827,260.71, and the IRS has waived all penalties and interest on penalties. That waiver was not contingent upon enactment of legislation. However, the IRS does not have the authority to waive the interest on the back taxes which is also part of the agreement. H.R. 3526 would grant congressional approval of the settlement, particularly the waiver of interest on back taxes.

I believe it is important to note that all parties agree that tribes, like any other person subject to the Tax Code, also have the right to negotiate with the IRS on settlements on back taxes. H.R. 3526 recognizes these principles, and I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the efforts of the gentleman from Arizona, Chairman UDALL, in arriving at a resolution for a tribe which is literally economically destitute and without this settlement would have faced severe difficulties in the ability for them to govern their tribe and assist their people.

□ 1205

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCAIN. I yield to the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. McCAIN] for his hard work on this matter. We could not have put it together without him. He has explained the bill adequately, and I ask for its passage.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 3526

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Congress finds that—

(1) the San Carlos Apache Tribe of Arizona and the Government of the United States entered into an agreement on May 15, 1985, to provide for the settlement of a dispute over certain liabilities owing to the United States;

(2) in partial fulfillment of this agreement—

(a) the tribe paid, in a timely manner, the unpaid liability claimed by the United States; and

(b) the United States has abated the penalties and interest on penalties from that liability; and

(3) the abatement provided for in this Act will complete the terms of said agreement.

SEC. 2. All interest arising from that liability which the San Carlos Apache Tribe of Arizona, as consideration, paid in full on May 16, 1985, is hereby abated and the tribe is released from any claim of the United States with respect to this matter.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3526, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 4420, MILITARY RETIREMENT REFORM ACT OF 1986

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the order of the House of June 24, 1986, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 4420) to amend title 10, United States Code, to revise the retirement system for new members of the uniformed services, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LELAND). Pursuant to the order of the House of Tuesday, June 24, 1986, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of Wednesday, June 25, 1986, at page 15590.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ASPIN] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILLIS] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ASPIN].

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring before the House the conference report on H.R. 4420—the Military Retirement Reform Act of 1986.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report culminates nearly two decades of attempts to modify the military retirement system. The change has been a long time in coming; it has had to overcome substantial opposition from some segments of the military services; and it has been the source of some concern among the men and women of the Armed Forces. However, the change we bring forward today is a good change and one that we can all support as good public policy.

Mr. Speaker, let me outline the provisions of the Military Retirement Reform Act for just a second. I would like to at this point also let the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILLIS] say a few words.

I would like to commend the gentleman from Indiana for his support on this issue and the Republican side for their understanding and counsel on this issue. This is a very, very sensitive issue in the military, and we all recognize the sensitivity of the issue, because of course of the implications for recruitment and for retention of our Armed Forces.

At a time of extreme budget constraint and at a time when we are changing retirement systems of civil service retirees, of the Social Security System, of private pension systems, we could not in good conscience not have done something about the military retirement system, which is costing a very, very great deal of money.

The trick, Mr. Speaker, of course is to change it in a way that does not do damage to the retention and the recruitment in the military services, and at the same time do something about saving some money.

The changes that we have here, I believe, and the gentleman from Indiana can talk about it himself, but I believe that we have accomplished some changes here that will do two things.

No. 1, it will put to rest for a time the whole idea about changes in the military retirement system, so that we need not have a lot of rumors going around among people in uniform that this or that provision of the retirement system is going to be taken away. I think that it is important that we put that issue to rest both within the Congress, within the administration, and of course within the Armed Forces, the uniformed Armed Forces.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to outline the provisions very briefly, and then I would like to yield to other Members.

Very briefly what we have here is a system that changes the amount that a person gets from retirement for the people who retire before 30 years of service. At the end of 20 years of service instead of 50 percent of base pay, you get 40 percent of base pay. A person who retires at the end of 30 years of service still receives the amount that he receives now, namely, 75 percent of base pay. So the cut is essentially for the people who leave the service after a career shorter than the full 30-year career.

Second, because of what was in the Senate bill and the compromise that was worked out with the Senate, we have an adjustment in the COLA. It was not in the House bill, it was in the Senate bill, and in the conference we agreed to the provision coming over from the Senate bill, an adjustment for COLA, a COLA adjustment that gives CPI minus 1, instead of the full CPI, for the retirees.

One provision should be noted, that at the age of 62 this bill allows for a recomputation of the retirement pay so that a person who is genuinely retired and is age 62—in other words, somebody who is not starting out on a second career like he would be at age 42—but somebody at age 62, the real retirement age, that person has the retirement pay recomputed both from the standpoint of the multiplier and from the standpoint of the cost of living.

It is, I think, a fair proposal. The savings are made in the COLA and they are made in the pay for people who retire with less than a 30-year career. There is, however, a catchup at age 62 so that people who are truly retired at age 62 are people who will be reimbursed then and start again from the higher base at age 62.

There are a couple of other provisions in this bill, and just to make sure that the Members who are voting on this know, we do deal with one other issue in this that is important, and we have taken up the time of the House on it before, which is the issue of unauthorized appropriations.

I would like to commend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CHAPPELL] for their cooperation in resolving this issue. We have an enormous struggle with the Senate, and I do not want to take up the time of the members of the committee any more on the issue, except to say that in this bill we also resolve the issue of the items that were not authorized but were appropriated, and we have a resolution to that issue.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to the House the conference report on H.R. 4420—the Military Retirement Reform Act of 1986. This conference report culminates nearly two decades of attempts to modify the military retirement system. The change has been a long time in the coming; it has had to overcome substantial opposition from some segments of the military services; and it has been the source of some concern among the men and women of the Armed Forces. However, the change we bring forward today is a good change and one that we can all support as good public policy.

The uniformed services retirement system has existed essentially unchanged for the last 50 years, and its basic form was established over a century ago. During the past two decades, the uniformed services retirement system has come under increasing scrutiny and attack. By recommending the changes included in this conference report, the conferees are attempting to put the issue of structural reform of the uniformed services retirement system to rest for the foreseeable future. The conferees believe that, as a result of these changes, the criticism of the uniformed services retirement system will subside and the concerns of service members regarding the uncertainty of retirement benefits can be eased.

I want to emphasize that the changes to the uniformed services retirement system included in this conference report would apply only to those who first become members of a uniformed service on or after August 1, 1986. No member who had joined a uniformed service before that date—much less any current retiree of a uniformed service—would be affected.

The conferees agreed to change the uniformed services nondisability retirement system as follows:

First, the formula for the multiplier would remain unchanged—2.5 percent for each year of service up to 30 years of service. However, for members who retire with less than 30 years of service, the multiplier would be reduced by 1 percentage point for each year of service the member retired less than 30. The reduction would be eliminated when the member reached age 62.

Second, the cost-of-living adjustment mechanism would be changed to provide CPI minus 1 for life with a one time restoral in the purchasing power of the annuity at age 62.

The change to the cost-of-living adjustment mechanism would apply to all annuities—nondisability, disability, Reserve, and survivor benefits.

Although the change to the military retirement system does not arrive with a great deal of fanfare, it is one of the most significant legislative actions affecting the Department of Defense in decades. The principal objective of the change is to make the military compensation system more efficient. There is no question in my mind that the military personnel system as a whole, will be more effective as a result of this change, and the savings will be substantial—approximately $3 billion per year out of a total of $18 billion for military retirement.

Increasing efficiency is the principal objective shared by the major reforms that are being considered by the Committee on Armed Services: Department of Defense reorganization and change to defense acquisition policy. The changes we make today—and the changes in the other areas that I hope we will make soon—are of historic significance. I do not recall when so many changes of this magnitude have been considered within such a compressed period of time.

UNAUTHORIZED APPROPRIATIONS

The conference report also addresses the issue of unauthorized appropriations. As the Members will recall, the Defense Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1986 provided $5.5 billion of appropriations in excess of the levels authorized. This is an issue that is of interest, obviously, to the authorizing and appropriating committees in both Houses.

The conference report authorizes the obligation and expenditure of the majority of the amount of unauthorized appropriations. Informal discussions between the four committees involved in this issue did not produce an agreement on the fundamental issue of the level of detail at which authorization and appropriations are provided. On this issue the four committees agreed to disagree. A consensus was reached only on the specific programs that should be denied authorization. Further resolution of the fundamental issue will need to be addressed in another forum.

Because the funds involved in the issue of unauthorized appropriations had previously been scored, the effect of the action of the conferees is neutral with regard to budget authority and outlays in the national defense function.

I would like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to the Committee on Appropriations—particularly to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN], the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CHAPPELL], the chairman of the Defense Subcommittee, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE], the ranking Republican of the Defense Subcommittee—for their cooperation and assistance in resolving this issue of mutual interest. The working relationship between our committees has always been excellent and that spirit prevailed in the discussions leading to the resolution of this issue.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to express, on behalf of the conferees, our appreciation for the assistance we received from a number of individuals during our deliberations on military retirement reform.

Of particular note are the contributions made by Toni Hustead, the chief actuary for the Department of Defense. Her assistance in understanding the complex issues related to accrual accounting, her detailed knowledge of retirement plans, and her help in understanding the cost ramifications of a wide variety of changes to the military retirement system were invaluable to the deliberations not only of the conferees but of the Committee on Armed Services. She is an extraordinarily competent and untiring professional, and the product we present today has substantially benefited from her participation.

Similarly, Col. Fred Pang, Director of Compensation, Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Force Management and Personnel, described and defended the Department's position consistently and forcefully but simultaneously assisted us with his insight and expertise in evaluating the impact of various options throughout the committee's consideration of this critical issue. His ability to coalesce divergent views into a cohesive position was essential to the eventual resolution of this issue.

Lt. Col. Mike Gaffney, Chief of the Entitlements Division in the Personnel Plans Directorate of the U.S. Air Force, played a key role in the development of the final agreement reached by the conferees. His ability to step back and take an objective view of the situation allowed him to influence the outcome in a substantial way. While others were stonewalling the process, he recognized the constraints and worked within them to achieve a resolution favorable to the future men and women of the Armed Forces.

The committee would feel far less comfortable with the final product of its deliberation had it not been for the herculean efforts of the Congressional Budget Office—in particular the efforts of Neil Singer, Elizabeth Sterman, Chris Frederiksen, and Robert Kornfeld, all under the direction of Bob Hale, Assistant Director for National Security. They produced what must have seemed like endless options for the committee's consideration. The results of their analyses were absolutely critical to the committee's understanding of the complexities of the military retirement system. Changes to a system as substantial as this must necessarily be made within an environment of pervasive uncertainty. The range of analysis reduced significantly the risk normally associated with such a change.

Finally, I would be remiss if I did not note the outstanding contribution made by Bob Cover of the Office of the Legislative Counsel. Because he has always served the Congress so well, we tend to overlook the individual effort he puts forth on every project. The complexities of the laws governing uniformed services retirement can not be overstated. We focus on the major policy issues, often forgetting that the decisions at that level must be translated into the fine detail contained in statute. That the policy works—and works so well—is directly attributable to the efforts of Bob Cover. On this legislation, he has outdone himself again, and we are—as always—impressed and greatly appreciative.

Mr. Speaker, the change to the uniformed services retirement system contained in this conference report is good public policy and something all of those who worked on it can look to with pride.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve the balance of my time and let the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILLIS] be heard upon this issue.

Mr. HILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by thanking my distinguished chairman for his kind words in his statement concerning the service that our side of the aisle has rendered in this matter with a difficult issue and one which took a considerable period of time to be resolved.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 4420—the Military Retirement Reform Act of 1986.

This is unquestionably landmark legislation. Changes to the military retirement system have been under consideration for 20 years. This consideration has from time to time raised concerns among members of the military regarding the stability of their retirement benefits. The change we are proposing should put this uncertainty to rest.

The change will result in reduced retirement benefits for individuals who enter active duty for the first time in the future. I emphasize that the changes do not apply to anyone currently on active duty. The change may have an adverse impact on the retention, although that will not be known for at least 10 years in the future. I am convinced, however, that even if additional special pays and incentives are required to offset a decrease in retention, the net savings will be substantial. We have, in other words, provided a more efficient system overall.

The change is based on the desire of the conferees to keep the retirement annuity about the same as it is today for those with 30 or more years of service and for all retirees in old age. The change is directed specifically to the years between the time the member retires and the time the member reaches age 62. The vast majority of military retirees continue to work during this period, and in fact, the Nation benefits from this continued employment. But in old age, the current retirement system provides annuities consistent with those provided by other major employers.

Within this framework, the conferees agreed to provide a two-tiered retirement annuity; a reduced annuity between the time the member retires from the uniformed service and normal retirement age and an unreduced annuity thereafter.

The chairman has explained in very adequate detail how this works. I am not going to reiterate it at this time. I just wish to say that I think that it is a very good piece of legislation. It took a great deal of time both for the staff and in hearings, both this House and the other body have made major contributions to it, and I think that the Nation will be well served by it, the military will remain strong, and that we will provide an adequate retirement for those who serve us so well, particularly in their elder years.

I am happy to highly recommend it to the House. I am very proud to be associated with it. Again I thank my chairman for his leadership and his kind words in its behalf.

Mr. Speaker, a member who retires with 20 years of service would receive retired pay based on a multiplier of 40 percent from retirement to age 62 and retired pay based on a multiplier of 50 percent thereafter. For a member who retires with 30 years of service, no reduction in the multiplier would be made and retired pay would be based on the maximum multiplier of 75 percent.

The original House provision was designed to encourage continued service beyond 20 years by reducing the multiplier available at 20 years of service. This objective was maintained in the conference agreement. We expect more members will want to stay beyond 20 years of service. In fact, if they stay for 30 years, the structural change to the retirement system will not affect them at all.

The resolution on the cost-of-living adjustment provision attempts to conform to the resolution of this issue in the recent changes to the civil service retirement system while taking into account the fundamental underlying differences in the two systems. The change provides for an annual adjustment equal to the percentage change in the Consumer Price Index less 1 percentage point; the loss in purchasing power would be restored at age 62. Of particular importance is the restoral in the purchasing power of the military annuity at age 62. Because of the extended period of time elapsing between retirement and old age, the annuity would erode in value without a restoral provision. Thus, the objective of providing an adequate old age annuity would not be met. The provision agreed to by the conferees would restore the purchasing power and ensure its adequacy.

Mr. Speaker, on the whole, this change represents prudent public policy. My only regret is that it took so long to achieve. I urge the Members to support the conference report.

I just wish to say that I think it is a very good piece of legislation. There was a great deal of time spent by the staff in hearings both by this House and the other body. They have made major contributions to it. I think that the Nation will be well served by it. The military will remain strong and we will provide an adequate requirement for those who serve us so well, particularly in their elderly years.

I am happy to highly recommend it to the House. I am very proud to be associated with it.

Again, I thank my chairman for his leadership and his kind words in my behalf.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield whatever time she may consume to the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Basically, I want to recommend to people that they do vote for this conference report. I think it is very important that that be made clear, but I also want to talk just a little bit about what we are doing. Everything that we are seeing here is absolutely accurate, but we are only looking at the parameters of the public sector.

I chair the Civil Service Subcommittee. Yes, indeed, all people in the public sector are really feeling the squeeze as we come after their pensions, as we redo the COLA's, as we hold back on pay increases and as we do all those things.

I think the thing that bothers me the most in the military sector is if you look at the contractors and if you look at what is happening to their pensions and their pay, you would find that they are not going through the same type of backsliding that we are seeing in the public sector across the board for retirees, for active duty people, for the civilian sector, the Foreign Service and everybody else.

I think that it really is something we have got to focus on in this body eventually or we really are not going to have the kind of quality people that we need. I think we have very many patriotic people who want to serve but at some point they cannot afford to serve as we chip away.

Now, this is just one more little chip, and as I say, I think they did everything they could to make it as fair and as painless as possible, but it just keeps going in erosion.

Again, the people making money out of this defense budget are not the people in uniform, whose lives are on the line, but the people in three-piece suits who are fighting the wars in air-conditioned board rooms. I think that is important to point out.

We on the Post Office and Civil Service Committee looked at the whole Grace Commission report. You remember that. They came out very, very firmly against military retirement and other retirement programs and talked about what a ripoff it was and on and on and on, with all sorts of adjectives, pounding and screaming. We looked at the different public sector retirement programs compared to J. Peter Grace & Co.'s retirement programs, and guess whose turned out to be better? J. Peter Grace. Funny that they did not look at that, but they were only looking at the public sector parameters and that is what we are doing today, too.

At some point, at some point we have to look at this compared to the private sector parameters because we just keep losing more and more people and I think it is going to hurt.

In the whole personnel area, I think we are seeing more and more things coming around. We are seeing that we probably cannot do a pay increase next year. That is very troublesome. Obviously, that is not in this bill, but that is something we may have to look at if we do not get more money.

We are seeing that people who are overseas with their children and think they are going to be back home in time for school may not be, because we may delay their move back, which is going to unsettle them terribly because we do not have the money for moves, so we make the time for them to stay there longer.

We see that the falling dollar overseas means that people stationed overseas in the Foreign Service and in the military service and civilian service are taking tremendous paycuts, because what they are seeing is the dollar falls faster than we can ever adjust it, so they are taking paycuts to the tune of a third or more.

The private sector response to all these things is much faster and more flexible.

We do have to worry about retention and we do have to worry about quality and we do need to look at the whole package in comparison to the private sector.

So while I sponsor this, I think we have done the best job we possibly can. I do think we have to be forewarned that very soon we have to line up all of this and compare it to the private sector or we will wake up and find out that we really have done great harm to the service in America and really take quality people out.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, I just would like to make one more comment before we vote on this provision.

I would like to pay tribute to a member of the House Armed Services staff, the gentleman who is sitting next to me here, Mr. Bob Emmerichs, who has done the work on this issue, who is in fact the real brains behind the way in which we managed to corner the system to be here in the process of actually voting on this bill today. I would certainly like to say that without him we would not be voting on this measure today and I would like to give him my heartfelt thanks and share a little recognition to this very important member of the Armed Services Committee.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report on the bill, H.R. 4420.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the concurrent resolution.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, is the resolution not debatable under the rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were yeas 215, nays 189, not voting 29, as follows:

TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS TO NATIONAL FOUNDATION ON THE ARTS AND THE HUMANITIES ACT OF 1965

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 5036), to make technical corrections to the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

ALLOCATION LIMITATIONS FOR EDUCATION OF THE HANDICAPPED ACT

SEC. 2. Section 611(a)(5)(A)(i) of the Education of the Handicapped Act is amended by inserting after "children" the first time it appears the following: "aged five to seventeen, inclusive,".

Mr. JEFFORDS (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object, and I will yield to the gentleman from Montana so that he might explain what this is.

As I understand it, this is the bill as it passed the House with one amendment which deals with a problem on a cap with respect to the funding of Public Law 94-142.

What we are doing here is logically making the denominator of that formula consistent with the numerator so that we do not have a problem in the sense that they match as far as the universe which they are including. In other words, I believe in the numerator we have a larger universe than we do in the denominator.

This is causing a cap problem in at least one State, I believe the State of Massachusetts, and it would be perfectly consistent with the purposes of Public Law 94-142 to make this correction.

I ask the chairman if that is his understanding.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFORDS. I yield to the gentleman from Montana, chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct.

In the fall of 1985, the Subcommittee on Select Education, which I chair, held hearings on the reauthorization of the Education of the Handicapped Act. One of the issues I asked witnesses to comment on was the unintended adverse effects of the 12-percent cap included in part B of the legislation (Public Law 94-142).

Part B authorizes Federal aid to be distributed among States under a formula, based primarily on the number of handicapped children, aged 3 through 21, in each State served by elementary and secondary schools. Current law also specifies that the number of handicapped students counted for purposes of determining a State's allocation may not exceed 12 percent of that State's total population between the ages of 5 and 17, even if the State's own special education law covers handicapped children aged 3 through 21.

This discrepancy has the unintended effect of discouraging States from expanding the age group receiving special education to cover children in the 3-5 and 18-21 age group. H.R. 5036 includes an amendment that addresses this unintended effect.

The amendment retains the 12-percent cap but provides that for purposes of determining whether the cap has been reached, the number of 5-through 17-year-old handicapped students will be divided by the State's 5-through 17-year-old population.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFORDS. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and have asked the gentleman to yield for the purposes of supporting and explaining this legislation with the revised calculation of the special education student ceiling, which will enable States which have chosen to provide special education services to students below the age of 5 and above the age of 17 to do so without being unfairly penalized by the current calculations.

The proposal is essentially, as I understand it, an updating of the original 12-percent cap necessitated by the desired expansion of special education in the direction of younger and older students with handicaps. It is good public policy to expand special education to those students who are over 17 and under 5.

While we cannot and should not radically change the Federal funding, we can remove the penalty that is currently in law for doing so.

So our goal in placing the 12-percent cap on the number of students who can be identified as handicapped for the purpose of receiving Federal assistance was to direct special education services to those in the greatest need of specially designed instruction.

The formula, the way it has worked, has worked an unintended penalty on one State and I commend the gentleman from Montana for helping to correct that penalty.

I would also commend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] who brought this situation to the attention of the Subcommittee of Select Education. His interest and his support of Public Law 94-142 over the years has been a critical ingredient of the success of that program and in the lives of handicapped children around the country.

Massachusetts, itself, has been a leader in special education, beginning with chapter 766 and continuing today with this revised 12 percent formula.

I thank the gentleman for yielding and do support this needed change.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, purely for the purposes of saying that we do not intend to object, and again thanking both gentlemen for their brilliant elucidation of the meritorious amendment.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the distinguished gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT], for agreeing to act on this important legislation today.

As they are well aware, this bill contains a provision that is very near and dear to me, and to the people of Massachusetts.

We have acted on many important pieces of legislation these last few days before the recess, but, for me, none of them has more critical significance than the one we are acting on now.

When the President signs this bill into law, he will take us one more step toward making the Education of the Handicapped Act a truly constructive, responsive, and beneficial law for the special children of our country.

Before today, the Federal Government provided an allotment for each handicapped student a State served. However, when the number of those children exceeded 12 percent of the State's normal school age population, that assistance was cut off.

This existing formula recognizes neither the additional time it may take to provide a handicapped child with the tools to operate in our society, nor our ability to intervene early on in the lives of these children to actually prevent early disabilities from becoming lifelong handicaps.

Six months ago, in response to a plea from the Massachusetts Commissioner of Education, I introduced legislation to correct these inequities and to send a clear Federal message that we would help the States provide all handicapped students with an equal education.

After 6 solid months of work and negotiation, and with the cooperation of the authorizing committees on both sides of the Capitol and the people downtown, we have reached an agreement that will temporarily put an end to these inequities.

Again, let me thank the chairman and ranking members of the subcommittee on behalf of all handicapped students in Massachusetts who would have gone unserved if this important legislation had not been enacted today.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate amendment just concurred in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

EDUCATION OF THE DEAF ACT OF 1985

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 1874) to authorize quality educational programs for deaf individuals, to foster improved educational programs for deaf individuals throughout the United States, to reenact and codify certain provisions of law relating to the education of the deaf, and for other purposes and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will not object, but I reserve the right to do so in order to explain this legislation and to express my support of it.

Mr. Speaker, first, under my reservation, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON].

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I support this particular legislation, and I encourage my colleagues to vote for it.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my wholehearted support of S. 1874, the Education of the Deaf Act. Serving as a Congressional Trustee of Gallaudet College with my friend, Representative DAVE BONIOR, of Michigan, for the past year, it has been an honor and rewarding opportunity for me to be associated with Gallaudet College and this legislation before us today.

S. 1874 "authorizes quality education programs for deaf individuals," fostering "Improved educational programs for deaf individuals throughout the United States."

Opening its doors to hearing-impaired individuals in 1964, Gallaudet College has grown to serve as an international educational symbol. Gallaudet College continues to deliver outstanding leadership, opportunities, programs, and vision for the hearing-impaired individuals of all ages.

Gallaudet College has evolved throughout its history as a multifaceted educational establishment offering learning opportunities for preschool youngsters at the Kendall Demonstration Elementary School [KDES], to the high school students at the Model Secondary School for Deaf [MSSD], to the extensive work occurring at the Gallaudet Research Institute [GRI]. This certainly is an open and innovative learning environment for Gallaudet students, facilty, and administrators.

Education, outreach, and research—cornerstones of the Gallaudet College mission—are clearly evident through the ageless activities executed on the main campus in Washington, DC, and five educational extension centers throughout the United States.

The unique aptitude, potential, and talent of hearing-impaired individuals is certainly a wonder. Gallaudet College continues to enhance and challenge the talents of hearing-impaired Americans, opening doors previously closed to the hearing-impaired. Gallaudet College's success is equally visible through the high percentage of graduate placement and careers of its many alumni.

For the first time in Gallaudet's 122-year history, the college will begin to admit undergraduate students without hearing-impairments this academic year. Believing that hearing students entering hearing-impaired related occupations would be well served by undergraduate programs that bring them early on into direct contact with hearing-impaired individuals, the Gallaudet College Board of Trustees approved hearing students' admittance last year.

A limited number of hearing transfer students will be accepted into baccalaureate programs related to the needs of the hearing-impaired, such as education, physical education, psychology, sign communications, and theater. Applicants must have completed at least 2 years at another institution of higher learning and will be expected to learn and/or know sign language, a skill used in all Gallaudet College classrooms.

Gallaudet College has been admitting hearing students into its graduate programs. Since 1891, more than 1,200 educators of the deaf have been trained at Gallaudet College, 70 percent of whom are hearing. Nearly 800 of these educators are working in mainstream situations.

Gallaudet College has the only program in the United States that educates and trains rehabilitation counselors for hearing-impaired and, to date, 80 percent of the graduates from that program are hearing. Gallaudet College also awards an associate degree in sign interpreting and, likewise, nearly all the recipients are hearing.

Responding to oversight hearings on deaf education conducted by the Senate last year, Gallaudet College is broadening its constituency to include not only a very limited number of hearing students in undergraduate programs, but is also reaching out to several populations traditionally underserved, such as international hearing-impaired students, older Americans with hearing impairments, profoundly deaf minority, and multihandicapped individuals. Serving more diverse constituencies is a goal of the Gallaudet College master plan to increase enrollment in the future.

I strongly encourage my colleagues to join me in support of this legislation allowing Gallaudet College to continue, as a university, in its prestigious heritage of improving the quality of life for the hearing-impaired, their families, and communities.

Mr. BARTLETT. Further reserving my right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR), the chairman of the subcommittee to explain the legislation.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend, as my colleague from Wisconsin has just done, the gentleman from Vermont, the gentleman from Texas, and, of course, the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS], for the fine job that they have done on the Education of the Deaf Act that we have before us.

Mr. Speaker, 170 years ago, two men set sail for America from France. One was a deaf Frenchman, Laurent Clerc; the other, a hearing American minister, the Reverend Thomas H. Gallaudet.

During the Enlightment, education for the deaf had flourished in France, and Reverend Gallaudet went to France to learn sign language and the techniques of deaf education.

The two men were now coming to America, hoping to found an American school for the deaf. As Laurent Clerc described it: "We went the voyage to America in useful employment. I taught Mr. Gallaudet the methods of signs, and he taught me English."

From that partnership, indeed, from that voyage, sprang education for the deaf in America. Laurent Clerc and Thomas Gallaudet founded the first school for the deaf in Amerca just 1 year later, in 1817.

In 1864, Thomas Gallaudet's son, Edward Miner Gallaudet, founded the first college for the deaf in the entire world. Today, Gallaudet College still stands as the single academic institution serving hearing-impaired people through a mission of teaching, research, and public service.

Laurent Clerc and the Gallaudet family ushered in a golden age for the hearing-impaired in the United States. At the end of the Civil War, there were 26 schools for the deaf in this country.

Today, in 1986, we are in the midst of a second renaissance, which began in the 1960's. It has been a period of new pride and accomplishment for hearing-impaired people.

But each generation of hearing-impaired Americans must renew the struggle for dignity and independence. It is a place where both the national and international deaf communities come together to shape a viable future. And through its research institute, its five regional centers, and its prodigious outreach efforts at the elementary and secondary levels, Gallaudet truly touches the lives of hearing-impaired Americans of every age.

We know that deafness is not a disability like other disabilities. It is a disability that strikes directly at the ability to communicate, and so to learn. Deaf people must first create a language out of silence, and only then can they begin the formal tasks of learning.

Many fail. A recent study found that deaf high school students in general performed at the fourth-grade level in reading, and at a sixth-grade level in arithmetic (their best subject). Thirty percent of adult deaf Americans are illiterate, according to a 1974 survey.

Of Gallaudet's approximately 2,000 students, around 1,725, or some 85 percent, are prelingually deaf. That is, they were either born deaf or became deaf before they acquired a language.

Despite their disability, those students will not only graduate from Gallaudet, they will go on to succeed in the competitive world of the hearing. I'd like to share just a few compelling statistics with you:

Gallaudet's graduation rate, near 90 percent, was the highest of all deaf programs surveyed in a recent GAO report;

Of all the deaf college graduates in this country—mind you, out of all of them—two-thirds received their degrees from Gallaudet College;

The median income of Gallaudet graduates is about equal to the national average, and over time, the unemployment rate of Gallaudet graduates is actually lower than the national average for hearing America.

One hundred and seventy years ago, deaf education was born in a rare partnership between a deaf teacher and a hearing minister. If deaf education is to continue to grow in America, then we must constantly renew that partnership.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I am proud—both as a Gallaudet Trustee and a Member of Congress—to be an original cosponsor of the Education of the Deaf Act of 1985. This important legislation will provide an opportunity for increased visibility and a new vigor in the higher education community on behalf of deaf persons. For Gallaudet, it will mean the granting of university status and clearly, by any standard of recognition, this unique and historic institution deserves to take its place among the respected universities of the world.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to speak on behalf of the Education of the Deaf Act of 1985. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation which will continue that very special partnership begun nearly two centuries ago on a voyage to America that forever changed the course of education for hearing impaired people throughout this country and abroad.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friends in the minority for their willingness to move in this fashion with S. 1874, the Education of the Deaf Act, which is an important piece of legislation recently passed by our colleagues in the other body, and I commend their fine work, exemplified through this legislation. S. 1874 authorizes quality education programs for deaf individuals, fosters improved educational programs for deaf individuals throughout the United States, and reenacts and codifies certain provisions of law related to the education of the deaf.

I appreciate the time and effort taken by the other body to provide us with a legislative vehicle to examine, improve, and expand educational opportunities for deaf Americans. S. 1874 is such a vehicle. The bill was introduced on November 21, 1985, and has enjoyed bipartisan support. It was considered by the Committee on Labor and Human Resources and its Subcommittee on the Handicapped and on May 6, 1986, the measure passed the full Senate by unanimous consent.

On May 8, the House Subcommittee on Select Education, which I chair, held a hearing on deaf education programs. We specifically asked our witnesses to comment on this legislation. Although the witnesses were all generally supportive of the Senate bill, they did express some minor concerns and suggested some clarifying changes. For this reason, I am offering an amendment in nature of a substitute to S. 1874, incorporating some of the suggested changes to supplement and strengthen this legislation. I am offering this substitute on behalf of myself and my colleague, Mr. BARTLETT of Texas, the ranking minority member of the subcommittee.

Title I of the substitute amendment, like S. 1874, provides for the continuation of Gallaudet College as Gallaudet University. This is not simply a title change, but rather, a recognition by this Congress of the valuable services that Gallaudet has been providing hearing-impaired individuals for more than 100 years.

Gallaudet and its graduates have made a productive contribution to the Nation through the fine educational, research, and service programs available at the school. It is important for each of us to understand the extent of this contribution. Let me cite several statistics:

Two-thirds of all deaf college graduates in this country have a Gallaudet degree;

Forty-two percent of Gallaudet's graduates obtain advanced degrees compared to a national norm of 18 percent;

More than 80 percent of Gallaudet's Model Secondary School students pursue a college education;

Ninety percent of Gallaudet's graduates each year are placed in jobs or go on to continuing education;

Unemployment rates for Gallaudet graduates are significantly below the national average; and

The incomes of Gallaudet's graduates are very competitive with those of their hearing counterparts.

These statistics go on and on. However, this is an institution concerned not only with quality education, but also with the search for new knowledge in the area of deafness. Gallaudet's research institute and its two demonstration schools are embarked on an impressive array of research aimed at improving the lives of deaf people. It is the largest research organization devoted to deafness-related issues.

This exemplary institution also extends itself far beyond its Washington, DC, borders to offer service programs nationwide. With its five regional centers and its large outreach commitment, Gallaudet provides continuing education programs to a variety of deaf constituencies, both young and old, in more than 30 States each year.

In these, and many more ways, Gallaudet is truly of university stature. I am pleased to report that this bill also recognizes the traditional rights and privileges for Gallaudet as a private corporation which have been recognized by previous legislation.

The substitute, like S. 1874, also continues the authority in current law for Gallaudet to maintain and operate the Kendall Demonstration Elementary School [KDES] and the Model Secondary School for the Deaf [MSSD]. S. 1874 requires that the programs operated by these two experimental schools be provided in accordance with the requirements of Public Law 94-142, the Education of All Handicapped Children's Act. The House substitute mandates that when a child is referred to or placed in either of these two experimental schools by a local educational agency, a State educational agency, or an intermediate educational unit, that the agency or unit is responsible for ensuring that these students receive special education and related services that are consistent with part B of the Education of the Handicapped Act (Public Law 94-142). This mandate, which is a codification of current policy, should not be construed as diminishing the responsibility of the staff at KDES and MSSD.

To the contrary, it is our expectation that staff from these schools will actually participate in the design of IEP's for children placed or referred to these schools.

It is also intent that these two experimental schools work more closely with the agencies that place and refer students to it as well as other agencies, regarding such areas as the sharing of techniques and curricula.

Title II of the House substitute, like S. 1874, provides for the continuation of the National Technical Institute for the Deaf [NTID]. This fine institution, which is currently affiliated with the Rochester Institute of Technology, provides a residential facility for postsecondary technical training and education for deaf individuals in order to prepare them for successful employment. The Senate bill reflects the original legislation that established NTID.

Title III of the House substitute, like S. 1874, establishes an ad hoc National Commission on the Education of the Deaf to study the current status of the full range of deaf education programs offered throughout the country, including regional postsecondary education programs established under the Education of the Handicapped Act, and to report specific recommendations to the Congress for improvements in these efforts. It is our hope that this Commission will provide advice to the Congress that will be useful in helping shape policies governing the future of Federal support of educational opportunities for all deaf citizens.

The House substitute expands the focus of the Commission to include a review of the quality of infant and early childhood education programs; adult and continuing education programs; the efficacy of part F of the Education of the Handicapped Act pertaining to instructional media; and the problems associated with illiteracy among deaf individuals.

With respect to the composition of the Commission, the House substitute mandates that at least five of the Commission members must be deaf. This sets the floor only. It is not our intent to restrict the number of deaf persons allowed to serve on the Commission. Instead, we want to ensure their full participation. The legislation clearly allows those individuals who make the appointments to the Commission to select additional individuals who are deaf. Further, we wish to ensure that Commission members are individuals who possess relevant experience and expertise in deafness, program evaluation, education or rehabilitation to undertake a comprehensive study of the status of deaf education programs and to provide recommendations for expansion and improvement of such programs.

S. 1874 includes a provision designed to improve the liaison between Gallaudet and NTID and the U.S. Department of Education. The House substitute clarifies the Senate provision by requiring that the Department of Education designate an individual to provide information to Gallaudet and NTID regarding the Department's efforts directly affecting the operation of their programs and any other such support or assistance that the institutions may request and that the Secretary deems appropriate. In designating an individual, it is not our intent that he or she become involved in the management, policymaking process, or governance of Gallaudet University or NTID. The individual is only to be a source within the Department of Education for providing information and coordination of the Department's efforts in the area of deafness as they relate to these institutions and provide a communications linkage and technical support role for them.

The House substitute sets the authorization level as such sums as may be necessary rather than specifying a specific level, as the Senate included in its bill.

The House substitute also provides for the establishment of an endowment for Gallaudet University and the National Technical Institute for the Deaf. This effort, which enjoys bipartisan support, would promote the financial independence of Gallaudet University and the National Technical Institute for the Deaf. My colleague, Mr. BARTLETT, will explain the proposal in further detail.

The remainder of both measures describe the administrative requirements for the auditing of a reporting from these programs.

There is one final issue that I would like to discuss. It pertains to the acceptance by Gallaudet of nonhearing-impaired students in its undergraduate program and the acceptance at NTID of foreign students. One important reason for passing this legislation is that it forces the Congress to take a more active oversight role in the activities of these federally funded programs. This has not been the case in the past. Both Gallaudet and NTID are proposing, or are making, policy that has the potential to alter their mission. We have serious concerns about both of these policies. With respect to Gallaudet, we would hope that it will suspend this policy shift, pending a more indepth congressional review of the issue next year. Of course, nonhearing-impaired students already accepted by Gallaudet need not be affected by such a suspension.

With respect to NTID, it is our understanding that to date no foreign students have been accepted. Therefore, we would expect that this policy not be advanced further until Congress has had an opportunity to carefully review the policy.

Although dramatic strides have been made in the area of deaf education in the last 20 years, some problems still exist. It is my hope that this legislation will address not only the issues raised regarding the educational opportunities that are now available to deaf students, but will also provide suggestions for the kinds of opportunities that will be needed in the future.

In closing, I want to take this opportunity to thank two of our colleagues who also serve on Gallaudet's board of trustees. Mr. DAVID BONIOR of Michigan and Mr. STEVE GUNDERSON of Wisconsin have been very helpful in the construction of this bill as they are both knowledgeable of the needs of the Nation's deaf citizens.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield under my reservation to the ranking member of the full committee, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS]

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 1874, the Education of the Deaf Act. I congratulate Mr. WILLIAMS, the chairman of the Select Education Subcommittee, and Mr. BARTLETT, the ranking Republican of this subcommittee, for the substitute they have developed for this bill. This substitute addresses a vital purpose for an often neglected and misunderstood segment of our Nation's citizens.

Because of their unique disability, deaf Americans have had few opportunities in this country to pursue the education options open to all Americans, Indeed, without the exemplary service of Gallaudet College and the National Technical Institute for the Deaf, many deaf people would have few, if any, postsecondary education opportunities. Thus, I am proud to speak in support of this legislation.

Along with providing Gallaudet with university status—an honor that is long overdue—this bill will establish a Commission to review the quality of programs serving the deaf and to determine the availability of these programs. These activities are highly fitting, Mr. Speaker, for there are an estimated 18 to 22 million Americans, both young and old, who suffer from hearing loss. Each and every one of them deserves the opportunity to enjoy the benefits of what an education can bring. I lend my support to the concept of the Commission and wish them the greatest perseverence in these efforts.

In particular, I would urge this Commission to look closely at the record of Gallaudet College and NTID and their high level of interest in serving a variety of constituencies. Both should provide models that can be used in the development implementation of other programs for the deaf.

Further, I would urge that one of the first issues that the Commission studies is the extent to which these institutions admit foreign and nonhearing-impaired students into their programs. I would hope that these activities be reviewed within the context of congressional intent, and with respect to the level of Federal assistance such activities receive.

The range of services that these institutions provide leads me to suggest that the Commission would be wise to tap into the resources available at each. I would urge the Commission to call on the many highly skilled professionals at both Gallaudet and NTID as it takes on its assigned oversight duties and responsibilities. This is a resource the Commission should not ignore in the development of its findings and recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, the intent of the original Senate bill and this substitute is one which I am pleased to support. An appropriate level of oversight regarding our interest in furthering deaf education is established. Notwithstanding this desire for oversight, the bill grants the proper authority to Gallaudet and the Technical Institute in order to utilize their experience in developing high quality educational programs. I urge my colleagues to support this proposal.

Mr. BARTLETT. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, under my reservation I want to take a minute, for the purposes of the record, to voice my support of S. 1874, the Education of the Deaf Act of 1986. This legislation will serve to strengthen and improve two major Federal educational programs serving deaf and hearing impaired individuals. There are approximately 17 million deaf and hearing impaired persons in this country. Their educational needs present Congress and the Nation with a serious challenge. The rate of illiteracy among deaf and hearing impaired adults is alarming and to many of the deaf and hearing impaired individuals exit our educational system ill-equipped to live and work in the mainstream of society.

I recognize and commend chairman of the Subcommittee on Select Education, Congressman WILLIAMS for the bipartisan approach he has taken in developing this legislation. Under his leadership I believe we have crafted a thoughtful piece of legislation that addresses future as well as present concerns.

S. 1874 places two excellent institutions, the National Technical Institute for the Deaf and Gallaudet College on a 5-year reauthorization schedule and establishes a Commission to study the needs of the deaf community. Individuals who are deaf or hearing impaired assume a unique place within the disability community. NTID and Gallaudet have for many years produced leaders in the field of deafness who have in turn contributed to the lives of deaf and hearing impaired individuals.

I believe that this legislation will strengthen and improve these two fine Federal programs for several reasons. Placing NTID and Gallaudet on a reauthorization schedule will necessitate increased congressional oversight and sensitivity to the needs of the deaf community. As new models of disability policy are developed and new issues addressed, NTID and Gallaudet will receive the congressional attention they deserve.

S. 1874 is a major step forward, in that it provides NTID and Gallaudet with a new matching endowment program, recommended by the administration, which will prove to provide the schools with supplemental funds. The endowments are structured so as to provide NTID and Gallaudet with a great deal of discretion concerning utilization of the endowment while ensuring that the fundraising activities of both institutions will lead to a sizable nest egg in the not-too-distant future. I commend the administration for developing this proposal and thank the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] for the positive reception he has given to the endowment initiative.

This legislation establishes a Commission on Education of Deaf which I feel certain will generate particularly useful information on current and future educational needs of deaf and hearing-impaired individuals as well as their families. A host of obstacles confront hearing-impaired and deaf students. This Commission will provide Congress with the information it needs to tailor future legislation to the specific educational needs of the hearing-impaired and deaf students.

The future of the education of deaf and hearing-impaired individuals is certain to be an exciting and complex endeavor as society continues to break down barriers that exist between hearing and nonhearing individuals. I look forward to increased congressional oversight on the role of NTID and Gallaudet as we wrestle with complex and difficult policy issues. The appropriateness of admitting hearing as well as foreign students to NTID and Gallaudet are good examples policy decisions that will be improved by increased congressional oversight. I understand my colleagues concerns in reviewing these areas and look forward to working with NTID and Gallaudet toward a resolution consistent with Congress' purposes in establishing and funding these institutions.

As I'm sure my colleagues do, I believe there is a great deal to be gained when deaf and hearing impaired students interact with nonhearing impaired and foreign students. Determining the appropriate admissions policy and Federal responsibility for these students is a matter that I am confident can be resolved to everyone's satisfaction.

In part because of the nature of the disability, individuals who are deaf or hearing impaired do not maintain as visible a profile among other persons with handicapping conditions. It is our responsibility as lawmakers to recognize the needs of the deaf community and craft an appropriate Federal role in meeting those needs. I am confident that S. 1874 serves that purpose.

Mr. Speaker, under my reservation, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] for his cooperation and kindness, and my good friend, PAT WILLIAMS of Montana who I worked very closely with in correcting the redistribution of Federal funding to States. I think the gentleman did yeoman service, and we in Massachusetts are very, very appreciative.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation, at this time I would ask the gentleman from Montana if he would engage in a colloquy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I will be pleased to join with my colleague from Texas in a colloquy.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is my understanding that the funds appropriated to Gallaudet College for use at the Kendall Elementary School and the Model Secondary School constitute Federal financial assistance and therefore programs and activities provided by Gallaudet College at these schools must be provided in accordance with section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973. Do you agree with this statement?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, I do.

Mr. BARTLETT. Do you agree with me that Gallaudet College must provide a free appropriate public education in accordance with section 504 to each qualified handicapped child or youth enrolled at or attending Kendall or the Model Demonstration School, including children who are placed or referred at these schools by their parents or guardian?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, I do.

Mr. BARTLETT. What is your understanding of the term "appropriate education"?

Mr. WILLIAMS. An "appropriate education" includes, but is not limited to, special education and related aids and services that are designed to meet individual educational needs and are based upon adherence to procedures included in the section 504 regulations pertaining to educational setting, evaluation and placement, and procedural safeguards. Implementation of an individualized education program developed in accordance with part B of the Education of the Handicapped Act is one means of providing an appropriate education.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it your expectation that all children at Kendall Elementary and the Model Secondary School will have an IEP?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. The IEP has proven to be an essential document for parents as well as teachers and administrators.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it your understanding that with respect to actions regarding the identification, evaluation, or educational placement of persons who, because of handicap, need or are believed to need special instruction or related services, Gallaudet College must establish and implement at the Kendall Elementary School and the Model Secondary School, a system of procedural safeguards that includes: notice, an opportunity for the parents or guardian of the child or youth to examine relevant records, an impartial hearing with opportunity for participation by the child's or youth's parents or guardian and representation by counsel, and a review procedure?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it also your understanding that compliance with the procedural safeguards of section 615 of the Education of the Handicapped Act is one means of meeting this requirement?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the colloquy.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill as amended:

Mr. WILLIAMS (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment in the nature of a substitute be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE CLERK TO MAKE CORRECTIONS IN ENGROSSMENT OF AMENDMENT TO SENATE BILL, S. 1874, EDUCATION OF THE DEAF ACT OF 1986

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, in the engrossment of the amendment to the Senate bill (S. 1874) just passed, the Clerk be authorized to make corrections in section numbers, punctuation, and cross-references and to make such other technical and conforming changes as may be necessary to reflect the actions of the House in amending the Senate bill, S. 1874.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

MAKING IN ORDER TODAY OR TOMORROW CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 120, FIRST CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET, FISCAL YEAR 1987

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order at any time today or tomorrow, clause 2 of rule XXVIII to the contrary notwithstanding, to consider a conference report and amendment reported from conference in disagreement on Senate Concurrent Resolution 120, the budget resolution for fiscal year 1987, that any amendment reported from conference in disagreement be considered as read, that if the House acts first it shall be in order to consider without intervening motion, a motion offered by the chairman of the Committee on the Budget that the House recede from its amendment and concur with an amendment, to be debatable as provided in clause 2 of rule XXVIII, with the previous question considered as ordered on such motion, and that if the Senate acts first and further amends the House amendment, it shall be in order to consider without intervening motion a motion offered by the chairman of the Committee on the Budget that the House concur in or disagree to the Senate amendment or amendments, to be indivisible and debatable as provided in clause 2 of rule XXVIII, with the previous question considered as ordered on such motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to object, but I would like to inquire. I understand the papers are being prepared now, is that correct?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the chairman.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would say to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi that at this time the papers are being prepared for a conference report. There will be a convening of the conference committee where we will, hopefully, formally approve the tentative approval that we have for a conference report, and then this would allow us to come immediately to the floor and to consider today this particular resolution, which would be the budget of the United States for the fiscal year 1987.

Mr. LOTT. Further reserving the right to object, we will have the papers available, of course, before that.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. The paperwork will be available, of course, prior to any consideration.

Mr. LOTT. Further reserving the right to object, do we have any idea when we can anticipate a vote, though, on this issue? Will we be ready by 3 o'clock?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I wish I could give the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi an exact time. At this time I cannot. But it is our hope that if this is accepted through unanimous consent, that it allows us today at some time to bring it up, should we complete all of our business that has to be completed.

Mr. LOTT. I understand. I would like for us to be able to get the budget resolution if we can reach an agreement on the content. But I do say that I think we need to let the Members know some idea of what they can anticipate as soon as we can give them that information.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I wish I could give an exact time, but it would be my hope and expectation that we could perhaps be to the floor by late afternoon, 4 o'clock or 5 o'clock, subject to a few technical disagreements.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I talked to the gentleman earlier. I understood he was to call me back.

You do realize the lateness with which this action is taken.

Our committee has had about 5,000 witnesses. We are ready to mark up the bills; we are ready to go. In order for us to live with the resolution you had before the House, we have had to make certain changes. I discussed with the gentleman as to whether he could go along with those. Otherwise, our committee will have to oppose this proposition, because it comes too late unless we have an understanding about some of the things we tried to do.

As the gentleman knows, in his resolution he counts on legislation bringing in money when the legislation has not even been introduced.

There are other things in there such as the $6.7 billion that you have for the current year from a synfuels cancellation—and we had to make that up. So unless the gentleman can tell me that he is going along with some actions that we have had to take trying to live with the House budget, which we are doing, I will have to call the committee together, and we will have to have a showdown.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I will simply say to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Mississippi, and also my chairman where I serve as a permanent member, that the considerations of the chairman have been given to our staff. In fact, just 15 minutes ago, I ran into the staff of the gentleman and asked him to go to my office to get a complete understanding with regard to the discretionary actions.

Mr. WHITTEN. If the gentleman will allow me, an understanding is all right; I want some agreement.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I can simply say at this time to the chairman that we are trying to work out a solution to that concern. At this time I do not have an answer to the chairman.

Mr. WHITTEN. If I may have some notice in order that I might get the committee together because we cannot destroy the action we already agreed to.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I will simply say to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi that he will be advised in sufficient time prior to any conference report being reported as to the answer to his concern. Therefore, he and any other member of the committee or of this body will have an opportunity to make a decision as to whether they will support or oppose the conference report.

Mr. WHITTEN. The gentleman knows I think a lot of him and supported the budget as he has gone along. I will repeat again that I was on the study group that recommended the Committee on the Budget. I voted for the Committee on the Budget. But we cannot, as we see it, let this happen at the last minute after we have completed our work and upset everything we have done. It has been difficult to live with the original resolution, but we have done so.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I understand the gentleman's concern.

Mr. WHITTEN. The gentleman understands at this late hour we cannot undo all the good work we have done throughout the year.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I can assure the gentleman he will get that information way in advance prior to the conference report coming so that he can make a determination.

Mr. WHITTEN. We will be glad to have you back on the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I obviously will not object, I simply would like to tell Chairman GRAY and hopefully in the earshot of Chairman WHITTEN that I do not think there could have been a more cooperative spirit than existed right on through, particularly this morning. Most if not all of the concerns that have been expressed by various subcommittee chairmen and staff members on the Committee on Appropriations have not only been dealt with, but they have been dealt with to the complete satisfaction of the Committee on Appropriations. I want to thank Mr. DERRICK as well as Chairman GRAY for the success they have had in dealing with our committee under very difficult terms.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FAZIO. Further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DERRICK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, let me just add to what the gentleman has just said and what Mr. WHITTEN has said. I cannot address his particular concerns right at this moment, but I know that we have constantly stayed in touch with all the Subcommittees on Appropriations to make sure that we had their approval and we negotiated some. I feel we were all within that framework. I feel let's go ahead and get it over with.

Mr. FAZIO. I think we can move ahead together.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FAZIO. Further reserving the right to object, I yield to the chairman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to just compliment the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO], who is a subcommittee chair and who is a representative of the Committee on Appropriations on the Committee on the Budget, for the work he has done in making sure that whatever agreements are worked out are enforceable and that the committees, particularly the Committee on Appropriations, can live with them and be able to accomplish the deficit reduction.

Mr. FAZIO. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4184, NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION AUTHORIZATION ACT, FOR FISCAL YEAR 1987

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 482 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 482

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4184) to authorize appropriations to the National Science Foundation for the fiscal years 1987 and 1988, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Science and Technology, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute-recommended by the Committee on Science and Technology now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule, each section of said substitute shall be considered as having been read, and all points of order against said substitute for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 5(a) of rule XXI are hereby waived. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TAYLOR], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 482 is an open rule providing for the consideration of the bill H.R. 4184, the National Science Foundation Authorization Act for fiscal year 1987.

Mr. Speaker, the rule provides 1 hour of general debate, equally divided between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Science and Technology, and makes in order a Science Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute now printed in the bill. This amendment will be considered as original text for purposes of amendment under the 5-minute rule and each section shall be considered as read.

In addition, House Resolution 482 waives points of order against the substitute for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 5(a), of rule XXI, which prohibits appropriations in a legislative bill.

Mr. SPEAKER, this waiver is necessary because this legislation makes several changes to the National Science Foundation Act of 1950. Specifically, the bill would allow the National Science Foundation to assume financial responsibility, for 5 years, for certain claims against grantees, contractors, and subcontractors associated with the Ocean Drilling Program, and would grant the National Science Foundation the authority to spend funds for scholarships and graduate fellowships. Because these provisions make previously appropriated funds available for these programs they would be in violation of clause 5(a) of rule XXI.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule provides for one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4148 is an annual authorization for the National Science Foundation for fiscal year 1987. Approximately $1.7 billion is authorized by the Science and Technology Committee, of this amount $1.4 billion would go for research and related activities, $93 million for science and technology, $110 million for the U.S. Antarctic program and $700 thousand for special foreign currency.

Mr. Speaker, the National Science Foundation is the primary source for research activities for colleges and universities from around the country. The Foundation plays a major role for the promotion of science and engineering education throughout the country, which enables the United States to continue to be competitive in the science marketplace throughout the world, and not to be dependent on other nations that could effect our economic security.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4148 is in line with the amount requested from the administration, the bill enjoys strong bipartisan support from members of the Science and Technology Committee, and I urge my colleagues to adopt the resolution.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 482 is an open rule under which the House will consider legislation authorizing roughly $1.7 billion for the National Science Foundation for the coming fiscal year.

The rule is a routine one, in that it makes in order a Science Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute which is printed in the bill as original text for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule.

The rule does waive points of order against consideration of the committee substitute, since it does not comply with clause 5(a) of rule XXI. The committee substitute makes previously appropriated funds available for new programs, in violation of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] has explained the need for this waiver quite well. The bill allows the National Science Foundation to assume financial responsibility for claims associated with the Ocean Drilling Program and authorizes new scholarship and fellowships.

Although the amounts authorized in the bill are in line with the request of the administration, the administration is opposed to several specific provisions of the bill—including the authority to indemnify claims associated with the Ocean Drilling Program.

Mr. Speaker, there was no controversy about this rule during our hearing in the Committee on Rules, and I urge the House to adopt the rule so we can proceed with the consideration of H.R. 4184.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2436, NATIONAL NUTRITION MONITORING AND RELATED RESEARCH ACT OF 1986

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 484 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 484

Resolved. That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2436) to establish a coordinated National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Program, and a comprehensive plan for the assessment of the nutritional and dietary status of the United States population and the nutritional quality of the United States food supply, with provision for the conduct of scientific research and development in support of such program and plan, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, with one hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, and with one hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Science and Technology, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. In lieu of the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Science and Technology now printed in the bill in italic, it shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Agriculture now printed in the bill in bold roman, as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule, and each section of said substitute shall be considered as having been read. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute made in order as original text by this resolution. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instruction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HALL] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TAYLOR] for purposes of debate only, pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 484 is an open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 2436, the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act of 1986.

The rule provides for a total of 2 hours of general debate, with 1 hour to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, and with 1 hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Science and Technology.

The rule further makes in order the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Agriculture now printed in the bill in bold roman print as original text for the purpose of amendment. The substitute shall be considered under the 5-minute rule by sections, with each section considered as read. Both committees of jurisdiction agreed to make the Agriculture Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute the original text for amendment.

Finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H.R. 2436 is to provide a framework for examining the relationship between food consumption patterns and the nutritional and health status of our Nation. It establishes a 10-year coordinated National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Program, which will oversee the development of a comprehensive plan to coordinate nutrition monitoring activities and to help set up national nutrition monitoring priorities.

Currently, more than nine agencies of the Federal Government engage in nutrition research. There is an urgent need to coordinate and streamline the monitoring of our national nutritional data. Under this legislation, the Agriculture Department and the Health and Human Services Department will work together through an interagency board to prepare a plan to implement the coordinated National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Program. This plan will be submitted to Congress within 1 year of the legislation's enactment. Once finalized, the plan will be carried out over the course of the next 9 years.

I commend the chairmen of the Agriculture and Science and Technology Committees for their leadership in bringing this legislation before the House. In addition, I applaud the work on this measure by my colleague on the House Select Committee on Hunger, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

I am not aware of any opposition to this open rule, and I urge my colleagues to adopt it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 484 is an open rule under which the House will consider legislation creating a new, and rather complex system for monitoring the various national nutrition research programs.

The rule provides for 2 hours of general debate, to be divided between the two committees involved: the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Science and Technology.

The rule makes in order the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Agriculture, which is printed in the bill in bold roman print, as original text for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. Speaker, both of the committees involved asked for this procedure, in order to have orderly consideration of their individual versions.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HALL] pointed out that nine Federal agencies currently engage in nutrition research, and expressed his view that there is a need to coordinate and streamline the monitoring of our national nutrition data.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. Is the gentleman familiar with section 106 on page 17 of this bill?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I am not.

Mr. WHITTEN. Let me read it to the gentleman:

SEC. 106. (a) Authorizations and appropriations for the fiscal year in which the comprehensive plan is submitted in final form under section 103(d)(3) and for the nine succeeding fiscal years, for purposes of carrying out the coordinated program and implementing the comprehensive plan, shall be requested by the Secretaries and by each of the agencies which are allocated responsibilities under the coordinated program pursuant to section 103(c), in a separate line item of the budget of the agency involved and consistent with the interagency budget for the coordinated program; and to the maximum extent feasible such appropriations shall be provided on a three-year basis, subject to annual authorization Acts hereafter enacted.

What it does is it provides direct appropriations, it makes 3 years of appropriations, and the legislative committees shall determine at what rate the money will be released. That is a clear case of moving into the appropriation field.

Of course, we do not have to do it, but I am just telling the gentleman I question seriously if this bill ought not go back to the barn.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman that this rule does not contain any of the waivers that would be necessary to avoid a point of order that might lie if this were an authorization bill that also contained an appropriation.

Mr. WHITTEN. We had no notice of the bill being up, being introduced, being reported or being up today. We had to pick up a copy to see what was in it. But it clearly moves into the appropriation field. Of course, fortunately for our committee, nobody can make us act. But it does attempt here to release the money in line with what the legislative committees say to do and at the rate they do. It directs us to appropriate for 3 years at a time. It is completely unworkable.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would say to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that there is no waiver in the rule.

However, this is a controversial bill. There are many controversies that will be coming out in the debate on the bill.

The administration has several concerns about the way the bill goes about streamlining things. I am informed that the minority members have several, nearly a dozen, suggestions to improve the bill, and they will be permitted under this open rule to offer their amendments under this rule.

Mr. WHITTEN. The point I make is with budget ceilings and Gramm-Rudman, we have problems like everybody's business. We are dealing this year with a budget resolution whereby there is legislation bringing in additional money where nobody even introduces a resolution. For the current year, we had $6.7 billion from the Synfuels cancellation. That was ignored. Right now we have a problem. And to come here and have a legislative committee come in and say that we have to appropriate for 3 years at a time, with us having annual controls imposed by the budget resolution, it just makes our whole situation unworkable. I think our committee, with the limits possible, has been most fair. We worked like everything trying to help everybody here. But to move in and take over, it just will not work.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, there is no intent on the part of any of the authorizing committees to move in and determine——

Mr. WHITTEN. If the gentleman from Missouri will continue to yield, it is the staff rather than the members. That may be the gentleman's case.

Mr. WALGREN. But as I understand it, the language was drafted so that we do not put any specific burden on the Committee on Appropriations.

It is an attempt to recognize that what we are involved in here is a long-range plan that has a future that runs really beyond 3 years, and the suggestion was that the Committee on Appropriations, to the degree that it is feasible for them, think in those terms. We do not ask more than that.

Mr. WHITTEN. I wish the gentleman had written the bill instead of the staff.

Mr. WALGREN. If the gentleman will yield further, I certainly realize that that may not be possible, and to the degree that that is not possible, certainly the bill does not then ask for that to be done.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. I appreciate the gentleman's attitude.

I do not believe any Member of Congress would intend to do this, but I wish they would read it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that I certainly share his concerns, and I will support an amendment to correct that situation.

I understand that the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SKEEN], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, will probably offer an amendment to delete the requirement that separate line items for nutrition monitoring be established in the budgets of the agencies involved. If the gentleman does, I will certainly support that.

Mr. Speaker, this is an open rule. I think the bill it makes in order is one that is controversial and there will be several controversial amendments offered. There are those who think that they can substantially improve this legislation during the amendment process.

But since it is an open rule and the Members will have the opportunity to offer amendments, those who wish to do so, I support the rule and urge the adoption of the rule.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1987

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 482 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 4184.

□ 1345

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4184) to authorize appropriations to the National Science Foundation for the fiscal years 1987 and 1988, and for other purposes, with Mr. KOSTMAYER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with. Under the rule, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN].

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4184, the National Science Foundation Authorization Act for fiscal year 1987.

The programs authorized in this bill represent a key investment in the Nation's economic future and its national security.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 4184 is a strong and a well-balanced proposal that wisely invests Government resources. At the outset, recognition should be given to the chairman of the Science and Technology Committee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FUQUA], for his leadership in bringing this bill to the floor, and to the ranking minority member of the Science and Technology Committee, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. LUJAN], and the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT], for their important contributions to this process.

And I think we ought to pause to recognize that the strength of the National Science Foundation itself, as reflected in the structure of the Foundation today, is in no small measure due to the effective effort of Congressman FUQUA, who, over the 20-some years he has served in the Congress has furthered the cause which American science is much better because of his service.

In the field of basic science research in American universities, the Federal role is unique. There is no other major source of support for university based science research, at least not across the board.

The charter of the National Science Foundation gives it the fundamental responsibility to insure that American scientific potential is realized. Other than the National Science Foundation, there is no Federal agency that provides such a wide scope of support to our educational system. While the National Science Foundation budget is relatively small in comparison to the total national effort in research and development, it is the primary source of support for fundamental science and engineering research at colleges and universities, where under our system such a critical share of basic research is conducted.

Mr. Chairman, the academic community performs most of the basic research in the physical and the life sciences. The National Science Foundation is the basic source of support for these research and development efforts, and most importantly, the laboratories and classrooms of universities are the training grounds for the scientists and engineers who will make the breakthroughs in science in the future. Thus, this bill sustains the effort to maintain our leadership in basic science research, and with it, our long-range economic health.

In light of these factors, H.R. 4184 provides a total authorization of $1.686 billion. This authorization level is identical to the authorization level proposed by the administration.

The major parts of the authorization include $1.482 billion for research and related activities, $93 million for science and engineering education, and $110 million for Antarctic research.

The committee bill reflects several changes in funding for two of the directorates within the National Science Foundation to strengthen two particular programs. The committee's amendment reduced funding for the U.S. Antarctic Program by $7 million from that as proposed by the administration, a reduction of $7 million from $117 million, as requested, to $110 million, redirecting $3 million to the Biological, Behavioral and Social Science Directorate and $4 million to the Science and Engineering Education Directorate.

The NSF has been able to reduce its share of operations support for the Antarctic Program through the cooperation of the Coast Guard and other military agencies that are in the Antarctic. Thus, an authorization of $110 million, which is equal to the current year's spending level, will in reality permit strengthening of some present efforts in the Antarctic Program and at the same time allow some of these resources to be redirected.

The $3 million that is to be redirected to the Biological, Behaviorial and Social Sciences Directorate, is specifically targeted to the behaviorial and social sciences activities, with $2 million going to the Social and Economic Sciences Program and $1 million going to the Behaviorial and Neural Science Program. The social and behaviorial sciences have sustained over these last several years a disproportionate burden of budget reductions in the past, and even with this redirection of funds, these disciplines will receive less, I am sorry to say, but nonetheless it stresses the importance of adding this strength, these disciplines will receive less than they received in support from the National Science Foundation in 1980, so we are still not back to the levels of support that these disciplines have enjoyed.

Also, this action reflects the committee's concern that the social and behaviorial sciences must be supported in light of the contribution they can make across a wide range of our economy, from how foreign languages are learned, for the future in the international economy, to improving productivity and safety engineering. The contributions that this social and behaviorial sciences can make cannot be underestimated.

The $4 million redirected to the Science and Education Directorate is intended to strengthen the College Science Instrumentation Program by expanding it to include 2-year and community colleges. The College Science Instrumentation Program has been an effective mechanism for addressing a critical need, a need that has been recognized across the board in our educational system, but an especially critical need at the college level.

Recently, a report released by the White House Science Council on the Health of U.S. Colleges and Universities, known as "a new partnership," highlighted the aging condition of research facilities and the obsolescence of instructional equipment. This report, which is otherwise known as the Packard-Bromley report stressed the need to address this problem in order to improve the quality of science and engineering education. At the same time, the College Science Instrumentation Program should be open to as many institutions as possible in light of the increasing and critical role that the 2-year and community colleges are playing in training the technical personnel that our economy needs now and will need more of in the future.

This bill includes plans by the National Science Foundation to launch special initiatives in areas that in the view of the Director and others involved in the administration of the National Science Foundation are ripe for exciting breakthroughs and rapid advances, and so this bill funds in full measure the initiatives such as the global geoscience and biotechnology initiatives recommended by the administration. At the same time, the bill continues the special initiatives in the areas of advanced scientific computing and engineering research centers.

Also, the bill makes several changes to the National Science Foundation Organic Act. The amendment suggested by the committee includes a provision that permits the National Science Foundation Director to appoint the assistant directors, with the consent of the National Science Board, rather than to require these to go through the Presidential appointment process. This step would considerably reduce the time necessary to fill vacancies in senior management positions. At the same time, experience has shown us that the Director has been able to effectively delegate responsibility to non-Presidential assistant directors in a timely fashion. Also, in view of the fact that 30 positions within the policy and management structure remain Presidential appointments, there is no undercutting of the Presidential influence in direction of policy over the National Science Foundation by this change that has been requested for several years running now by the National Science Board.

H.R. 4184 also provides the National Science Foundation with the authority to provide indemnification for certain liability that may be incurred under the Ocean Drilling Program. This authority would be subject to reauthorization at the end of 5 years. In carrying out any offshore drilling program, commercial or scientific, there are certain inherent risks. In the past, the NSF was authorized to use the indemnification authority of 10 U.S.C. 2354 for certain claims that might be brought against grantees and subcontractors involved in the program, and thus this provision in effect continues the previous status of the National Science Foundation having the authority to provide indemnification, an authority that would otherwise expire.

The bill also prohibits the NSF from using its funds to implement or enforce changes to the Office of Management and Budget Circular A-21, which may have been proposed subsequent to February 11, 1986. This was approved in the committee after special hearings on the rather hasty promulgation by OMB which would have made a major change in administrative cost allowances to universities. The committee feels that any new policy with such substantial serious implications for the funds available to academic research should receive substantially more consideration and opportunity for interaction between the interested parties. Therefore, that provision is included in the bill.

The bill contains a variety of modifications to the NSF Act of 1950, which have been proposed by the administration, and which delete relatively obsolete provisions.

H.R. 4184, as reported by the Science and Technology Committee, reflects two organizational changes in the research directorates that have already been implemented by the Foundation's Director.

First, all activities related to computer science, information science, computer engineering, supercomputers, and computer networking will be consolidated into a new computer and information science and engineering directorate.

Second, the Astronomical Sciences Division of the Directorate for Astronomical, Atmospheric, Earth and Ocean Sciences [AAEO], will be reassigned to the Directorate for Mathematical and Physical Sciences. The AAEO Directorate has been renamed the Geosciences Directorate. Since astronomy has such a close association with mathematics and physics, it is felt that by moving the astronomical activities into the Mathematical and Physical Sciences Directorate, the organizational structure will more accurately reflect the relationships in the academic and research communities.

Mr. Chairman, I urge support for the bill, and I reserve the balance of my tme.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I want to join with my colleagues in urging approval of the President's budget request for the National Science Foundation [NSF].

I think some Members of the House may have misconceptions about the National Science Foundation. This Agency does not simply engage in esoteric research distant from the concerns of average Americans, providing information that is merely "nice to know." Rather, the work of the National Science Foundation is needed to solve our most pressing national problems.

Our Nation is involved in a pitched battle to retain its economic predominance in the world economy. Our jobs and our standard of living hinge on the outcome. Study after study has concluded that the keys to winning the battle are technology and education.

The work of the National Science Foundation is essential for technological advancement. The Agency funds the bulk of the basic research in this country that lays the groundwork for technological progress.

Indeed, much of NSF's budget is targeted at finding answers sought by industry. The engineering research centers and proposed biotechnology centers are prime examples. The National Science Foundation also does much to improve the quality of American education. The Agency funds teacher training institutes and curriculum development to help our public schools. What could be more important.

It also runs the College Science Instrumentation Program to help undergraduate colleges buy science and engineering equipment for instruction. This program, which our committee has expanded, has aided colleges in virtually every State. And next year the program will be opened to community and junior colleges for the first time—an important step to reach more students earlier in their careers.

The National Science Foundation, in short, is a sort of guarantor of our future economic health. It is a small, efficient agency that deserves our strong support.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VALENTINE], a member of the subcommittee and one of the most involved members in the development of this bill.

Mr. VALENTINE. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the authorization bill for the National Science Foundation for fiscal year 1987. I would like to commend our very dedicated chairman of the Committee on Science and Technology, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FUQUA] and, of course, the chairman of our subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN].

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased with the recognition and commitment made on behalf of the administration to increase funding for the Foundation. The Foundation is this Nation's primary source of basic research support in U.S. universities and colleges. It also plays an important role in promoting science and engineering research and education, which provides the basic foundation for our country's continued preeminence in science and technology.

Our country must maintain its commitment to a new generation of scientists and researchers. This week, our Science, Research and Technology Subcommittee held a hearing on "Strategies for Exploiting American Inventiveness in the World Marketplace." While several areas were discussed in this context, one central theme throughout the hearing was abundantly clear: The U.S. competitiveness in the world economy is eroding while international competition becomes more intense.

This apparent erosion becomes even clearer when we look at the facts and figures of some of our most preeminent industries. As an example, world manufacturing of semiconductors experienced an 18.3-percent growth during the period between 1975 through 1980, while the U.S. semiconductor industry experienced a 23.7-percent annual growth rate.

In contrast, in the period between 1980 and 1984, world manufacturing experienced a 17.1-percent annual growth rate, while the U.S. experienced an annual growth rate of only 13.6 percent. The United States is not maintaining the previous share of the world market in this important industry. Even further, the U.S. share of the market is expected to drop from approximately 45 percent in 1984 to 42 percent in 1988. Creative and timely action is required now by our university and government research institutions to help avoid further erosion in this important segment of scientific research and development.

More important, Mr. Chairman, is a growing concern that the United States is on a downward trajectory toward losing its worldwide competitive position, which would result in a loss of a major portion of the non-defense-related semiconductor market. Such a result could have a very significant impact on the defense electronics industry, and, ultimately, on U.S. defense posture.

And finally, Mr. Chairman, I am quite pleased to see a significant increase in funding for science and engineering research and education with respect to increasing the number of minorities who choose science and engineering careers. It is important that we bridge the gap in this area, and this legislation addresses this matter.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation presents a unique opportunity to take action to help achieve long-term leadership while there is still time. I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to lend their support to this legislation.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Science and Technology, the the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. LUJAN].

Mr. LUJAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in very strong support of H.R. 4184, a bill to reauthorize the National Science Foundation [NSF] for fiscal year 1987. The funding level contained in this legislation supports the budget of $1.686 billion in new obligational authority requested by the President.

I commend the administration and the NSF for a very sound budget proposal. It not only provides for adequate growth in several major initiatives, but also provides an overall reasonable increase in support of basic science and engineering research across the board.

I commend Mr. Erichbloch, Director of the National Science Foundation and Dr. Roland Schmitt, Chairman of the National Science Board [NSB] for the efficiency which they have built into the Foundation, as well as the persistence they have adopted in filling any and all vacancies within the top management levels of NSF and on the Board.

There are several programs sponsored by NSF that now have a cost-sharing factor assigned to them. This has not only leveraged the Federal investment in science, but it also has drawn State and local governments, academic institutions, and the private sector into a more nurturing alliance. Through science and engineering education programs, engineering research centers, supercomputer centers, and the College Science Intrumentation Program, the leveraging effect of NSF funds has translated into more academic institutions receiving more support for science.

There is also the need to adequately support the principal investigator often referred to as the "PI." This is an individual scientist, engineer, or educator who receives funding from NSF for a particular research project and who in turn supports several graduate students with that money. He or she is adding, in a very valuable and essential way, to the great wealth of trained manpower this Nation needs to meet an ever increasing high-technology world.

Mr. Chairman, there isn't a State in our Nation that does not in one form or another receive NSF funding. And, unlike other Federal bureaucracies, approximately 90 to 95 percent of NSF's funds leave the agency to support our Nation's educational institutions. NSF has amazingly low in-house administration costs. This speaks well for the management of a Federal bureaucracy.

Mr. Chairman, several Members have or will speak to the many endeavors NSF has laid out in their 1987 budget. I will name just a few. NSF seeks an increase in funding—$18 million—for their global geoscience initative research emphasis treating the Earth in an integrated way, the interrelation of the physical, chemical, and biological processes. I strongly support this effort to view our planet in a more realistic manner. This program has very strong intergovernmental and international support.

Another initiative is in computational science and engineering, an effort to establish multidisciplinary teams so that the wealth of knowledge and experience in various fields of science, including theoretical and practical mathematics, can cross-fertilize.

Mr. Chairman, in closing I would again reiterate my unquestionable support of the NSF and the Presidents' fiscal year 1987 budget request. I urge my colleagues to join me in that support.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DARDEN].

Mr. DARDEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this point to express my strong support for H.R. 4184, the National Science Foundation authorization.

I do want to point out, though, Mr. Chairman, that the total authorization in this bill is $1.7 billion. While that may seem like a significant amount of money, when we consider that the Department of Defense research and development effort amounts to almost $35 billion, this amount of money pales in comparison. So I respectfully suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we need to reorder our priorities and continue to try to put more money into the National Science Foundation and other areas of research.

In a few moments I want to engage in a brief colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN], but before I do, Mr. Chairman, I want to observe that the chairman, the ranking minority member, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT], and the rest of the members of the committee have produced a bill which, in my opinion, provides strong and justifiable support for basic scientific research.

The committee's recommendation accurately reflects the important contribution basic research makes to this Nation's ability to compete effectively in today's highly competitive world.

As a member of the Armed Services Committee, I recognize the contribution a sustained investment in basic research makes to national security. I have been interested, for some time now, in ways to expand the Federal investment in basic research, primarily by adjusting the distribution of the total Federal R&D investment. One avenue the Armed Services Committee has pursued has been to increase the DOD University Research Initiative. It is my hope that other actions might be endorsed by the Congress to support a continued adjustment in Federal R&D priorities.

In that light, the Science and Technology Committee is to be congratulated for the strong support it has consistently provided in this area.

I would like to comment on one particular aspect of the bill. In January of this year, several members of the Armed Services Committee, myself included, had the unique opportunity to view first hand some of the important basic research supported by the Foundation in Antarctica. The chairman of the full committee led a delegation of his own a few years back, and knows personally of the program's value.

I notice that the committee has reduced the recommended funding for the U.S. Antarctic Program by $7 million below the President's request. I know the committee was faced with the difficult task of setting priorities and trying to adequately support many worthwhile programs.

But I am concerned that this particular reduction could hamper significantly the logistical aspects of the program. I am specifically referring to the plans to upgrade and modernize the LC-130 aircraft and the research facilities so vital to this Nation's ability to maintain an active and influential presence on this unique continent.

Let me ask: If, during the conference with the other body, an opportunity arose to restore funding for the Antarctic Program and still uphold the committee's priorities with respect to research and instructional instrumentation, would the gentleman be willing to support such a proposal?

Mr. WALGREN. To the gentleman from Georgia, I would say that I am aware of the importance of the Antarctic Program from both an international foreign policy perspective as well as a scientific perspective. One must remember that the logistical component of the program, as important as it is, significantly overshadows the resources actually spent on the performance of the research. It is my view that the proportion of the total amount expended that goes for the support of the actual research should be strengthened and that to the extent possible, the DOD should bear more directly the logistical costs associated with the program.

With respect to the committee's specific recommendations concerning the behavioral and social sciences and undergraduate instrumentation, let me say that the committee has examined very closely the need for an adequate base of support for these particular issues. These are areas we maintain a long-standing interest in. The behavioral and social sciences has not seen the same enthusiastic support from this administration as most of the other basic research disciplines have.

In the area of college instructional instrumentation, these additional funds will help support badly needed equipment for the teaching of science and engineering at the Nation's 4-year and community colleges.

Mr. DARDEN. I thank the distinguished subcommittee chairman for his consideration of this request. And let me say that I agree with the issues raised by the gentleman and I know he will do everything possible to see that these activities are adequately supported.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. LUJAN].

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for this time to ask the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. WALGREN, did I understand in your answer to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DARDEN], that the gentleman does not contemplate cutting the other two budgets in order to restore the $7 million that we took from the Antarctic project, but only if we can work out something, perhaps, with the Department of Defense or some other way to restore those funds, rather than take them from the other two budget items, research and related and science and engineering and education.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what we might agree as a committee in how to approach that question truthfully.

I personally emphasize the importance of that college instrumentation and the social and behavioral sciences as a very important increase that we provide in the committee bill. It is my understanding that because of the effort that the DOD will be making that had previously been anticipated to come from the National Science Foundation funds, that we certainly are not reducing the effort in the Antarctic.

But I would be the first among us all to encourage support for that program to the degree that we can reach a committee agreement on where that strength should come from.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GREGG].

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York and I just want to congratulate the subcommittee and the subcommittee chairman especially, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN], and the subcommittee's ranking member, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT] on a really excellent job of preparing the National Science Foundation budget this year.

I especially want to take note of and congratulate the committee on the language of the report, which I believe is at page 13, regarding the expansion and use of television as a mode of education for the younger children in this country. The report highlights the fact that the National Science Foundation has had an integral part in funding "3-2-1 Contact" and "The Brain" program that, unfortunately, the Department of Education is now in the process, it appears, of backing out of the promotion of this sort of educational material, and in my opinion, that is regrettable, but the National Science Foundation should pick up on the promotion of this sort of material.

In my opinion, the potential for educating young Americans through the use of the medium of television and through the excellent programming such as "3-2-1 Contact" and "The Brain," and I understand there is a new program that is going to be coming on this fall in the area of science, is extraordinary.

We have our children today watching an average of approximately 5 to 5½ hours of television, this is clearly one of the quickest and most convenient ways that we as a nation can bring our children up to speed so that they can be competitive in a high technology world, and it is certainly appropriate that the National Science Foundation should be taking the lead in this area.

So again I congratulate the subcommittee on an excellent job in all functions and all directorates that the National Science Foundation is working in, but especially in the area of television education.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I do want to thank my colleague for mentioning that, because he has provided the leadership in this area; he formerly served on the Committee on Science and Technology and it was under his leadership initially that this program was launched.

I cannot pass up this opportunity, as long as we are talking about the effective use of television, to put in a plug for, at the appropriate time, this Chamber's support for public broadcasting.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. STRATTON], who has maintained a very active and direct interest in the range of the National Science Foundation.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to express my appreciation to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN] for allowing me this time. As the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DARDEN] has already indicated, the Committee on Armed Services had the opportunity of visiting the Antarctic in the early part of January; and I must say that I have to make a confession that I never realized that the operation of the Antarctic undertaking was being handled by the National Science Foundation. In fact, I admitted to the head of the Antarctic organization that many of us in Congress often when the National Science Foundation budget was up, we would figure, that perhaps we could take a few million off of the Science Foundation budget to get an easy economy vote.

When I recognized that the facilities down there and the tremendous operation that they are carrying on, I realized how soundly mistaken I had been and I pledged to the NSF people down there that when I got back to Washington and the budget for the Science Foundation came up, I would certainly support it very soundly.

Mr. Chairman, our committee was most impressed by the dedication of the Foundation's people there in Antarctica. Of course it was the summertime then and I imagine it becomes much more rugged in the winter. But the dedication and the willingness to give us a fill-in on exactly what goes on there and the different kinds of research that are going on. It was a thrilling and an exciting experience for all of us in a strange and beautiful land.

We had the opportunity of riding the Coast Guard's ice-breaker. We had the opportunity of seeing the vast amounts of snow over so much of the Antarctic area; and, with the support of helicopters provided by the Coast Guard and with the support of the aircraft provided by the Navy, we not only flew over the snow areas, but also those dry valleys in the middle of the Antarctic with all the snow on all sides.

That particular area of landscape looked more as though it came from southern Utah, or Arizona, or some place like that.

The high point of our visit was the opportunity to fly to the South Pole. In fact, we learned quite a bit about the Antarctic. For instance, I had never realized that the South Pole had an elevation of 10,000 feet, and it also has a very low temperature. At least when we arrived in that summer season, it had a temperature of 55 degrees below zero.

The facilities at the South Pole are remarkable also, as well as the facilities at McMurdo Sound. The buildings that are located at the South Pole in that temperature and with winds that blow so strongly are protected by a geodesic dome. We were told that we would find it very difficult to survive in that altitude, at 10,000 feet; but as a matter of fact when one got inside of the dome, the wind eased. I think the major problem at the pole was the wind rather than the altitude.

So I want to congratulate the Science Foundation for the terrific job that they are doing in operating these aircraft that fly to Antarctica and to the South Pole. We landed in a blizzard and took off in a blizzard. We landed at the South Pole in zero-zero conditions, but the ground controlled approach was certainly one of the highest quality.

I would also like to point out that there are a number of students who are carrying on research in Antarctica under the auspices of the Science Foundation. I do not think too many of them stay over, probably, in the winter but there was an outstanding group of young people who were taking advantage of the opportunities down in the bottom of the world in the summer season.

I would agree with the comments made by my good friend from Georgia that I, too, was shocked that the budget was being cut back by $7 million for the Antarctic research; I read in the paper the other day that there is a crisis in terms of the gap in the ozone down there. I understand there are some scientists who are setting out down there to find out whether we have a leak in the ozone, or why there is inadequate ozone, or enough as was expected in the Antarctic area.

I would think that the individuals who are going to be following that problem up would probably need an authorization or an appropriation of several million dollars to be able to determine exactly what the situation is with our very important goal.

A good deal of the world's weather, we were told, begins in the Antarctic and therefore if we are going to have to stop any leakage of ozone, we will have to do it first in the Antarctic.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that I appreciate the opportunity that the Science Foundation gave us, and I strongly support the budget submitted by the committee.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to a member of the full committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. PACKARD].

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4184, the National Science Foundation Authorization Act for fiscal year 1987.

As a member of the Committee on Science and Technology, I am pleased that the committee unanimously approved the President's request level of $1.7 billion for the National Science Foundation.

While it is difficult to justify increased spending authorization during the days of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, I firmly believe that sustained and enhanced basic research is the key to U.S. industrial competitiveness, economic success, and national security.

The Federal Government continues to be the primary source for basic research support in the United States, funding two-thirds of the total national investment in basic research in 1985. Although NSF funding represents only 3 percent of the total Federal R&D budget, its proportion of total Federal basic research funding is nearly 17 percent. Even more significant, one-quarter of all basic research being carried out in U.S. colleges and universities is supported with NSF funds.

A serious concern of the committee is the significant drop in the number of students pursuing science and engineering careers. While the number of foreign citizens enrolled in science and engineering doctoral programs has increased by over 23 percent from 1980–83, the number of U.S. citizens enrolled in these programs has increased by barely 1 percent. This legislation provides $93 million to encourage able and interested students to pursue undergraduate and graduate programs in academic science and engineering. Further, one of the major components needed to enhance the quality of undergraduate science and engineering education is improved instructional scientific equipment and materials. H.R. 4184 provides $11.5 million for the college science instrumentation program [CSIP] and has extended the eligibility for CSIP grants to include 2-year and community colleges.

Also, the NSF has achieved great success in advanced scientific computing. NSF recently established for supercomputer centers, one, of which I am proud, is located at the University of California in San Diego. These centers will provide invaluable research and training opportunities for our Nation's scientists and students.

These are but a few examples of the valuable contributions the NSF has made to the advancement of science in the United States. It is clear that the NSF has an important role to play in the future of the country as international economic success is determined more and more by scientific and technological know-how. I urge my colleagues to support passage of H.R. 4184.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to our distinguished colleague from Florida, a member of the committee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. I thank the Chairman, and I thank the gentleman from New York who yielded.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4184, the National Science Foundation Authorization Act of Fiscal Year 1987, and commend the subcommittee chairman, Mr. WALGREN of Pennsylvania, and Mr. BOEHLERT of New York, the ranking minority member, for an excellent job on this bill.

Clearly, Mr. Chairman, the National Science Foundation plays a key role in promoting the scientific and engineering research needed to plant the seeds of our future technological advances.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that this authorization continues the trend of increased support for the basic sciences. Yet, in my view of even greater importance than the basic research itself, is the education and development of our next generation of researchers. Therefore, I support the increased funding for the College Science Instrumentation Program. Clearly, high quality equipment and materials are essential if we want to prepare today's students for tomorrow's challenges.

With much of our current attention focused on the trade deficit, I am encouraged that Congress, the administration, and the public now recognize the link between science and education and our competitive position in the world marketplace. For today, when Congress is under increasing pressure to reduce funding, science can sometimes be perceived to be taking needed funds away from more pressing problems. I believe it is important to realize that dollars spent on education, research, and technology are an investment in the future that benefits all Americans, an investment, I might add, that we cannot and must not lose, for if we do not make that investment, we betray the generations that follow and the scientific future of this great Nation.

This bill recognizes that fact and I urge all my colleagues to join us and support this important legislation.

I thank the Chairman, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, a member of the committee, and I commend the gentleman for his contribution to this bill.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the Chairman, and I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding and for his work on the bill.

Mr. Chairman, in years past, when there have been budgetary problems with NSF bills, I have not hesitated to come to the floor and criticize those bills and vote against those bills. But let me tell the Committee here today that there are no such problems with this particular bill. This is a good bill, this is the kind of NSF bill that we should be proud to bring to the floor. OMB has some problems with some policy statements that are in the bill, but those problems are not of a money nature. This is a bill that anyone who is concerned about the budgetary aspects can vote for. You can look at the policy things OMB is telling us about, but I would suggest that those are things that could be solved and one ought to vote for it.

Just to show you what kind of a struggle we went through, the gentleman from New York [Mr. STRATTON], a few moments ago, mentioned what he found in his trip to Antarctica. I congratulate him for that statement. I have been there, too. The kind of work done by those magnificent people down there is almost indescribable. He did a good job of pointing out some of the kinds of things that one finds there. We had to struggle with that issue in the committee. We decided there could be a modest cut in order to stick within the budget figures. But we did so reluctantly because a number of us from this committee had been there, too, and understand that the work going on is absolutely invaluable not only to this country but to the world. But it was a struggle, and we came to this kind of compromise.

We also recognized that what we do in this program is particularly of importance to our colleges and universities across the country. This is not only a science program, but it is truly, as the gentleman from Florida said just before me, an education program as well, because our colleges and universities are largely supported in their research efforts through the work of the National Science Foundation.

So this is a magnificent contribution to educating young people and ensuring that our institutions of higher learning have the kind of basis on which to make continuing contributions to our society.

So I would urge my colleagues to support this bill. It is a good bill. It is a bill that you can vote for and stay very easily within the budget constraints.

Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT] who have brought the bill to the floor in this manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has consumed 3 minutes.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee of Science and Technology, which authorizes the National Science Foundation, on producing an excellent bill. Clearly, the gentleman and the committee have always been strong supporters of the Foundation and fiscal year 1987 is no exception.

I do want to temper my praise of the committee's work with these general remarks. I think it is important to keep in mind that the National Science Foundation's request of $1,685,700,000 for fiscal year 1987 represents the largest increase—on a percentage basis—of any agency that will be funded in the HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriation Act. The increase above the 1986 adjusted level is more than $200 million. I don't think anyone on this floor has been a stronger supporter of the Foundation than myself—but I think it is important that we point out that the 302(b) allocation to the HUD Subcommittee is very, very tight—and it will be very difficult for us to find sufficient funds to fully fund every agency's desire. Basically, what I'm going to have to try to achieve, in marking up the 1987 HUD appropriation bill, is an essential balance among all the agencies—including subsidized housing.

I suspect that when we do markup the assisted housing account for fiscal year 1987 we are going to find another reduction below the adjusted current rate for 1986. Because of that we are going to have to take further reductions in subsidized housing—which provides poor families with an opportunity to live in a decent home—I want to put everyone here on notice, that I will not support additional cuts in that area to fully fund, all of the wants and desires of every other agency in the bill.

I think we are going to do the best job we can within our 302(b) allocation for the Foundation. But I'm not sure we're going to be able to come up with a $220 million increase above the current level in 1986.

Again I want to congratulate the gentleman from Pennsylvania and his subcommittee on their hard work.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to support the general provisions of the National Science Foundation authorization bill but to object to what I feel is an unreasonably low level of funding for earthquake hazard mitigation projects.

The administration's request of fiscal year 1987, which was accepted without change by the Science and Technology Committee, is $16.5 million. While this is a 5-percent increase over actual fiscal year 1986 funding, it is only 0.6 percent above the administration's request for fiscal year 1986 and is in fact 3.5 percent below actual fiscal year 1985 funding.

Mr. Chairman, let me review for the Committee some facts about earthquake probabilities. There is a 50-percent chance of a catastrophic earthquake along the southern San Andreas Fault within the next 30 years. There is a 90-percent chance of such a tragedy within the next 50 years. The initial human toll would probably be about 8,000 dead and 65,000 wounded. Property damage would likey run in the billions of dollars. The secondary effects would be even worse.

With every year that passes without an earthquake, the chances of one occurring the next year increases. Yet funding for earthquake hazard mitigation has actually been cut over the past 2 years. If anything, there should be an increasing sense of urgency; instead there is growing complacency.

While there is nothing we can do to prevent an earthquake, much can be done with seismic engineering to minimize the damage from a quake. I have introduced a bill, H.R. 1144, that would establish and fund an earthquake engineering center to expand and intensify such research. While there has been no action on the bill to date, I hope we will not have to wait for a Mexico City type disaster in this country before we take this problem seriously.

Mr. Chairman, I don't want to be put in a position of saying "I told you so." There will be a major earthquake in this country in the forseeable future—of that there is no doubt. It would be small comfort, though, to be proven right by future events when the cost would be thousands of lives and billions of dollars of damage. I urge the National Science Foundation and the appropriate congressional committees to reevaluate their priorities on the earthquake issue and to fund research at a level in relation to the threat that faces us.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time remains on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT] has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. BOEHLERT. May I inquire of our subcommittee chairman if he has any additional speakers?

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHLERT. I have one further speaker, but before I yield to Mr. COBEY, a member of our committee, Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to stress that we are talking here about a jobs bill. Jobs is my favorite four-letter word. In this bill we are talking about the international competitiveness of the United States of America in the 21st century. We have not placed great emphasis in something maybe all of us take for granted who serve on the committee, the great supercomputer initiative that we launched just 2½ years ago, under which five major research university centers across this great country of ours will be given funding from the National Science Foundation in conjunction with funding that they are able to acquire from the private sector and funding from the individual States, to guarantee that we maintain our preeminent position in the world in supercomputer technology. That is extremely important in so many phases of our activities here in the United States of America.

In addition, we have finally at long last in our committee given proper recognition to the important role of engineering in our society and in preparing ourselves to be even more competitive in the world economy.

We have already as a result of the engineering research center initiative established 11 centers across the country. Four more are included in the fiscal year 1987 budget submission that we are discussing today. It is a good bill in so many respects but it is so much more than just scientists in laboratories with test tubes and all this complicated equipment that I sometimes find it difficult to comprehend. We are talking about jobs for America with the National Science Foundation. What could be more important?

Mr. Chairman, I am proud to identify with his legislation. I want to take this time to salute the chairman of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN], for his personal commitment and leadership. This is a subcommittee and a full committee which knows no party lines. We do not work as Republicans or Democrats; we work, you will pardon me if this sounds corny, as Americans who are trying to fashion something that is good for our future and the future of generations to come.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBEY]

Mr. COBEY. I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4184, the National Science Foundation bill.

Mr. Chairman, in a year of deficit reductions and Gramm/Rudman, the President's budget of the National Science Foundation show a moderate increase. This is a continuation of support for increasing civilian basic science, and engineering research and education.

Science and engineering research and education provide the Foundation for present and future economic competitiveness. They contribute to products that improve the lives of all our citizens and help to guarantee our national defense.

The NSF budget is the primary source of support for fundamental science, and engineering research and education in U.S. colleges and universities. This community is the principal performer of basic research in the physical and natural sciences that undergirds the entire R&D enterprise, governmental and private alike. The Nation's academic institutions provide the training ground for most of the scientists and engineers who staff our industrial, academic, and military laboratories. The President's request reflects his determination to preserve the Nation's leadership in basic research and to ensure our long range economic health.

Dr. Roland Schmitt, chairman of the National Science Board and vice president of Corporate Research and Development for the General Electric Corporation put it best when commenting before our committee on the basic challenges for research. He said the basic challenges are "meeting the increasing complexity of scientific and engineering research; the resource needs and shortages; and world competition in key research areas." These three challenges must be met successfully if we are to maintain a strong, growing industrial base for our Nation, and continued improvements in the quality of life.

I'm pleased that there's a growing realization that many partners have a stake in the outcome of advancing science and technology by doing research, training people, and providing the needed funding. In the area around my district alone, we have the Research Triangle Park and three major universities who play a key role in this whole process. All North Carolina institutions combined received 21.7 million in NSF funds. I'm very pleased with the work our universities are doing in these important fields of research.

I want to congratulate the chairman of our subcommittee, Mr. WALGREN and our ranking Republican leader Mr. BOEHLERT for the leadership they provided in getting this bill to the floor.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Rhode Island [Mrs. SCHNEIDER].

Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, one of the widely recognized cornerstones of America's greatness is our leadership in scientific endeavors. We fund scientific research through many mechanisms and a variety of agencies—each with a special mission, each with a different perspective. Yet among agencies that fund scientific research the National Science Foundation stands out for the breadth of scientific endeavors it funds, for its commitment to basic research, and its involvement in the education of the next generation of scientists and engineers.

It has only been in the years since World War II that our Nation has accepted the idea that support of basic science is the foundation on which we build technological advances. We need not look far to see the fruits of our investments. Basic science is one of the few endeavors in which the United States maintains a global advantage. If we are to regain our competitive advantage in the world marketplace we must retain our leadership in fundamental science and engineering research. We must also provide for the future of scientific research through quality science and engineering education. It is this charge of the National Science Foundation that today's appropriation request addresses.

So strong is the agreement about the value of the NSF's activities that we have a bill that represents a vanishing breed in the contemporary budget process—a consensus on the amount of total spending—between the administration and a congressional committee. There is widespread agreement on the need for budgetary restraint, but even stronger agreement that our economic future depends on our ability to maintain our leadership in the basic sciences.

Although the Federal budget contains nearly $100 billion annually in the category of research and development, this number is far in excess of our actual support for the scientific basis for commercial development. The Young Commission Report on Global Competition has pointed out that the United States is behind both Germany and Japan in spending on civilian R&D as a percentage of GNP.

The call for a larger role for the Nation's civilian sector R&D comes from many quarters. Last year, at a meeting of the Business Higher Education Forum in Scottsdale AZ, the point was made that the rapid growth in military research and development was drawing our most talented young scientists away from basic research and toward military technology. Nearly two-thirds of our Nation's R&D budget is spent on military and space programs, areas where commercial spill-over is not a prime objective, and indeed is often actively discouraged for national security reasons. The huge investment we have allowed in a variety of weapon-related programs is unlikely to yield a commensurate number of "spin-off" technologies for commercial development.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the authorization provided for in this legislation. Our strength as a nation depends on our ability to compete effectively in an increasingly technological environment. Our future depends on our ability to educate the scientists and engineers of tomorrow.

Finally, we should not lose sight of our goal in choosing to support scientific activities. We fund science not only because it enriches our economy, nor because it helps ensure our competitive position in the world, although these are certainly admirable goals. We fund science for the more noble reasons that our society recognizes the importance of displacing ignorance and superstition with knowledge and understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY TO HAVE UNTIL 5 P.M., FRIDAY, JULY 11, 1986, TO FILE REPORT ON HOUSE RESOLUTION 461

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may have until 5 p.m. on July 11, 1986, to file a report on House Resolution 461.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand that this is a matter that has been cleared with the minority?

Mr. KASTENMEIER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield, the resolution pertains to the impeachment of Harry E. Claiborne, and the minority has been consulted on this request.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There was no objection.

NATIONAL NUTRITION MONITORING AND RELATED RESEARCH ACT OF 1986

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 484 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 2436.

□ 1512

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2436) to establish a coordinated National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Program, and a comprehensive plan for the assessment of the nutritional and dietary status of the U.S. population and the nutritional quality of the U.S. food supply, with provision for the conduct of scientific research and development in support of such program and plan, with Mr. KOSTMAYER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] will be recognized for 30 minutes, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON] will be recognized for 30 minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN].

□ 1515

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly support H.R. 2436, the National Monitoring and Related Research Act of 1986.

This legislation was introduced by Congressman MCKAY and Congressman BROWN of California. Each of these gentlemen have given a great deal of effort to creating a legislative vehicle which is supported by a broad cross section of organizations involved in the collection, the analysis and the use of nutrition and health data.

I want also to recognize the spirit of cooperation which this bill has enjoyed in the Science and Technology Committee under the leadership of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. LUJAN] on the minority side and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT], also on the minority side.

I also wish to especially recognize the assistance of our colleagues on the Agriculture Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] and the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], who has maintained such a special interest in this bill, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON] and others who have worked with us through the years on this issue.

H.R. 2436 is the product of 8 years of joint efforts between the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Science and Technology. The committee have worked with the administration and numerous agriculture, nutrition, and health groups to bring before the House today a bill that would meet the needs that have been expressed for more than a decade in the area of nutrition monitoring and related research.

Although H.R. 2436 has been reported by the Committee on Science and Technology and the Committee on Agriculture, it is clear that the subject matter of this legislation is also directly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Energy and Commerce. I particularly want to recognize their interest and express our appreciation for the expedited consideration that committee has given this bill.

I would at this point, like to insert a letter to Mr. FUQUA from Mr. DINGELL, which expresses the understanding among these Committees, in the RECORD, as follows:

(June 26, 1986 letter to Honorable DON FUQUA from Honorable JOHN DINGELL)

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE,
Washington, DC, June 26, 1986.

Hon. Don Fuqua,
Chairman, Committee on Science and Technology, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR DON: I want to congratulate Chairman KIKA DE LA GARZA, Subcommittee Chairman Doug Walgren and yourself for your efforts in moving H.R. 2436, the "National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act of 1986," to the House Calendar. Like an earlier version in the 98th Congress (H.R. 4684) on which I corresponded with you in September 1984, it is good legislation that is clearly timely.

Doug Walgren is particularly aware that the bill covers health and related matters that are of concern to our Committee. However, I have indicated to him that our review of the bill, as reported by the Committee on Agriculture and your Committee, indicates that we really have no problem with the bill and are supportive of it.

Nevertheless, we are concerned as we were in the last Congress, about changes made as a result of Senate action and would, in such case, request to be represented on any Conference. I believe that Congressman Walgren understands this and will work with us in this regard and will make it clear when the bill is considered on the House Floor, that our jurisdiction will be recognized and preserved. Indeed, I believe, as in 1984, a letter to be included in the floor debate and conforming these understandings will be helpful.

With best wishes.
Sincerely,

JOHN D. DINGELL,
Chairman.

Nutrition monitoring surveys under the Reagan administration have come a long way since the Department of Health and Human Services and the U.S. Department of Agriculture Joint Implementation Plan was submitted to the Congress in 1981. The major forcus of those efforts has been on data collection and analyses, rather than on research.

Ways to improve the accuracy of the data, to make the data more useful for a broad range of users and to put together the data and surveys in ways that are useful on every level in our society have received inadequate attention, and yet these are the very factors that will increase the usefulness of the system and, in the long range, reduce the cost of a national nutrition monitoring system. Unfortunately, these are the factors that have received inadequate attention by previous administrations.

The difficulty in planning and implementing nutrition monitoring systems which integrate all these elements is not a matter of political philosophy, but rather it is a matter of priority setting, of cooperation, and of distributing responsibility among major responsible agencies.

H.R. 2436 fixes responsibility and coordination jointly with the Department of Health and Human Services and the U.S. Department of Agriculture. All Federal agencies that use or collect nutrition monitoring data are to participate in the preparation and the implementation of an interagency plan and budget under this legislation to accomplish specified priorities. We all recognize that a legislative mandate cannot overcome the will to hold close to one's vest or create the will to put aside what can be bureaucratic turf considerations for the sake of national priorities, but H.R. 2436 will allow the Congress the oversight needed to insure that national nutrition monitoring objectives are met.

The American Medical Association has recently indicated that the realization of a comprehensive national nutrition monitoring system was extremely important to the Nation, but they noted the continued lack of cooperation on the Federal level as a major barrier because of the limited cooperation between the Department of Health and Human Services and the U.S. Department of Agriculture in this area. The bill we have before us sets up a mechanism so that at the very minimum, the Congress will be able to see the degree to which this essential cooperation is achieved.

In addition, H.R. 2436 emphasizes two areas that the public and private sectors have identified as major important priorities to improve the current efforts that are under way. The first priority is to strenthen the assistance to State and local governments in their efforts to conduct nutrition monitoring. At present the Centers for Disease Control provides technical assistance to a selected number of States and local health jurisdictions. This consultation, as well as demonstration projects, should be available to all States who seek assistance. To make the Federal data sources more cost effective, systems must be in place to make available the statistical techniques that are available to the Center for Disease Control and State and local governments so that Federal data can be related and applied to understand what is happening in state and local populations.

The second priority is to accelerate research on methods for assessing dietary, nutritional, and health status. This methods research has the clear potential to reduce costs involving this area and by improving the usefulness of information and leveraging these funds through the involvement of industry and government partnerships, we can make a much more effective effort and make the Federal dollar deliver more to our citizens for each one.

The components of H.R. 2436 were not developed in a vacuum. Many of the features were recommended in reports of the National Academy of Sciences in 1981, again in 1984. On May 30, 1986, the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Agriculture released a preliminary copy of the long awaited progress report from the Joint Nutrition Monitoring Evaluation Committee, which involves both those agencies.

I want to set out in the record some of the recommendations that those agencies have now made so we can sense the direction which they themselves would encourage our national policy to go.

These recommendations closely parallel the thrust of this bill.

They recommend, the Joint Nutrition Evaluation Committee of the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Agriculture, that we establish a mechanism for learning more about the information that users of this kind of data need, especially information for Federal agencies, so there is more to be done in gathering data.

They recommend that we increase the availability of nutrition information from Federal surveys to those around the country.

They recommend that we improve the comparability of the data that we now collect so that more meaning can be gathered from the effort that we now make.

They recommend that we improve the timely publication of the data so that the judgments that might be made from this kind of information can be related directly to the problems of the day, rather than to be 10 years behind.

They recommend that we continue and expand efforts to study the factors that influence intake and nutritional status, especially among high-risk subgroups.

They recommend that we increase research to improve methods for assessing dietary intake and nutritional status, and they recommend that we provide adequate resources for the national monitoring system to implement these recommendations.

Now, if you take their recommendations seriously, you will be led step-by-step into the current of this bill and you will see that what we are recommending is broadly supported and now officially recommended as the direction national policy should go by the Joint Nutrition Monitoring Evaluation Committee of the administration.

In addition to these recommendations, the report interprets for the first time the available data on the food intake, nutritional status, and health of our citizens. However, both Departments, both the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Health and Human Services, caution that, "Most of the data presented in the report were collected during the 1970's and may not reflect current conditions."

It is in my view unbelievable that we have up-to-date information, indeed flash estimates of the data on the gross national product, the economic health of our country, we have it on the cost of living index, we have it on other national statistics, but in 1986 we only know the nutritional status as it related to health by looking back, as far back as the early 1970's, and we have nothing more current to give us guidance other than that.

H.R. 2436 is designed to correct this problem by requiring a percentage of the data to be collected and analyzed each year.

According to the National Academy of Sciences reports, the continuous collection and analysis of data would be much more cost-effective than the present system of gathering things in years past and then getting together the momentum to treat it all at once. It is something that we are doing on an ongoing basis and we are going to be doing it in a much more cost-effective way.

You will hear those opposed to H.R. 2436 state that the cost of this bill will be some multi-million-dollar cost beyond current expenditures. Nothing could be further from the truth. The most critical truth that I have been able to find in this whole area is that we do not have accurate information on what the actual expenditures now are in this area. We know that in the overall, we are spending something in the range of $260 million, but not one person in this body can tell you how it is spent or who is spending it. It seems to me that the least obligation we owe as trustees of tax money is to manage it wisely, to manage it accurately, and that is the farthest thing from the truth in this area. We do not even know what is being spent, let alone be able to control some of the bureaucratic directions that money that is spent below the line item level in agencies as large as the Department of Health and Human Services or as large as the Department of Agriculture or the nine other agencies that are spending money in this area, we do not even know what they are doing, let alone be able to look our constituents in the face and say that we have properly managed their money.

Moreover, this bill provides for literally no spending, as a practical matter. It only seeks to create a plan, a plan that would then be developed in the administration and sent to the Congress for our evaluation, and that is all, period, simple, nothing more; so the thought that somehow or other we are requiring or somehow are committing to the expenditure of multimillions of dollars is just plain fiction.

You will also hear that since no new funds are authorized, the agencies will have to redirect resources from other programs somehow if this bill is enacted into law. That is clearly not the intent of the bill. I can find it nowhere in the bill and believe that it has to be an argument made up out of whole cloth.

The intent is that the agencies are expected to use resources currently used for nutrition monitoring and that this bill mandates nothing of the agencies other than the development of a plan, a plan that then is sent to the Congress and other officials in the administration for their evaluation. There is no way that the development of a plan can threaten to redirect any resources from other efforts in and of itself.

Under the provisions of the bill, the Federal agencies could request either more resources or less resources, as appropriate; but all our citizens would ask for nothing more. Congress will have the chance to review a specific budget line item for all Federal nutrition monitoring activities. Congress can then review and determine the appropriate level of expenditures for assessing the nutritional and health status of our citizens.

Passage of this bill will allow both Congress and the public, for the first time, the opportunity to exercise some oversight, literally to know what is going on.

We are presently spending $260 million with blinders on. Certainly our public does not want a know-nothing approach in an area that is as sensitive and can contribute so basically to the well-being of Americans across the board in our society.

So, Mr. Chairman, I urge support for this bill. It is a breath of fresh air after 8 years of stalemate between massive bureaucracies, each with their own interests and perspectives.

We mandate nothing except a system that will let us evaluate the cooperation that these agencies can bring together on the board as joint responsible agencies.

So I urge all of us in this Congress to support this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I rise in support of H.R. 2436.

Nutrition research has been responsible for some of the greatest strides in the field of human health. The more we learn, the more we discover how our diet helps determine our lifespan and its quality.

Yet nutrition research is hampered in this country because we do not know as much as we should about the diet and nutrition of our citizens.

That is partly because we do not do enough research, but it is largely because we are not taking full advantage of the research the Federal Government is doing already.

For example, both the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Health and Human Services conduct studies, but they are infrequent, the data is never fully analyzed, and the study methods make it difficult to compare the results.

There has been significant improvement, but the bottom line is we are still not getting our money's worth out of these studies. Indeed, it is difficult to ascertain what our money's worth should be. In the past, the agencies have had trouble telling us just what they are spending on nutrition monitoring.

The bill addresses these concerns.

Nutrition monitoring would be a line item so everyone inside and outside the Government could easily see what is being spent, and all the agencies that deal with nutrition monitoring would be required to coordinate and cooperate, how refreshing that would be, and come up with a long-range plan to improve their operations. The agencies always tell us this is their goal, anyway.

This bill would cost virtually nothing, something else that is refreshing, but could vastly expand the amount of useful information deductible from current studies. The bill does not mandate the creation of any new positions within Federal agencies and does not authorize spending for any new programs.

The bill would, however, ensure that officials in two existing positions, the Secretaries of Agriculture and Health and Human Services, see that we get the full value of their agencies' existing studies.

We should learn more about human health as a result.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT] has consumed 3 minutes.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished ranking member of our full committee, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. LUJAN].

Mr. LUJAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 2436, the National Nutrition Monitoring and Research Related Act. As the ranking Republican member on the Science and Technology Committee, I would like to thank the subcommittee chairman, Mr. WALGREN, and Mr. BOEHLERT, our ranking member on the subcommittee, for their interest and commitment to work through objections I raised to the bill, as it was introduced.

Following subcommittee markup, we negotiated on reducing the immediate costs in the bill related to staffing of the Interagency Nutrition Monitoring Board, giving the Board flexibility in designating the agencies best equipped to operate the competitive grants programs, limiting membership of the Advisory Council from 15 to 11, as well as staggering the appointments to the Council. There were several changes we made in the wording of the legislation to clarify any ambiquities in the bill and the report.

I would like to comment on the purpose of the legislation as I see it. First, I commend the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Health and Human Services for the improved management and commitment they have shown over the last 7 years to enhance coordination. Coordination of the Federal bureaucracy is a goal we all should strive for, and I believe there is always some room for improvement. I don't, however, share the opinion of some Members that nothing at all has been accomplished to increase our Federal investment in nutrition monitoring and research. Statements of that nature are as extreme and unfair as statements saying everything is hunky-dory.

Second, I believe this bill is a means to enhance the Federal investment in nutrition monitoring in such a way that the data we obtain in national surveys is more quickly available for interpretation, and improvements can be made where necessary and appropriate. This bill will not solve the problem of hunger in the United States, but it will tell us more about the utility of our Federal funds.

It is not my intention to scrap the ongoing efforts within USDA and HHS in lieu of a "broad new program" but, rather, the bill, as I see it, provides an enhanced way of doing business.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MACKAY].

Mr. MACKAY. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I am a Johnny-comelately in this particular effort. I came on the Committee on Science and Technology 3½ years ago and found myself in a hearing where clearly people were in a state of great tension and clearly they were arguing about a matter they had discussed before at great length. I would just like to give my colleagues some background on this because I think people need this in order to understand what the argument is all about.

This bill is the culmination of an effort that began in 1969 with the White House Conference on Food, Nutrition and Health. That conference called for a coordinated National Nutrition Monitoring Plan. That conference asked for 2 pieces of information: One, the status of nutrition in America, which was not then available; and two, a baseline so that interested agencies like the Congress and interested professionals could determine whether things were getting better or were getting worse.

In 1970, the Department of Health and Human Services started a program called the HANES survey, Health And Nutrition Examination Study. They did two of these during the 1970's. These are sophisticated, statistically valid samples using both blood and urine tests. They could have become a valuable baseline effort, but the HANES study was not coordinated with the National Food Consumption Study which USDA had been doing every 10 years, which used different sampling, different data collected for different purposes, and further, the HANES data, collected at such great expense, was never analyzed.

In its oversight function, the Congress began prodding these two agencies. "Why can you not coordinate? Why can we not get a statistically valid sample? Why can we not get a baseline?"

This started in the Committee on Agriculture. It was then taken up in the Committee on Science and Technology.

In 1978, both the House and the Senate mandated a plan of implementation, mandated these two agencies to give us a plan for how this is going to be done. In 1982 we got the plan. That is 4 years. Four years waiting for a plan of implementation. The fancier the plan, the less actually got accomplished.

The HANES data has never been fully analyzed from 1971. Then, out of the 1983 argument, which occurred about hunger in America, President Reagan appointed a Hunger Task Force, and guess what it recommended? It recommended that we have a National Nutrition Monitoring Survey that is coordinated between these two agencies, with data available on a prompt and continuous basis.

So here we are, we are all trying to be polite, and the fact of the matter is that there has been 8 years of sheer sandbagging on the part of two of the most massive bureaucracies in the Federal Government, and we now in the Congress are having to mandate a coordinated plan with consistent data, consistent sampling, consistent techniques.

Will it cost money? No. We are simply asking people to do what they are doing now on an uncoordinated basis in a sensible, logical fashion. It will require some bureaucrats to change and it will mean we will finally get some useful data. Similar coordination efforts already exist between agencies that have to do with studies of acid rain, that have to do with studies of climate research, that have to do with studies of toxicology. These are the same type problems.

When we get rid of all the rhetoric and all of the talk about increasing Federal bureaucracies, what we are talking about doing here is requiring agencies to coordinate their efforts so we get a useful product so that the people of America can determine: First, what is going on in nutrition in America; and second, so we can get a baseline and determine whether things are getting better or things are getting worse.

It is really a very simple argument, it is a very simple piece of legislation, and I urge its adoption.

□ 1540

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON], a member of our committee.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act. I do so for several reasons.

It is not that I am opposed to national nutrition monitoring; it is simply that I am opposed to enacting a new piece of legislation when we have existing legislation that I think is very adequate.

We have a saying down in Texas that you cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear. The bill that is before us today is an effort to do just that. I want to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT] for their efforts in the committee and the subcommittee. This legislation that is before us today is an improved version.

When it first came to the subcommittee, there were many deficiencies in it. Those have been worked on and improved, but the fact of the matter is that we still have a sow's ear before us today.

One of the purposes of the act is to provide a coordinated effort on nutrition monitoring. We already have that. This report that I have right here is going to be released on July 15, and it is the Nutrition Monitoring in the United States, a prepublication copy. It has been put together by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and Health and Human Services.

It has the advisory committee that is in the bill before us today. It has a joint working team effort between USDA and HHS. This is a report that was required by the Nutrition Monitoring Act of 1981. So basically we have today what they are trying to pass in the legislative form.

The second point that I would like to make is that the bill that is before us today allegedly has not additional costs, other than perhaps $250- to $350,000 to pay an administrator if, in fact, they decide to have an administrator and to pay some travel expenses of the advisory committee.

The same bill, in the last session, had a cost of $30 million. They have pulled that out, and in lieu of it, they have a section 106 in the act that says "The Secretary shall come before the Congress each year and request an annual authorization."

The U.S. Department of Agriculture and Health and Human Services estimate that in order to meet all the requirements of this new legislation, it could cost anywhere from a minimum of $3 million a year up to $15 million a year for the next 10 years. When you add all that up, it could cost as much as an additional $182 million.

I will admit that it is probably not going to cost that much, but the minimum estimate is $70 million in additional dollars.

When we are living in an era of, if not reduced spending, at least holding the line on spending, I do not see that we can afford this kind of a potential expenditure.

Basically, we have a piece of legislation before us today. It is not bad legislation in an environment where spending was not a priority consideration, but we have got the pieces already in place that they are trying to flesh out, so I see no reason to go ahead with the bill before us today.

For that reason, I would ask that when it comes time to vote, that my colleagues vote no on this piece of legislation.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER], a member of our committee.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The real question before us here today on this bill is do we really need to do this? There is nothing terribly wrong with this bill, but the question that we have to ask is: Do we really need to do it?

At a time of scarce Federal resources, do we really need to be creating another new program? Let us face it; what we are doing here is creating a program to do what it is that we should be doing. We ought to be doing oversight.

The chairman previously described the present status of affairs as the know-nothing approach. That is our fault. If we do not know what is going on in these nutrition programs, we created them. They have been done at our behest. If we do not know what is going on in them, that is our fault.

More bureaucracy is not the solution to failed congressional oversight.

Here we are. We have created a whole series of uncoordinated programs that we cannot monitor and now our solution is to create another program to look at all the other programs that were created before.

There is a real good use of taxpayer dollars for you. And, of course, what we are told is, by the people who come here to the floor today, "It is not going to cost anything."

If you really believe that, then I will introduce you to the guy who is still selling Brooklyn Bridge shares.

Because the fact is, you cannot put together these kinds of things without them costing some money. This is going to cost. When we get to the amendments, I think we will show you how it is going to cost.

Let us face it; nutrition research is important and it is being done.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON] has just shown you a whole document of how it is being done and how it is being coordinated. All this particular approach wants to do is now add some more bureaucrats to the mix.

More bureaucrats is a drain on funds where we could be doing valuable research instead of draining resources for more bureaucrats. Do we need to do this? Should we do this? The answer is clearly "no."

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Chairman, I strongly support H.R. 2436, the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act of 1986, a legislative proposal which has been developed through years of cooperation between the Science and Technology Committee and the Committee on Agriculture. H.R. 2436 was introduced by Mr. MACKAY, Mr. BROWN of California, and Mr. WALGREN, each of these gentlemen have worked tirelessly in creating a legislative vehicle which enjoys a broad base of support from a variety of organizations involved in the collection, analysis and use of nutrition and health data.

At this point Mr. Chairman, I would like to acknowledge the spirit of bipartisan cooperation which this bill has enjoyed in the Science and Technology Committee under the leadership of Mr. LUJAN and Mr. BOEHLERT. I also wish to especially recognize the assistance of our colleagues on the Agriculture Committee, Mr. DE LA GARZA, Mr. PANETTA, and Mr. EMERSON who have worked with us through the years on this issue.

A national nutrition monitoring system is a basic tool necessary to examine linkages between food consumption patterns, nutritional status, and health status. The baseline data and projected trends should be the basis for establishing food, nutrition and health policies, research priorities and education. At present, resources for Federal intervention programs, research and education are being allocated by policymakers, including Congress, on the basis of data that are 6 to 10 years old or nonexistent. All sectors of society use and rely on nutrition monitoring data. The data users have become frustrated that a more timely and reliable system has not evolved. H.R. 2436 will ensure that the present system is more responsive to the needs of society.

Over 70 organizations have endorsed this bill and I would like to include the list of supporters as part of the RECORD. Agricultural commodity, health, senior, religious and advocacy organizations all indicate that current Federal efforts in this area need strengthening.

The purpose of H.R. 2436 is not to create bureaucracies nor duplicate ongoing efforts as argued by the administration. Rather, the bill works by building on existing Federal management structures and ensuring continued scientific and technical advice from Federal policymakers and an independent advisory group. H.R. 2436 serves to make more effective use of Federal and State expenditures for nutrition monitoring and to enhance the performance and benefits of current Federal nutrition monitoring and related research activities.

At present, long-range planning and priority setting does not occur in a coordinated fashion. Each Federal agency involved in gathering and analyzing nutritional data follows their own agenda. Attempts in the past to coordinate these activities have failed—resulting in delays and unnecessary duplication.

Through the coordinated and bipartisan efforts of the Science and Technology Committee and the Agriculture Committee, H.R. 2436 has emerged as an uncomplicated means to set priorities, coordinate and effectively manage nutrition monitoring activities at the Federal level.

At this point, I would like to briefly review the way the bill as introduced has been streamlined through modifications by the Science and Technology Committee and the Agriculture Committee.

The primary responsibility for developing the comprehensive nutrition monitoring and related research plan and for implementing the Coordinated Interagency program now rests jointly with the Secretary of USDA and the Secretary of DHHS, rather than solely with the Secretary of DHHS.

The Administrator for Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research is to be an optional, rather than a mandatory appointment.

The Advisory Council is to consist of 11, rather than 15 appointed members.

All dietary guidance to be published by any Federal agency must be submitted to the Secretaries of USDA and DHHS. This provision will help to assure that basic dietary guidance from all Federal agencies is consistent and the confusion which frequently exists will be reduced.

Mr. Chairman, I encourage my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to carefully consider H.R. 2436. It is a sound measure which will promote the development of a coordinated, cost-effective monitoring system essential to developing a clear picture of the nutritional status of the American population. I urge you to vote for its final passage.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 2436, the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act of 1986.

In 1977, when I chaired the Subcommittee on Domestic and International Scientific Planning, Analysis and Cooperation, the subcommittee held hearings on the state-of-the-art in nutrition research. The common theme of all public witnesses focused on the woeful inadequacy of the U.S. nutrition surveillance system.

In 1983, the Subcommittee on Natural Resources, Agriculture Research and Environment, which I now chair, held a hearing on national food fortification policies. At that time, Food and Drug Administration witnesses told us they were unable to assess the adequacy of current policies because recent baseline data on the nutritional status of the U.S. population were not available. Food fortification is not a trivial matter since overconsumption of some nutrients could have toxic effects, yet in the case of other nutrients an inadequate intake could be debilitating. The necessary data had been collected in the 1970's, but not analyzed. This information has now been analyzed. Except for historical purposes, the investment in that effort was of little value. It is inconceivable that the United States would base food fortification policy on 1970 data in 1986. This is but one example of the shameful state of affairs that our nutrition monitoring system is in at the present time. The system is simply not working. H.R. 2436 will assure that corrective action is taken.

Investment in a clearer understanding of the relationship between diet, nutrition, and health would unquestionably increase the quality of life while reducing the cost of health care. Every year Congress sets priorities for health care, food assistance, food and environmental safety, agriculture production, and biomedical research without knowing the nutritional status of our citizens or the nutrient adequacy of the food supply. Policymakers simply cannot allocate limited resources wisely or judge the value of Federal programs without knowledge of nutrition and health trends. Neither Congress nor the executive branch can fulfill its oversight responsibility without accurate and timely data, and without the ability to track Federal funds being spent on nutrition monitoring and research. It is no wonder that organization after organization—from the President's task force on food assistance to the Heritage foundation, the National Council of Senior Citizens, and the National PTA—continue to express concern about our untimely, inefficient, and antiquated nutrition monitoring system.

It is time this Nation began focusing on health promotion and disease prevention to ease the cost of health care. It is also time we apply available technology to accurately assess and effectively maintain the nutrition-related health of our people. The assurance of a timely nutrition and health surveillance system is not enough. Unless the present imprecise, costly, and invasive assessment methods are improved through research and technology transfer, funds expended will continue to be wasted. That is a point this administration and past administrations apparently have not understood and still do not understand.

H.R. 2436, as reported, has taken into consideration many of the administration's concerns previously expressed about the bill as introduced. Yet, the administration still continues to find new reasons to oppose the measure. The opposition now centers around two of the bill's initiatives which are administration it declares unnecessary and costly. One priority is to leverage funds through industry/government/academia partnerships to improve assessment methods. This provision is in fact a cost saving measure.

The second priority is to provide technical assistance to State and local governments. This important feature of the bill was included at the request of State public health leaders. This priority does not create a new program, but rather provides a legislative mandate for the current nutrition surveillance activities of the Centers for Disease Control [CDC]. This will insure that the CDC program, as well as other nutrition monitoring activities, will not be terminated since the lack of congressional requirement for specific programs is frequently cited by OMB as justification for eliminating important programs. This priority is also a cost saving measure which would allow all States to receive technical assistance when State funds are expended for nutrition and health data, and allow all States to benefit from Federal data sources. The principle objections to these priorities have come from USDA, yet the initiative for assisting States in this regard is an ongoing function of DHHS.

The administration's other major objection to H.R. 2436 is the requirement of an annual report on the National Nutrition Monitoring Program. An annual report will provide for the evaluation of the program's effectiveness as well as an up-to-date analysis of the nutritional and health status of our citizens. This is exactly what is needed by policymakers at all levels of government. When program administrators object to management tools that will facilitate public and congressional oversight, a legislative mandate is long overdue.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2436.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to add my support for the passage of H.R. 2436, the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act, without amendment. With the implementation of this bill we will have, for the first time in our Nation, a comprehensive, coordinated program for national nutrition surveillance, with special emphasis on the nutritional problems of high-risk groups and the availability of recent, policy-relevant data.

This system was first recommended in 1969 at the White House Conference on Food, Nutrition and Health and we have been struggling to put such a system in place ever since. Hearings on national nutritional status monitoring priorities and systems have been held by subcommittees of the Committee on Science and Technology since 1977. In 1984, H.R. 4684, was introduced in response to the nutrition monitoring needs expressed at oversight hearings and recommended by Government agencies, professional organizations, and nutritional scientists.

Since that time, the nutrition monitoring bill, now H.R. 2436, has been modified to meet the concerns and data needs of numerous organizations, senior citizens, health and nutrition professionals, scientists, education officials, advocates for children and low-income people, public officials and minorities. It also has enjoyed strong bipartisan support during its consideration by the Science and Technology Committee and the Agriculture Committee.

It is clear that this bill is needed. I have a special interest in it as a member of the Select Committee on Hunger. I believe that the emphasis it gives to high risk groups and improved timeliness of data collection, analysis and dissemination, and the assistance it provides to localities and States in their collection of nutrition data, will go a long way toward creating an early warning system for hunger in our Nation. I invite our colleagues to join in voting in favor of H.R. 2436.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MONSON].

Mr. MONSON. Mr. Chairman, as I look at this bill, it is hard to find why we should argue against it, because the programs that are contained in it are so good and so needed; but as I realize what else is going on in the federal system right now, it is obvious that it is a duplication of what is already occurring.

If we are not getting the information that we need from what is already going on, then we need to do something to stimulate a better approach to that, but the creation of a new program without eliminating existing programs is an added duplication that is going to cost additional money.

As a State official, I watched over and over as we, the Federal Government, began programs that were duplications of other programs that were already in existence. I frequently ask the question: Why, when a new program like that is created, are not old ones eliminated so that we do not have that kind of duplication?

If we could do that in this instance, if we could eliminate that kind of duplication, eliminate the spending that goes on for those programs, then I would have no objection to going ahead with this. It is going to cost us some money, say what you want to about it. When a new program is created, new things are mandated to be done, and we are going to be spending some more money.

Whether or not that is going to come out of other expenditures that are going on remains to be seen. What we do know is that it will cost money and that it is going to have to come from somewhere. We are either going to have to give it to them from the Congress through appropriations, or we are going to have to oversee the reprogramming of funding within those agencies already.

Now the statement was also made that there is no spending in this bill. Well, one of the things that is contained within this bill is a mandate that the program come back with a grant program included in it. I have never seen a grant program yet that does not cost money.

If we are going to have a grant program, that is going to cost money; we ought to define what the limits of that are before we get carried away with it.

So I would like to see that changed. If we can make some of these improvements in the bill, I can certainly support it; but without it, I think it is just another duplication, more additional spending that we cannot afford in the existing budgetary conditions.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LELAND].

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his leadership in this matter, as well as the chairman of the Subcommittee on Nutrition of the Committee on Agriculture for his leadership.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Chairman, the Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act (H.R. 2436) provides a long overdue organizational framework for a nutrition surveillance system. For more than a year H.R. 2436 has been actively debated by Members of the House Committee on Science and Technology and the House Committee on Agriculture. As a result, significant revisions were made so that the bill is now supported by over 70 organizations which range from scientific professionals to agricultural commodity groups. There was no opposition to H.R 2436 in the House Agriculture Committee when it was reported for consideration to the House on June 19, 1986. The bill was reported with one amendment which was proposed by the gentleman from Missouri, the Honorable BILL EMERSON, the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Domestic Marketing, Consumer Relations, and Nutrition. The Emerson amendment, which is part of the bill being considered today, clarifies the language on dietary guidance. H.R. 2436 also received strong bipartisan support from the House Science and Technology Committee when reported on March 4, 1986.

For nearly 10 years the Committee on Agriculture and the Science and Technology Committee have sought to establish an effective national nutrition monitoring system. Prior legislation resulted in a joint implementation plan for a comprehensive national nutrition monitoring system [NNMS] submitted to Congress in 1981. This plan provided a report on Federal nutrition monitoring activities through 1987, and attempted to coordinate the nationwide food consumption survey conducted by USDA and the national health and nutrition examination survey [HNAMES] carried out by the Department of Health and Human Services. What was not achieved under the plan but would be achieved under H.R. 2436 is a continuous survey sampling that is reliable and compatible with those conducted by other agencies of the Federal Government and with State and local governments. What the plan did not accomplish is an integrated measure of food consumption, dietary intake, and related health implications that could well be achieved from more carefully designed national surveys.

H.R. 2436 provides the framework for coordination among Federal agencies that is currently lacking. Over nine agencies of the Federal Government now engage in nutrition research and training activities spending well over $200 million. The Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Commerce separately collect nutrition-related data on various sectors of our population through 19 separate surveys. In 1985, the Department of Health and Human Services estimated that about $13 million was being spent on nutrition monitoring activities, but could not provide an actual figure because costs were not contained in separate line items within the Department's budget. The Department of Agriculture's Human Nutrition Information Service [HNIS] spent about $13 million in fiscal 1986 for various activities relating to food supply and nutritional status studies, including the decennial national food consumption survey, without precise accounting for distinct nutrition monitoring activities.

In recent years there has been ample criticism of the shortcomings of agency coordination in data collection, analysis, and reporting on the ground that we do not have a comprehensive view of the nutritional status of our population. The 1985 report to the President and Congress by the National Agriculture Research and Extension Users Advisory Board is one example of statements calling for improved integration of resources. It stated:

> These limitations were a result of poor coordination among the appropriate Federal agencies. Each Department would conduct its own survey while ignoring the opportunity to coordinate with other agencies to economize and perhaps make the results more conclusive. Specific steps should be taken to coordinate the more than nine ongoing research studies under the auspices of four agencies.

Statements by the American Medical Association before the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology this year indicated that a comprehensive nutrition monitoring system is important to the promotion of health and prevention of disease, and "the current impasse should be resolved in 1986 by focused efforts of the Secretaries of two Departments."

These and other statements about the need for greater coordination, standardized procedures for data collection, and improved planning have emphasized the need for enactment of the Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act. This bill seeks to eliminate the current disarray in nutrition research by designating the Secretaries of the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Agriculture as the leaders in devising a national nutrition monitoring plan. Together, they will share the responsibility for timely, accurate data collection, while being required to stipulate in their annual fiscal budgets line items for nutrition monitoring activities. Together the Secretaries will develop long-range goals for monitoring, on a continuing basis, the food consumption practices and nutritional health of our general population. Together the Secretaries will be directed to work with State and local governments and the private sector to develop methodologies for nutritional studies based on uniform standards and practical measures.

The mechanism for achieving these objectives will be a seven-member independent task force, or interagency Board, controlled by the Secretaries. This Board may incorporate the existing Interagency Committee on Human Research, but goes further than that Board in its responsibility for research and monitoring activities. The key functions of the interagency Board would be to update the nutrition monitoring plan in such a way that a continuous data collection and nutrition surveillance system would be implemented by 1990. The Board could draw on the expertise of the scientific community through a council designated to evaluate data collection methods and recommend efficient and accurate reporting techniques. Overall the nutrition monitoring plan should provide nutritional and dietary information on our general population, with a special focus toward those most at risk and living in specific geographic areas.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Nutrition of the House Agriculture Committee, I have reviewed information provided through existing surveys and have found the results disappointing. While there may be information available pertaining to dietary intake of a sample population surveyed, often this data is based solely on dietary recall and is not collected over a long enough period to yield reliable conclusions about the nutritional status of that group. Specific studies may examine the height and weight of newborns, but make no effort to follow the developmental patterns of those same babies who may or may not receive supplemental food assistance. Food consumption surveys are often distinct from dietary intake analysis and the ramifications for determining how these affect health are nearly impossible to determine.

In my view, H.R. 2436 is needed because it holds two agencies responsible for the efforts they are making to tell us something about the nutritional status of our citizens. It holds them accountable for the money we are spending, and the results we are getting. But, most important, this bill is needed because it will allow us to base food policy decisions over the next decade, and in the next century, on sound information. H.R. 2436 is critical to our planning and legislating, to our decisions about our food production and resources, and to our health over the long term.

I understand that a number of amendments to this bill may be offered today. H.R. 2436 was carefully examined by two committees of the House of Representatives. Members of both the Committees on Science and Technology and Agriculture had ample opportunity to amend the bill during that process. The only amendments which do not fall into this category deal with the language pertaining to section 106(a). That section would require that funding for the comprehensive plan be carried as separate line items in the budget and, to the maximum extent feasible, be carried as 3-year appropriations.

Except for this issue, what is proposed now is to consume valuable time on the House floor on what appears to be technical changes that could have been handled in the committees' markups.

For that reason, I urge the adoption of H.R. 2436 without amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has consumed 8 minutes.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Chairman, the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act of 1986 was referred jointly to the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Science and Technology. Both committees have considered this bill and have completed action.

The purpose of H.R. 2436 is to establish a 10-year Coordinated Nutrition Monitoring Program in which public and private interests and priorities concerning this issue are discussed and evaluated in a cooperative manner. The bill establishes a Board comprised of representatives of Federal agencies involved in nutrition monitoring; a council comprised of persons providing scientific and technical assistance on nutrition monitoring; and, a grants program for development of uniform standards for monitoring dietary status and for State and local governments to develop the capacity to conduct nutrition monitoring.

I fully support nutrition monitoring activities. In fact, I was the author of an amendment to the 1985 farm bill that directs the Secretary to include in its nationwide food consumption survey a sample that is representative of low-income individuals. In addition the USDA will collect information on food purchases and other expenditures by low-income individuals when conducting the Department's continuing survey of individual food intake and any nationwide food consumption survey. The Secretary must continue to maintain the Department's nutrient data base and encourage research by public and private entities relating to effective standards, methodologies, and technologies for accurate assessment of nutritional and dietary status. This amendment is a part of Public Law 99-198.

I offered an amendment during the Agriculture Committee markup, which was accepted. My amendment clarified title III concerning dietary guidance. Any dietary guidance to be issued by a Federal agency will be submitted to the Secretaries of Agriculture and HHS to be reviewed before publication. This first phase of the review process will be completed within 1 month. Dietary guidance which is considered to be basic dietary guidance for the general population will be reviewed by the Secretaries and will not be released until approval is granted and notification is made to the head of the Federal agency issuing such guidance. This second phase of the review process must be completed within 6 months. In addition, basic dietary guidance includes guidelines for health promotion and disease prevention.

The Departments of Agriculture and HHS are responsible for providing nutrition information from the Federal Government. Now we can ensure that the basic dietary guidance issued by the Federal Government is consistent and compatible and that the Federal Government speaks with one voice on this issue to the general population. Therefore, every Federal agency, which includes an executive department, an independent Federal establishment, or a corporation or other entity established by the Congress which is owned in whole or in part by the United States, must comply with the provisions of title III.

It is my hope that this bill will improve the system for nutrition monitoring and will provide more accurate and up-to-date information on the nutritional status of Americans.

I would like to mention that the two Departments, Agriculture and HHS, recently sent to the committee a prepublication copy of "Nutrition Monitoring in the United States: A Progress Report from the Joint Nutrition Monitoring Evaluation Committee." This document represents the first time the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Health and Human Services have consolidated data on nutritional issues into one report. The report will be formally released when it is printed, by July 15, 1986.

The report should serve as a valuable reference providing information on food intake, nutritional status, and health.

Several recommendations were included in this report, such as: Improvement in information exchange between those who gather the data and those who use it; an increase in the use of the data collected and improvement in the compatibility of the data from all Federal surveys; improvements in the methods for assessing information on nutritional status; and identification of more sources to include in the nutrition monitoring system.

I commend the two Departments for the improvement already made to the nutrition monitoring system and look forward to an even better system.

I would like to mention several accomplishments achieved by the agencies involved in nutrition monitoring. I realize problems have existed; however, those citing problems should not neglect to mention the accomplishments as well.

It took 6 years after completion of data collection for the HHS study (1971–74) to process the data. However, much of the second study (1976–80) was processed within 2 years.

A survey addressing the need to collect data on specific subpopulations, was conducted in 1982–84. Release of data was begun in 1 year. Data tapes for the remainder should be available by end of 1986.

The third HHS study is scheduled to be in the field in 1988. The responsible agency is proceeding with automation of the dietary interview. This and other procedures will result in a much shorter collection-to-release time than in the past.

The Centers for Disease Control produces an annual publication entitled "Nutrition Surveillance" that makes available nutrition-related data collected by State and local health departments. Monthly and quarterly tabulations are also available.

The continuing survey of food intakes by individuals was initiated by USDA in the spring of 1985, and the first data was released in December 1985. The survey is designed to capture usual dietary intake by resurveying the same individuals up to 6 times during a 12-month period.

The next USDA study is scheduled to begin in the spring of 1987.

These are significant achievements and the Agriculture Department and the Department of Health and Human Services have improved nutrition monitoring over the past 5 years.

Further improvements can come through H.R. 2436. I urge your support.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON] has consumed 7 minutes.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, today we are considering the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act of 1985, H.R. 2436. The purpose of this legislation is to make more effective use of Federal and State expenditures for nutrition monitoring, and to improve the performance and benefits of current Federal nutrition monitoring and related research activities.

This legislation is deeply needed, especially now when high budget deficits have made us all committed to improving the productivity of current Federal programs. There is no excuse for not getting the most benefit possible from the nutrition research and monitoring programs which are funded by our taxpayers.

This legislation is needed because our current Federal nutrition efforts are disjointed. Several agencies within our Federal Government have conducted nutrition-related research to meet their individual needs, including the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Defense, and the Department of Health and Human Services. Nutrition research undertaken by various Federal agencies has not been coordinated, and frequently has been conducted in a manner which does not allow for comparison between various studies. This lack of coordination has resulted in a very real loss of knowledge which could have been generated with relatively little extra effort.

With regard to nutrition monitoring surveys, the results of nutrition monitoring surveys have not been made available in a timely fashion, often being released years after the initial data was collected. The resulting lack of timely, objective nutrition monitoring data has resulted in the President or Congress reacting to hunger and malnutrition crises without the essential information needed to develop informed policies.

The National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act of 1986 would increase communication and coordination among the many Federal agencies and departments conducting nutrition programs, thus increasing the benefit of this research to all interested parties.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

Annual hearings have been held on nutrition monitoring and related research for 8 years in the Science, Research and Technology Subcommittee. Subcommittees of the Committee on Agriculture have participated in the last five. When it became clear that our national nutrition monitoring and related research efforts were disjointed, and should be better coordinated, Congressman MACKAY, Congressman WALGREN, and myself introduced an earlier version of the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act in 1984, H.R. 4684.

The 1984 version was brought before the House under suspension of the rules, received well over a majority vote, but not the two-thirds vote needed for passage. On June 25, 1985, a joint hearing was held on H.R. 2436 with the Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology of the Committee on Science and Technology and the Subcommittee on Department Operations, Research and Foreign Agriculture, and the Subcommittee on Domestic Marketing, Consumer Relations and Nutrition of the Committee on Agriculture.

Prior to the House Science and Technology Committee markup, Congressman MACKAY, Congressman WALGREN, and I met with representatives of numerous agriculture commodity groups to ensure that their concerns about the legislation were addressed. Following the markup in the Science, Research and Technology Subcommittee, these agriculture commodity groups endorsed the legislation. These groups included the National Cattlemen's Association, the National Milk Producers Federation, the United Egg Producers, and the American Meat Institute. The House Agriculture Committee held a markup on H.R. 2436 on June 5, and reported it out of committee unanimously.

SUMMARY OF BILL

This legislation establishes a framework for achieving the stated objectives through an interagency board for nutrition monitoring and related research and a national nutrition monitoring advisory council. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Health and Human Services are jointly responsible for the development of a comprehensive plan for nutrition monitoring and related research and for the implementation of the coordinated program. The interagency board is to assist the Secretaries in achieving these objectives. The bill also stipulates that an administrator may be appointed to serve as the central focus for these coordinating activities. The major functions of the advisory council are to provide scientific and technical advice on the development and implementation of the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Coordinated Program and to evaluate the effectiveness of the program's implementation.

The Secretaries, with the advice of the interagency board, are responsible for the development of a 10-year comprehensive plan which is to serve both as a focal point for nutrition monitoring activities, and as a means to identify national nutrition monitoring priorities. The coordinated program is to build on the 1981 joint implementation plan for a comprehensive national nutrition monitoring system, and include at least the following components:

A grants program to promote State and local monitoring initiatives.

A grants program to accelerate the development of monitoring methods and standards.

Means to stimulate academic-industry-government partnerships to accomplish national nutrition monitoring needs; and Methods to foster cost recovery and cost-sharing techniques.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot overemphasize the importance of this legislation. We are all aware of the crucial role proper nutrition plays in human health and longevity. However, we still have much to learn in this rapidly growing field.

The National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act will bring the priority and coordination needed to maximize the benefits of our Federal nutrition efforts. These benefits will not only be enjoyed by policymakers who will have better data from nutrition monitoring surveys upon which to base policy decisions, but also by the nutrition community, which relies heavily on results from Federal research for their own work. In the end, it will be society as a whole which will benefit.

□ 1615

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS].

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, most points that I would want to cover have been covered. I just want to rise in support of the bill. One of the most important aspects of this legislation, hopefully, will be to tell us whether or not we are spending our money and our resources in the right direction. We are in a time of limited resources. We cannot afford to waste.

I serve both on the Committee on Education and Labor, which has the WIC Program, school lunch and other programs, and also on the Committee on Agriculture with the Food Stamp Program. Thus I am one of the few Members who has an opportunity to watch all of these nutrition programs.

It is so difficult for us to try to act to ensure that our resources are allocated properly because we have insufficient data. We know from the studies, not the Government studies but from private studies done, that this particular program saves us $3 for every $1, and this program saves us $2, or maybe this program does not save us anything. But we do not have any real firm data or statistics from objective Federal studies to justify any reallocation of resources. Obviously, we should have that. If we are going to spend the precious dollars that we have in the right areas, we must know as to which programs are working and those that are not.

In addition to that, the anomaly of the situation is that the savings that we get from those programs are not in our committee. So there is tremendous pressure for us to cut back in this Nutrition Program and that Nutrition Program, even though they may be saving millions and millions of dollars, because the savings occur in the Committee on Ways and Means or somebody else's budget because of the reduction in the cost of the Medicaid Program, other health programs, or rehabilitation programs or whatever.

So it is incredibly important, as we move forward, that we do take the advice of the President's Commission on Hunger and others that we must coordinate our resources in this area. We must be able to determine as to whether or not, first of all, the money that we do spend is being spent wisely and is adequate, or, in addition to that, as to whether or not it is inadequate. Whether we should increase our spending because, even though it may cost more in the Education and Labor budget, it is going to save billions of dollars in someone else's budget. Only then can we really know as to whether or not our resources are being adequately spent.

Mr. Chairman I would like to make some additional comments on H.R. 2436, the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act of 1986. As a sponsor of H.R. 2436, I am particularly pleased to see this bill on the floor today for consideration.

H.R. 2436 is designed to both streamline and coordinate the nutrition data collection carried out by Federal agencies. There is a great deal of effort and resources currently expended on nutrition monitoring. The U.S. Department of Agriculture, the Department of Health and Human Services, the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and the Center for Disease Control all collect and analyze nutrition information. Even with this impressive lineup, serious gaps exist in available nutrition data.

As a member of the Agriculture Committee with a deep interest in the problem of hunger in America, I have been repeatedly frustrated by the difficulty in obtaining timely data on the food needs of the people in our Nation. Studies showing growing hunger in America, reports of higher infant mortality in our poorest rural areas, high rates of poverty among children, and an increasing demand for emergency food by Americans of all ages, all point to a serious hunger problem. What is lacking is the comprehensive information needed to evaluate the food needs of our Nation and to better direct future efforts to meet these needs.

Both the health and nutrition examination survey [HANES] compiled by HHS and the USDA's decentennial nationwide food consumption survey [NFCS] track information useful in evaluating the ability of our food and nutrition programs to meet this need. Unfortunately, no current data is available from either of these sources. In fact, the most recent data from these surveys dates back 6 years to 1980.

While the 10-year mark for NFCS rolls around in 1987 and data collection will begin again during that year, a complete analysis will not be available until sometime after 1990. Likewise, HANES data collection is not scheduled to begin until the fall of 1988, with actual analysis coming out several years later.

Policymakers, health professionals, program administrators, and charitable organizations need up to date data on the nutritional status of Americans in order to make informed decisions in a myriad of areas. As the President's Task Force on Food Assistance pointed out, the existing system clearly does not meet this need. H.R. 2436 includes the changes needed to move us to a system of timely and accurate analysis of the nutritional status of Americans.

Specifically, H.R. 2436 outlines a 10-year plan for a comprehensive nutrition monitoring and research program under the joint direction of the Secretray of Agriculture and the Secretary of Health and Human Services. The new program would basically maintain and coordinate existing Federal efforts, including HANES and NFCS, but would provide for the development of continuous collection and timely analysis of nutritional and dietary data by 1990. The plan also calls for an 11-member advisory council to provide the scientific and technical assistance needed to develop and maintain the nutrition monitoring and research system. Finally, this bill provides for review by the Secretaries of Agriculture and HHS prior to publication of dietary guidelines for the general population.

H.R. 2436 has the endorsement of over 70 organizations ranging from the American Heart Association to the National Milk Producers Federation. I urge my colleagues to give their full support to H.R. 2436.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Washington [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I stand in support of H.R. 2436. The purpose of the bill is to make more effective use of Federal and State expenditures for nutrition monitoring. We need a better coordinated system to collect and analyze information about the nutrition problems of our population. All the agencies in government who are involved in nutrition monitoring ought to be working more closely together, especially the Departments of Agriculture and Health and Human Services. I think that the central focus for coordination, management and direction of the Federal nutrition monitoring activities created by this bill—through the Interagency Board staffed by the Assistant Secretaries from the two key departments—will facilitate the coordination, accountability, and streamlined management of nutrition surveillance activities that we'd like to see.

I also think such a system will be more cost effective. Improved coordination among agencies should make more effective use of Federal expenditures. Unnecessary duplication of effort can be eliminated. The bill calls for more effective use of cost recovery management techniques and imposes charges and fees for publications to supplement the resources provided by the Federal Government. In addition, it calls for the development of partnerships to implement the nutrition monitoring plan and mechanisms to leverage funds from private sector data users.

I would like to conclude my statement by reminding my colleagues in the House that the current version of H.R. 2436 has been reported out by both the Science and Technology Committee and the Agriculture Committee with strong bipartisan support. I encourage you to vote in favor of H.R. 2436.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 2436, the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Program.

This legislation which creates a coordinated initiative to monitor and develop national nutrition priorities is long overdue. Despite a generation of attention, undernourishment in America is still epidemic.

The problem is not comparable to the starvation in Ethiopia. But it warrants fears of an underclass of Americans whose health and intellectual power are stunted from birth.

The problem of malnutrition is most evident among pregnant women and young children. Among pregnant women in some parts of Memphis, TN, the infant mortality rate is 35 per 1,000 live births.

Part of the high infant mortality rate in these areas is due to the premature births to undernourished mothers, especially teen mothers.

The better a mother is nourished, the less likely she is to deliver a premature baby. The smaller the premature baby, the smaller its chances for survival and the longer its hospital stay after delivery.

The price for malnutrition among children is a higher frequency of mental retardation, limited growth, chronic illness, and early death. Such malnutrition often inhibits the healing of wounds and the health of bones, teeth, and blood vessels.

The existence of malnutrition in America is intolerable and must be challenged. The bottom line is that in a country of affluence and plenty of food, there is no reason to have levels of undernourishment such as we now have. I urge my colleagues today to support this bill.

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 2436, the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act. This legislation is vitally important and worthy of resounding approval by the House.

Recently, in a symbolic act of national unity, millions of Americans held their hands across America. We all commended the millions who took part in Hands Across America, but it is not our job here in the Congress to be symbolic. H.R. 2436 gives us the chance to move beyond symbolism and into substance. We can show the hungry and malnourished of this country that we know they exist and are in need of assistance.

H.R. 2436 would improve Federal efforts in the area of dietary and nutritional status monitoring. This well-crafted legislation goes a long way toward ensuring that our Federal, State, and local public and private agencies would have the information necessary to address the problem of malnutrition in America. The need for timely, substantive, and accurate information in this area is well documented.

More than 22 percent of U.S. children currently live below the poverty line. That is a national disgrace. It is a disgrace that can only be corrected if the information is there to deal with it. That is why I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 2436.

Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, for thousands of Americans, going to bed hungry is something that happens every night. All the same, the Federal Government is ill-equipped to address this critical problem. Despite the fact that several Federal agencies currently collect information on food practices, trends, and health implications, this data is never integrated. As a result, we do not have a clear picture of the nutritional needs of our population. In short, lacking reliable, conclusive information, there is no way we can fashion effective programs and policies.

The bill before us today, H.R. 2436, the Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act, will go a long way toward correcting this regrettable situation. It will make more effective use of Federal dollars spent on nutrition monitoring by coordinating the efforts of the Department of Agriculture [USDA] and the Department of Health and Human Services [HHS]. USDA and HHS will be required to prepare and put in place a national 10-year plan designed to:

Study and report on domestic nutritional and dietary trends;

Study low-income food and household expenditures;

Sponsor and conduct research on nutrition standards, technologies, and methodologies; and Develop and update a national dietary and nutritional status data bank.

In addition, the bill will provide assistance to State and local agencies in developing their own procedures and networks for nutrition monitoring. In my own State of Rhode Island, this will be most welcome. State and local governments would also be provided with a say about the specific content of surveys through representation on a National Nutrition Monitoring Advisory Council.

In my view, H.R. 2436 makes good common sense and good fiscal sense. We need to know more about the nutritional needs of Americans in order to keep our Nation healthy, fit, and well fed. And, at a time when funds are short for both research and services, we need to be stretching Federal dollars as far as they will go. H.R. 2436 will accomplish both of these goals and I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for this sound and much needed legislation.

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the House Select Committee on Hunger, I strongly recommend the passage of H.R. 2436, the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act, without amendment.

Since its inception in 1984, the select committee has been collecting nutrition-related data from previously existing and ongoing studies in an attempt to respond to the increasing problem of hunger in the United States. The existence of hunger is evident in many ways, most obviously in the burgeoning growth of emergency feeding centers. While specific information is crucial to developing appropriate policy responses, timely and systematic data on the extent of hunger and its health consequences is severely lacking.

The Federal Government has two major nationwide nutrition surveys which collect data on individuals from all income groups: U.S. Department of Agriculture's Nationwide Food Consumption Survey and Department of Health and Human Services' National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey [NHANES]. The information from these surveys is not timely. The most recent nationwide data available on all age groups is from NHANES II conducted in 1976–80. Even this data has not yet been analyzed or interpreted in a published form.

The current design of these surveys make it impossible to identify subpopulation groups that are experiencing high rates of undernutrition, such as the frail elderly, migrant farmworkers, Native Americans, the long-term unemployed and the homeless. Further, the surveys are not integrated to provide a comprehensive view of hunger, household food expenditures, participation in food assistance programs, or related health problems.

A less extensive nutrition survey is conducted annually by the Centers for Disease Control [CDC]. Their Pediatric Nutrition Surveillance System compiles information on the nutritional status of low-income children from 34 States. Their reports, however, rely only on nutrition data on children who receive public screenings, missing many of the vulnerable children.

Twenty-nine cases of severe undernutrition among children were reported to the select committee last year by medical witnesses Katherine Christoffel, M.D., at the Children's Memorial Hospital in Chicago, and William Bithony, M.D., the medical director of the growth and nutrition program at Children's Hosptial in Boston. Such cases are not picked up by the current CDC Pediatric Nutrition Surveillance System because hospital data is not included.

H.R. 2436, the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act of 1985 is an important antihunger initiative because it would require coordination of ongoing Federal and State expenditures for nutrition monitoring, timely reporting of the data collected, and technical assistance to State and local governments who seek to target use of public funds to those persons at greatest nutritional risk. Specifically, H.R. 2436 calls for a 10-year comprehensive plan to be developed which includes a provision for continuous collection, processing, and accelerated analysis of nutritional data through a sampling data of the U.S. population designed to provide reliable data of high-risk groups and geographic areas.

Objective information allows hunger to be addressed dispassionately. The amendments being offered today strike at the heart of this bill's ability to effectively consolidate nutrition-related data.

Concern about the nutrition status of poor Americans is genuine among the majority of our citizens regardless of political party lines. The guidance of solid data is needed to translate this concern into solid legislation. But, if we continue to rely on piecemeal, out-of-date information, political rhetoric will dominate policy discussion.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Agriculture now printed in the bill in bold roman will be considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule in lieu of the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Science and Technology, and each section shall be considered as having been read.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The text of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

H.R. 2436

(7) the term "Secretaries" means the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting jointly; and

(8) the term "local government" means a local general unit of government or local educational unit.

TITLE I—NUTRITION MONITORING AND RELATED RESEARCH

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COORDINATED PROGRAM

SEC. 101. (a) There is hereby established a ten-year coordinated program, to be known as the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Program, to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(b) The Secretaries shall be responsible for the implementation of the coordinated program.

(c) To assist in implementing the coordinated program, there is hereby established an Interagency Board for Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research, of which an Assistant Secretary in the Department of Agriculture (designated by the Secretary of Agriculture) and an Assistant Secretary in the Department of Health and Human Services (designated by the Secretary of Health and Human Services) shall be joint chairpersons. The remaining membership of the Board shall consist of additional representatives of Federal agencies, as deemed appropriate by the joint chairpersons of the Board. The Board shall meet no less often than once every three months.

(d) To establish a central focus and coordinator for the coordinated program, the Secretaries may appoint a full-time Administrator of Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research. The Administrator shall—

(1) be an individual who is eminent in the field of nutrition monitoring and related areas, and be selected on the basis of his or her established record of expertise and distinguished service; and

(2) administer the coordinated program with the advice and counsel of the joint chairpersons of the Board, serve as the focal point for the coordinated program, and serve as the Executive Secretary for the National Nutrition Monitoring Advisory Council.

FUNCTIONS OF THE SECRETARIES

SEC. 102. (a) The Secretaries, with the advice of the Board, shall—

(1) establish the goals of the coordinated program and identify the activities required to meet such goals, and identify the responsible agencies with respect to the coordinated program;

(2) update the Joint Implementation Plan for a Comprehensive National Nutrition Monitoring System, and integrate it into the coordinated program;

(3) ensure the timely implementation of the coordinated program and the comprehensive plan prepared under section 103;

(4) include in the coordinated program and the comprehensive plan a competitive grants program, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, to encourage and assist the conduct, by Federal and non-Federal entities on an appropriate matching funds basis, of research (including research described in section 103(a)(3)) that will accelerate the development of uniform and cost-effective standards and indicators for the assessment and monitoring of nutritional and dietary status and for relating food consumption patterns to nutritional and health status;

(5) include in the coordinated program and the comprehensive plan a grants program, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, to encourage and assist State and local governments in developing the capacity to conduct monitoring and surveillance of nutritional status, food consumption, and nutrition knowledge and in using such capacity to enhance nutrition services (including activities described in sections 103(a)(5) and 103(b)(9));

(6) include in the coordinated program an annual interagency budget for each fiscal year of the program;

(7) foster productive interaction, with respect to nutrition monitoring and related research, among Federal efforts, State and local governments, the private sector, scientific communities, health professionals, and the public;

(8) contract with a scientific body, such as the National Academy of Sciences or the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology, to interpret available data analyses, and publish every two years or more frequently if appropriate, a report, on the dietary, nutritional, and health-related status of the people of the United States and the nutritional quality of the national food supply; and

(9)(A) foster cost recovery management techniques in the coordinated program, and (B) impose appropriate charges and fees for publications of the coordinated program, including print and electronic forms of data and analysis, and use the proceeds of such charges and fees for purposes of the coordinated program (except that no such charge or fee imposed on an educational or other nonprofit organization shall exceed the actual costs incurred by the coordinated program in providing the publications involved).

(b) The Secretaries shall submit to the President for transmittal to Congress by Janaury 15 of each year an annual report that shall—

(1) evaluate the progress of the coordinated program;

(2) summarize the results of such coordinated program components as are developed under section 103;

(3) analyze the dietary, nutritional, and related health status of the people of the United States, the nutritional quality of the national food supply, the relevant policy implications of the analytical findings, and future nutrition monitoring and related research priorities;

(4) include in full the annual report of the Council provided for in section 202; and

(5) include an executive summary of the report most recently published by the scientific body, as provided for in subsection (a)(8).

DEVELOPMENT OF THE COMPREHENSIVE PLAN FOR THE NATIONAL NUTRITION MONITORING AND RELATED RESEARCH PROGRAM

SEC. 103. (a) The Secretaries, with the advice of the Board, shall prepare and implement a comprehensive plan for the coordinated program which shall be designed to—

(1) assess, collate, date with respect to, analyze, and report, on a continuous basis, the dietary and nutritional status of the people of the United States, and the trends with respect to such status (dealing with such status and trends separately in the case of preschool and school-age children, pregnant and lactating women, elderly individuals, low income populations, blacks, Hispanics, and other minorities as appropriate), the state of the art with respect to nutrition monitoring and related research, future monitoring and related research priorities, and relevant policy implications of findings with respect to such status, trends, and research;

(2) assess, analyze, and report, on a continuous basis, for a representative sample of the low income population, food and household expenditures, participation in food assistance programs, and periods experienced when resources were not sufficient to provide an adequate diet;

(3) sponsor or conduct research necessary to develop uniform indicators, standards, methodologies, technologies, and procedures for conducting and reporting nutrition monitoring and surveillance;

(4) develop and keep updated a national dietary and nutritional status data bank, a nutrient data bank, and other data resources as required;

(5) assist State and local government agencies in developing procedures and networks for nutrition monitoring and surveillance; and

(6) focus the activities of the Federal agencies.

(b) The comprehensive plan, at a minimum, shall include components to—

(1) maintain and coordinate the National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey (NHANES) and the Nationwide Food Consumption Survey (NFCS);

(2) provide, by 1990, for the continuous collection, processing, and analysis of nutritional and dietary status data through a stratified probability sample of the people of the United States designed to permit statistically reliable estimates of high-risk groups and geopolitical and geographic areas, and to permit accelerated data analysis (including annual analysis, as appropriate);

(3) maintain and enhance other Federal nutrition monitoring efforts such as the Centers for Disease Control Nutrition Surveillance Program and the Food and Drug Administration Total Diet Study, and, to the extent possible, coordinate such efforts with the surveys described in paragraphs (1) and (2);

(4) incorporate, in survey design, military and (where appropriate) institutionalized populations;

(5) complete the analysis and interpretation of the data sets from the surveys described in paragraph (1) collected prior to 1984 within the first year of the comprehensive plan;

(6) improve the methodologies and technologies, including those suitable for use by States and localities, available for the assessment of nutritional and dietary status and trends:

(7) develop uniform standards and indicators for the assessment and monitoring of nutritional and dietary status, for relating food consumption patterns to nutritional and health status, and for use in the evaluation of Federal food and nutrition intervention programs;

(8) establish national baseline data and procedures for nutrition monitoring;

(9) provide scientific and technical assistance, training, and consultation to State and local governments for the purpose of obtaining dietary and nutritional status data and developing related data bases and networks to promote the development of regional, State, and local data collection services to become an integral component of a national nutritional status network;

(14) provide a mechanism for periodically evaluating and refining the coordinated program and the comprehensive plan that facilitates cooperation and interaction by State and local governments, the private sector, scientific communities, and health care professionals, and that facilitates coordination with non-Federal activities.

(c) The comprehensive plan shall allocate all of the projected functions and activities under the coordinated program among the various Federal agencies and offices that will be involved, and shall contain an affirmative statement and description of the functions to be performed and activities to be undertaken by each of such agencies and offices in carrying out the coordinated program.

(d) The comprehensive plan shall—

(1) be submitted in draft form to the President for submission to the Congress, and for public review, within twelve months after the date of the enactment of this Act;

(2) be available for public comment for a period of sixty days after its submission in draft form under paragraph (1) by means of publication in the Federal Register;

(3) be submitted in final form, incorporating such needed revisions as may arise from comments received during the review period, to the President for submission to the Congress within sixty days after the close of the period allowed for comments on the draft comprehensive plan under paragraph (2); and

(4) constitute the basis on which each agency participating in the coordinated program requests authorizations and appropriations for nutrition monitoring and related resource during the ten-year period of the program.

(3) Nothing in this section shall be construed as modifying, or as authorizing the Secretaries or the comprehensive plan to modify, any provision of an appropriation Act (or any other provision of law relating to the use of appropriated funds) that specifies (1) the department or agency to which funds are appropriated, or (2) the obligations of such department or agency with respect to the use of such funds.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE COMPREHENSIVE PLAN

SEC. 104. (a) The comprehensive plan shall be carried out during the period ending with the close of the ninth fiscal year following the fiscal year in which the comprehensive plan is submitted in its final form under section 103(d)(3), and shall be—

(3) carried out, by the Federal agencies involved, in accord with the allocation of functions and activities under section 103(c); and

(4) funded by appropriations made to such agencies as described in section 106, for each fiscal year of the program.

Congress through its appropriate authorizing committees shall exercise continuing oversight over the coordinated program, taking into account the Secretaries' annual reports and such other information and data as may be developed.

(b) Nothing in this title shall be deemed to grant any new regulatory authority or to limit, expand, or otherwise modify any regulatory authority under existing law, or to establish new criteria, standards, or requirements for regulation under existing law.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT IN SUPPORT OF THE COORDINATED PROGRAM AND COMPREHENSIVE PLAN

SEC. 105. The Secretaries shall provide for and coordinate the conduct, by the National Science Foundation, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, the National Bureau of Standards, and other suitable Federal agencies, of such scientific research and development as may be necessary or appropriate in support of the coordinated program and the comprehensive plan and in furtherance of the purposes and objectives of this Act.

AUTHORIZATIONS AND APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 106. (a) Authorizations and appropriations for the fiscal year in which the comprehensive plan is submitted in final form under section 103(d)(3) and for the nine succeeding fiscal years, for purposes of carrying out the coordinated program and implementing the comprehensive plan, shall be requested by the Secretaries and by each of the agencies which are allocated responsibilities under the coordinated program under section 103(c), in a separate line item of the budget of the agency involved and consistent with the interagency budget for the coordinated program; and to the maximum extent feasible such appropriations shall be provided on a three-year basis, subject to annual authorization Acts hereafter enacted.

(b) Nothing in this title is intended either (1) to authorize the appropriation or require the expenditure of any funds in excess of the amount of funds which would be authorized or expended for the same purposes in the absence of the coordinated program, or (2) to limit the authority of any of the participating agencies to request and receive funds for those purposes (for use in the coordinated program) under other laws.

If the Secretaries fail to express any objection within that one-hundred-and-eighty-day period, the submitting agency may release the dietary guidance.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WALGREN

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALGREN: On page 40, line 5, strike "and" and insert "off".

On page 40, line 6, strike "and" and insert "of".

On page 40, line 17, strike the semicolon and all that follows through line 20, and insert a period.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is being offered to accommodate the concerns raised earlier by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment simply strikes any language that is suggestive of a 3-year appropriation for components of the comprehensive plan for nutrition monitoring.

This legislation is intended as the authorizing legislation, as the authorizing only, with respect to nutrition monitoring programs. It was not the intent of this language that was in the bill to interfere in any way with the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. That language was developed in an attempt to foster a long-range budgetary planning program by all the agencies involved, and this amendment will simply strike that language so there is no misunderstanding with any Member with respect to interfering with the appropriations process.

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALGREN. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that is printed in the RECORD that is identical to the one that the gentleman is offering except for the insertion of two words in line 5 and line 6. That is, one in line 5 and one in line 6.

I would have no objection to this consideration and incorporating these two ideas because it does exactly what we want to do. As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I have a grave concern over this section and had this amendment entered in the RECORD to do exactly what the gentleman is doing. I think that we can reach some kind of an accommodation on this.

Mr. WALGREN. We certainly want to reach agreement with the gentleman wherever it is possible.

Mr. SKEEN. If the gentleman will yield, since I had the amendment printed and went to all that great trouble to harass the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I think that we ought to accommodate one another.

Mr. WALGREN. I gather the gentleman is asking if I could withdraw my amendment and allow the gentleman's amendment to go forward?

Mr. SKEEN. If the gentleman will yield, I think he is gathering the right drift. We could reach some accommodation.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, we are happy to withdraw and we are unanimous on this side in support of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SKEEN

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SKEEN. On page 40, lines 17 through 20, strike all after the following: "budget for the coordinated program" and insert in lieu thereof the following".".

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I wish to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN] for his acquiescence and in withdrawing his amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think that we have had all the discussion that is necessary in incorporating this amendment. I will say this: What we have here is a deletion of a section that I think that flawed an otherwise, as Mr. PANETTA mentioned earlier, well-crafted bill.

It is very unusual and inconsistent to ask for an appropriation on a 3-year basis and then to have it annually authorized. I think this creates some kind of problems with the Appropriations Committee. I think that we have reached an accommodation.

With that explanation and with the accommodation of the chairman, which I appreciate very much, I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SKEEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALGREN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, on behalf of this side of the aisle we certainly accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SKEEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Agriculture has no problem with the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SKEEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. MONSON

Mr. MONSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer two amendments and I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. MONSON: On page 28, SEC. 102. (a), strike line 18 and all that follows through line 4 on page 29, and redesignate the following subsections accordingly.

On page 29, SEC. 102. (a), strike line 5 and all that follows through line 15, and redesignate the following subsections accordingly.

Mr. MONSON. Mr. Chairman, these amendments would remove the requirement that the comprehensive plan to be submitted by the Interagency Board on Nutrition Monitoring include competitive grants programs and also a grant program for State and local governments.

I offer these amendments because in reviewing the act itself, I find that the purposes of the act spell out very clearly what the intent of this study that we have heard referred is, especially on page 24 of the act where, in paragraphs 6 and 7 it says that:

We are to establish mechanisms for addressing the nutrition monitoring needs of Federal, State, and local governments, the private sector, scientific and engineering communities, health care professionals and the public in support of the foregoing purposes and provide for the conduct of such scientific research and development as may be necessary or appropriate in support of such purposes.

Also, on page 32, it covers the design of the plan to meet the purposes of this bill. In paragraph 3 on page 32, it says:

Sponsor or conduct research necessary to develop uniform indicators, standards, methodologies, technologies, procedures for conducting and reporting nutrition monitoring surveillance.

And in paragraph 5, it says:

Assist State and local government agencies in developing procedures and networks for nutrition monitoring and surveillance.

Now, I do not have any objection with any of those purposes or with the ideas that are implemented there to cover how those purposes should be met. What I do find strange is that we are asking a group to go out and study something and then we come back and we mandate in the act what their studies should include. I have always found that a strange way to do business and I believe that we should take away from this bill the micromanagement effects that we are creating in the Congress, allow this agency to go out and make their study to do the job that they find is necessary and to recommend back with that study what should be done to meet the objectives here.

It may very well be that they will recommend that we have grant programs. But I think that we ought to allow the study to go forward first before we decide that the grant programs are necessary and I offer the amendment for that purpose.

Additionally, as I indicated a little earlier today, when you mandate a grant program you are incurring some costs. I think that we ought to be honest with ourselves and either acknowledge that those costs are going to be there and do our job as we should in an authorization bill and set the limits of what those costs should be or we should eliminate the requirements that would mandate these grants to take place.

So, for those purposes, I have offered this amendment and I would ask for support of my amendment.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the amendment would strike the requirement in this bill to include in the plan a grant program to develop research on methods in nutrition and health statistics. This is really the heart of the bill, and its effect would be to put us totally at sea.

It would be one thing if this were a thrust that was dreamed up by somebody who was trying to develop their own program or shape the world the way they want it to be. In fact, everyone that has had involvement in this area recognizes the importance of methods research.

The administration itself, both in the President's Task Force on Food Assistance strongly recommended enhanced research efforts to improve nutrition monitoring methods and this preliminary publication or the prepublication so it is the document itself that has been developed by the present Joint Nutrition Monitoring Evaluation Committee, asked priority be given to developing methods by which this information can be made more useful and the available data worked with more effectively.

So those levels of the administration that have been involved in this have called for exactly this portion of the bill, and I would urge my colleagues to defeat the amendment in order to keep this thrust of the bill in place.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman actually is offering two amendments, and I wish to speak to the second of the two amendments, which provides for a program of grants to the States to facilitate their becoming more greatly involved in this program of nutrition monitoring and research.

I would say to the gentleman that this part of his amendment which strikes out the grants to the States' program is really counterproductive, because the purpose of those grants is to enable the States and local governments to take a larger part in this whole process to bring the programs closer to the governments which are called upon to use this in many cases, and in the long run is going to result in the States bearing a larger share of the cost, which I am sure is a goal which the gentleman would subscribe to.

So I think that, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania said with regard to the funding of grants to improve research methodology, to strike out the provisions which would encourage the States to take a larger role goes directly contrary to the philosophy of this administration, and in the long run is going to be a costly and counterproductive effort which will not meet the needs of the program that we are encompassing here.

I would ask the gentleman to really reconsider what he is trying to do here, and certainly I would urge the Members to vote in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I also rise in opposition to this well-intentioned amendment. I would point out to my colleague that the grants program could not be established without further congressional review. We are not going to authorize or appropriate one dime until we have a plan developed jointly by the Secretaries of Agriculture and Health and Human Services, and until that plan is brought to the Congress along with recommendations and justification. So I think that we are getting unduly concerned about something prematurely.

I have confidence in this administration, and I have confidence in subsequent administrations in dealing with this very important issue, and I urge opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. I think that we have reached the point in the debate that we now need to address some of the main issues head-on. One of the variables supposedly in this legislation is that there are going to be no additional costs, except perhaps $250,000 to $350,000 for some administration costs and some travel costs.

Right here we are establishing a competitive grants program in accordance with the provisions of this act to encourage and assist the conduct by Federal and non-Federal entities on an appropriate matching-funds basis. So some funds are going to have to be expended, some additional funds are going to have to be expended.

We do not have a firm cost estimate of just what that expenditure would be. In the bill that was before the Congress in the last session, $3 million was included for this area. In this bill we struck that language and as I said earlier, in section 106 funds are going to be appropriated on an annual basis. But the fact of the matter is if you are going to have a competitive grants program, somebody is going to have to provide some additional money.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALGREN. This, I think, is one of the confusing elements here. We are operating in an area where a large amount of money is already being spent, and each of us wants to protect the taxpayer, and each of us also wants to be absolutely sure that additional spending, if any, survives a very high burden of proof.

In this instance we do not set a dollar amount on what this grants program would look like.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I understand that.

Mr. WALGREN. There presently is in the Centers for Disease Control a grant program that is presently spending $1 million doing exactly what this grants program is designed to do. So we cannot at this point, as the gentleman from New York said, get prematurely worried here.

We cannot at this point say that anyone would recommend spending any additional money, because money is now already being spent, and presumably being spent well.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his comments. I would respond by saying that it is never too soon to be prematurely worried about expenditure of Federal tax dollars, and in this particular instance we do have a grants program that if authorized it would not be illogical to assume that at some point in time somebody is going to come before the Congress and request that additional funds be spent.

Mr. MONSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. MONSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I am getting some conflicting signals here because on one hand I am hearing that we are not going to be offering any grants until after the plan has been created, and on the other hand I am hearing that we are going to use these grants to help in the creation of the plan.

Somewhere along the way that is going to require some spending, and if our intended purpose, as I have heard stated here so many times today, is to really get a handle on what is really going on already with nutrition programs in the Federal Government, then I have a hard time understanding how anyone could object to this amendment, because this is not going to get a handle on what is already happening, it is going to add to the burden.

It may very well be that that plan will decide that this is something that is needed, and I acknowledge that. But until the plan comes forth and we understand what exactly is the best way to get a handle on nutrition in this country, then I think that we ought to wait until we see what the plan says.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time and I urge the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Very briefly, I think there are three arguments in opposition to the amendment that has been proposed here.

First of all, the whole purpose of this bill is to provide direction. As I said, it is unfortunate that we have reached this point, but we have nine agencies all doing their own thing, and the whole intent of this legislation is to try to coordinate what is happening with those nine agencies. Part of that direction is with regard to the grants programs that the agencies provide.

Two areas that are extremely important to target are, first, the whole issue of nutrition monitoring. If we do not target any kind of attention to the nutrition monitoring area, then we are not accomplishing very much. That is the whole purpose of the bill that is before us. The second is the assistance to State and local governments to get them involved in the nutrition monitoring. They have an important role to play. We have always said that. The issue of hunger, the issue of nutrition is a Federal, State, and local responsibility. So they have to participate in this as well.

Second, with regard to the funding issues, there are no additional funds involved here. First of all we are saying that this ought to be part of a comprehensive plan, this is not an authorization in and of itself, and second, these agencies already have a number of grants that are available to them. What we are saying is that it comes out of the same pot of money that you already have directed to these two areas. So we are not talking about anything new in terms of funding; we are saying that the funds that you already have ought to be directed there.

I might say that I would direct the attention of Members to section 106, which makes very clear that nothing in this title is intended either to authorize the appropriation or require the expenditure of any funds in excess of the amount of funds which would be authorized or expended for the same purposes under the program. So we are not saying that they ought to go ahead and authorize or appropriate for any new funding.

The last thing that I want to mention is that these are not new initiatives. There are current programs that are ongoing in both of these areas, and for that reason I think that we can very well be able to benefit from those ongoing programs that are directed here. What we are trying to do in this whole area is to give emphasis to these two areas. That is the purpose of putting it into the plan, and that is the reason that this amendment should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MONSON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MONSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

The following Members responded to their names:

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Chairman, I proceed out of order just so that the membership can be informed as to what the situation is with regard to the schedule and what they might be able to anticipate for the next few hours.

When can we perhaps expect some action on the supplemental, the budget? Are we going to continue on this bill and the amendment process? Just generally so that the membership on both sides of the aisle will have some idea of what they can expect for the balance of the night and if, heaven forbid, it might even go over until tomorrow.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT], the acting minority leader, yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas, the distinguished majority leader, for that purpose.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, the two things on which we are waiting are the conference report on the supplemental appropriation and a possible conference report on the budget resolution.

With regard to the first, the other body is even now acting on their conference report on the supplemental. They are voting on proposed amendments. I do not know how to forecast how long they will work on that bill, nor can I give any intelligent prognosis as to how long we will have to work on it when we get it.

The ways of the other body are sometimes arcane and mysterious. If they finish it and send it over in any reasonable time, I think we would be well-advised to stay in and take it up and complete it this evening.

It is possible that we might have to come back in the morning at 10 o'clock. I hope we will be able to finish our business today.

However, I think most Members would rather that we complete the supplemental, and if there is a choice and a real chance, rather that we complete the conference report on the budget resolution before we leave.

Things are up in the air. We cannot tell you for sure. We will try to finish tonight if we can. However, we do not want to go until 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning, and may have to come back in the morning at 10 o'clock. We hope not.

In any event, when we finish these two, or reach the point where we conclude that it is unlikely for us to finish one of them, we will adjourn.

Mr. LOTT. We are basically waiting to see if the other body is going to make pretty good progress on the supplemental, with hopefully finishing it before too late tonight. It could, for some reason, go on.

Also, I understand that we are in the final stages of negotiation on a budget resolution. Perhaps some agreement could be reached on that in the next couple of hours.

But we are pretty much at the mercy of those two processes right now. Is that all you can tell us?

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I think that is exactly right.

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Budget is here. I do not know whether he has anything he wants to add to that or not.

The gentleman might desire to yield to the gentleman for further information.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I do not want too much information, though. I just want him to assure us that the gentleman is continuing to work diligently.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would simply say to the gentleman from Mississippi that at this point, all items are in agreement in the budget except for one item.

Mr. LOTT. One item, good.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. One item which we thought we had agreement on early this morning. We found what we thought was an error made by the clerks in putting the numbers together and now we are discussing that error and trying to resolve that issue.

That issue is an issue of $250 million in reference to function 570 and Medicare deductability and preventing the deductability from rising for the elderly in the health care area. I think if the gentleman remembers, whether it was the House Committee on the Budget or the GOP substitute, in both budgets, we took the policy position that the House would not want the deductability to rise from 492 to 570.

Therefore, in our budget negotiations we had, thanks to the cooperation of the Committee on Ways and Means, additional money to prevent that rise from taking place.

At this time, there is disagreement over that issue. As soon as there is agreement, I, as chairman of the conference committee, will be able to call the conference together, present a conference report for approval of the conferees. I believe I can say to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, there is a real chance for a really total bipartisan agreement on the House side on this conference report.

Then we will be able to come to the floor immediately as a result of the cooperation of the ranking member, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA] and the unanimous-consent request granted earlier. Thus, as soon as we hear from the other body on that one issue, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT], in 1 hour, we can be probably to the floor.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

I would just like to make one request. As soon as the leadership on either side finds out any specifics about how late we will go tonight, if you will let us know, and we will be sure to let all the membership know as soon as we get any further information.

Mr. WRIGHT. Very good.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PACKARD

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PACKARD: On page 32, SEC. 103.(a)(1), in line 10, strike "minorities as appropriate" and insert in lieu thereof "groups, at the discretion of the Secretaries".

□ 1720

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, I am simply asking that some of the specific micromanagement here be opened up to give flexibility to the board and to the Secretaries.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACKARD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALGREN. The committee believes that you have a very good amendment, and certainly we support it on this side.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACKARD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PANETTA. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, one of the areas of concern is the gentleman eliminates "in periods experienced when resources are not sufficient to provide an adequate diet."

The whole purpose here is to focus on individuals who, when they have exhausted their benefits, in fact are therefore suffering from problems.

Mr. PACKARD. Reclaiming my time, if the gentleman will withhold for a minute, I think that is the second amendment that I will be offering.

Mr. PANETTA. That is not a part of this amendment?

Mr. PACKARD. That is not a part of this amendment.

Mr. PANETTA. If the gentleman will yield further, if that portion is not a part of this amendment, and this amendment solely deals with the groups at the discretion of the Secretary, then this committee has no problem with it.

Mr. PACKARD. It does.

With that agreement, Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PACKARD].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WALKER

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALKER: On page 29, SEC. 102(a), strike line 16 and all that follows through line 18, and redesignate the following subsections accordingly.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, what this amendment does is strike out a section of the bill that relates to the functions of the Secretaries under this particular bill.

It says in the bill that the Secretaries are to include in the coordinated program that they are putting together, an annual interagency budget for each fiscal year of the program. It is that section, the requirement that they put together an interagency budget for each fiscal year of the program, that my amendment would strike.

The reason why I am striking this is, it is cumbersome, it is burdensome, in checking with the agencies what we find is that it would require additional manpower in order to just do this part of the bill, this budget coordination.

The question one has to ask oneself when one looks at the totality of the program that we have here is: What is it they are submitting? We have a 9-year program that is anticipated under this bill.

What are they supposed to anticipate for the next 9 years? The administration's budget requests to include as their budget for each of these fiscal years? Our budget requests here in the Congress. Are they supposed to figure out what we are going to do on a budget? Good heavens, we just had a discussion here a minute ago—we cannot figure out what to do with our budget for 1 fiscal year. Are they supposed to anticipate for the next 9 years what Congress will do and include that? Are they supposed to anticipate our appropriations figures? Is that what they are supposed to put in this annual interagency budget? They have 9 years to anticipate here, and they are going to sit down a lot of additional manpower, trying to anticipate what we do for the next 9 years?

It just does not make any sense. It is going to be extremely burdensome; it is not going to get the job done that was anticipated under this. If we really want the Secretaries to be coordinating something, they ought not be asked to coordinate this kind of activity. They ought not be asked to look out 9 years and come up with budget figures; that is what we are going to end up with under this particular provision.

So all I am asking for is that we strike that provision out of the bill, since the money that we are talking about here is going to come out of the hide of the actual research programs, since we include no money in the bill. At the very least what we ought to do is take out those sections that add unproductive costs.

It seems to me what is being required by this particular section is unproductive costs, and that just does not make any sense at all. So I would ask the House to approve this amendment. It does no damage to the overall concept that is being pursued; it does absolutely no damage to the idea of managing the program differently, of coordinating efforts between the departments, but it does stop the sheer idiocy of suggesting that for each of the fiscal years of the program, the 9 years that are in the program, that these people ought to try to come up with a budget. That will take untold manpower to an unproductive end.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, I think I understand what the gentleman is saying. Obviously, in the terms that he has put it, it would involve a large guessing game.

Can the gentleman tell me what he expects the Defense Department to do when we ask them to prepare a 5-year program? Do they go through all this guessing about what the administration's budget is going to be? The House budget is going to be? The Senate budget is going to be? Or do they just give us their best thinking of what the defense needs of the country are going to be for 5 years?

Mr. WALKER. Reclaiming my time, I would say to the gentleman, to give us their best thinking; but it does take untold manpower in order to give us their best thinking.

The idea here that we are going to do all of these things without cost to the program is what this gentleman is aimed at. It takes the Defense Department a great deal of manpower to do those 5-year projections; and we are asking not for a 5-year projection here, we are actually asking for a 9-year projection; and we are saying that somehow there is going to be no cost to that. That just does not add up.

I am suggesting that that is very unproductive activity toward the end that supposedly we are trying to achieve, and that is a further coordinated program. I suggest to the gentleman that if the Defense Department example is what we are going to use, then we had better look at just how much it costs them to provide those 5-year budget plans; it is considerable.

Mr. BROWN of California. We recognize that.

Mr. WALKER. Well, Mr. Chairman, in recognizing that, then we also recognize that this particular provision in this bill will add a great deal of cost that will come out of the hide of nutritional research programs; and I suggest to the gentleman that that is not what he is trying to achieve in the bill and that this particular amendment would just strike out a section that would otherwise add an awful lot of time and effort to bureaucratic handling of the program.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(On request of Mr. BROWN of California and by unanimous consent, Mr. WALKER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. WALKER. I further yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, it is always stimulating to have a dialog with the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

We lay this job of projections on to the Defense Department and a number of other agencies for the basic rationale that we save money by understanding what the long-range program is. Is that not correct?

Mr. WALKER. Well, that is the theory behind what we do; but I am suggesting to the gentleman that we are now requiring of this particular program that they not only project for 5 years, but that they look out 9 years.

I suggest that it is almost impossible to look out an entire decade and try to come up with costs; and that that would be very, very expensive in terms of trying to get together the material that would allow them to do that. That is the point that I am making to the gentleman.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I suppose we could debate about whether or not a 5-year or a 9-year plan is feasible. One of the problems in this bill is that it is a very long-range program, and we are looking at assessments on the national level that literally have come historically every 10 years; so it makes certain sense to project out.

There is a rolling revision of this plan, so no numbers are locked in concrete; there is nothing set in stone about what might be out there in those outyears, but there has to be a recognition at some point that this is a program that is decades long.

As I understand it, the National Oceanographic Institute has a 10-year plan. So in areas where the problem goes long into the future, it is not unreasonable to try to project somewhat.

□ 1730

The basic problem with the amendment, however, is that it strips any interagency budget development, and that is the key to the whole bill. We have got $260 million being spent, we know not where, on, according to the Department of Agriculture's report, 3,700 separate projects in nine different agencies.

Now, if you do not have an interagency budget, you have no way to get a handle on any of that. We have an interagency budget with the acid rain task force. Let me give you the administration's view of the effect of that interagency budget:

> The strong interagency planning process prevents proliferation of loosely related projects and thus eliminates wasteful duplication and avoids crucial omissions.

Now that is exactly what we need in this area.

I would urge my colleagues to oppose the amendment on that basis.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALGREN. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman is making a point that today we spend $265 million on these programs. Can the gentleman tell us how much we are going to be spending 9 years from now on these programs?

Mr. WALGREN. That is why we need a budget that at least looks forward. I do not pretend to say that we can put a dollar amount, a dollar amount on the 10-year figure. But we ought to know that 10 years out we are going to be doing the 10-year survey and we ought to be knowing that there is a certain effort to be made in the 10th year that would not be made in the 9th year, and therefore we can know it is coming and plan accordingly and make things work.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALGREN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. That is not what the language in his bill says. The gentleman now makes a much more rational case. But the language in his bill says that the Secretaries with the advice of this board are going to include a coordinated program, an annual interagency budget for each fiscal year of the program. That is out 9 years. These agencies are going to have to sit down and figure out what their budget is going to be 9 years from now in order to carry out this accomplishment. That just is not possible. These people would have to spend literally hundreds of hours trying to figure out what they might be spending 9 years from now. It seems to me that the language is at the very least imperfect and at the very worst could cause untold havoc in some of these departments. And if the gentleman wants to modify the language in order to do what he just explained to me, that is an entirely different proposition. But if not, then I would have to say that we have to strike this language at the very least because it will be literally hundreds of hours and millions of dollars spent doing something that none of these agencies have in hand. There is no agency of Government that has in hand a budget for 9 years from now.

Mr. WALGREN. If the gentleman will yield back, what is required now is an annual interagency budget for each fiscal year of the program. Now that is done each year which means that whatever plans are made for the future years, they are made because we know at certain sequences, it may be 3 years or 5 years or 10 years, there is going to be major efforts made to do a decennial review or something like that. We ought to know that is coming 10 years out or 5 years out.

What is asked for in the bill is this year an annual interagency budget for next year so that plans can be made and in the process of that each would project where this program is going. That is all. It is not an incredibly burdensome procedure, according to this gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WALGREN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. That is not what the gentleman's bill says. Once again, if what he is saying were in the bill, that would make it an entirely different proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

(On request of Mr. WALKER and by unanimous consent, Mr. WALGREN was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman continue to yield?

Mr. WALGREN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

OK. The problem that I have is that in section 102 it says the secretaries with the advice of the board shall, and then it goes down through a whole list of things. It does not say that that is in each year an event. As a matter of fact, if you look down in the next section, it says the secretary shall submit to the President for transmittal to the Congress each year by January 15 of each year, there we specify that it is an each-year proposition. But here we are specifying the secretaries have a duty to include in the coordinated program that we are asking them to put together, the coordinated program, a 9-year program, an annual interagency budget for each fiscal year of the program. That implies that we are asking them to put together a 9-year projection. That is my problem with the language in the bill. It is not as specific as it is in other places. And it seems to me the gentleman's interpretation is not what the language of the bill states.

Mr. WALGREN. If the gentleman will yield back, certainly whatever projections are made this year for the fifth year out or the seventh year out or the ninth year out can be redone next year. It is not an incredibly complex process. If we set out a plan that requires a once-in-10-year HANES study to be done in the 10th year, we ought to know that is coming. And the plan by its nature must look out into the future. All this asked for is some recognition of what this program is going to look like on a multiyear basis. I really do not read anything more into the bill than that. Certainly a bill that preserves the flexibility for the administration every year to come in and adjust their future program in whatever way they see fit.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman continue to yield?

Mr. WALGREN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. So I do understand from the gentleman that it is the intent of this language to force these agencies to come up with a budget projection for the next 9 years, that they are to project out into the ninth year what their budget would be? That is precisely what the gentleman has just told me, I think.

Mr. WALGREN. If the gentleman will yield, we anticipate a rolling budget plan because there are major sporadic efforts that are going to be in the outyears and some estimate of what they account for should be made.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman; he has made my point.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the whole purpose of this bill again is to try to bring some sense of coordination between the nine different agencies that are involved in nutrition monitoring. That is the whole thrust of the bill. Right now we have nine different agencies involved with nine different budgets. When we ask a question, what goes into nutrition monitoring, we do not get a straight answer. We asked this of the Department of HHS. What was their report? I quote, "It is difficult to respond to your request for dollars spent on nutrition monitoring activities because often the costs are contained not in one but in several line items within the HHS agency budget." What we are asking here is that they put together an interagency budget that tells us how much is going for this purpose. Why? So we can look at one budget to determine whether they are spending it effectively or whether they are duplicating projects. The problem now is there is duplication all over the place. One agency is doing exactly the same study that another agency is doing, and on, and on, and on. This is for the convenience of the oversight that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is concerned about. If you want oversight, let us look at an interagency budget that leaves out where these funds are going. That is the whole point of having this presented to us. It is important. It is a key. It will force these agencies suddenly to look and say, "My God, we have three agencies doing exactly the same study." And if they do not stop it, we will here in the Congress.

So that is the purpose of having this budget.

I urge my Members, if you are serious about the need to coordinate it, we need to have this provision.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOEHLERT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think upon reflection maybe both sides are right.

There is some ambiguity. I am wondering if the offeror of the amendment would consider adjusting his amendment to have it read in section 6: "Include in the coordinated program each year an annual interagency budget."

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

If in fact the gentleman were willing to accept an amendment that would put "each year" language in there, I will withdraw at this time the amendment that I have at the desk and propose another amendment that puts that language in in each year, and that would take care of this gentleman's problem with the bill as it is now written.

Mr. PANETTA. In "each year" would not bother me one bit because that is exactly the intent here, to force the interagency budget to be developed each year. If that language would be satisfactory to the gentleman, it certainly would be satisfactory to this gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman would yield further, can we get the agreement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania on that language?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman [Mr. WALKER] needs unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. MACKAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield briefly?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACKAY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Do I understand now that after 15 or 20 minutes of debate we are going to solve this huge problem by taking the words "for each year" which are now on the other side of the words "annual interagency budget" and move them to the front side? Is that correct? Is that somehow going to suddenly make this thing read different? That is what it says now.

Mr. PANETTA. To my satisfaction I believe it says it. But obviously the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not find that to be the case. I am willing to work with him to put it in the front side of it if we can arrive at an agreement here that this is the intent.

Mr. MACKAY. The gentleman is demonstrating a need for coordination in our basic literacy.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I would be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALGREN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

If I could propound a question to the gentlemen who are agreeing on this at this point: it is my understanding that it is extremely helpful to have an outyear projection of what the budgets will look like. Now I cannot quite factor in what happens when you put each year in front or behind the annual budget requirement. But I do feel it important that we have a long-term projection of what this program is going to be like so that the program makes the most effective point. As the report says, the committee intended the comprehensive plan to be a rolling 10-year plan updated and adjusted as necessary on a systematic basis with long-term priorities added.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. PANETTA was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman continue to yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALGREN. I thank the gentleman. If I may continue: with long-term priorities added as short-term goals are completed and program progress is evaluated. Now, I do not know what we are doing with each year, but I do not want to lose the long-term nature of this outlook.

Mr. PANETTA. My understanding, if I could have the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is that what he is concerned about is just having to do a long-range projection every 6 or 10 years. My understanding is that part of the budget process always involves looking at the out-years, and that is a common practice, at a 5-year projection. But what we are interested in here is the fact that they present an interagency budget each year. If in fact in order to do that it requires long-range planning, I think that is part and parcel of what we are all after.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, my problem is we are creating a 9-year program here. It seems to me in asking agencies then to create budgets out 9 years, you are asking them to do a lot of extra work. If by adding the language that has now been suggested, what we do is ask them to use the data that they now have to do those projections, then it is not very costly. We are not talking about a lot of money there. But if you are talking about putting together something that will force them to come up with budget figures that do not exist in-house at the present time, then you are doing something very costly, and that is my objection.

So what I am trying to do is nail down language that would make sure that all they are being asked to do is that which they would be doing otherwise in the budgeting procedure. It seems to me by putting that language in, that that does make that point. That is all this gentleman is trying to achieve. I must admit that I am a little concerned when the gentleman from Pennsylvania indicates that he in fact does anticipate doing far more than that and therefore again seems to make my point that we are really looking for them to make 9-year projections here, which would be very, very difficult and very, very expensive for these agencies to do.

Mr. PANETTA. I understand the concern of the gentleman. My concern is that I think it is important and I think the gentleman understands that, it is important for these agencies to feed their information into one budget so that in fact we are looking at what programs are being implemented by the various agencies as part of that budget. That is extremely important, and I believe the gentleman supports that. Is that correct?

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will yield, I do support that. All I am trying to achieve is to make certain that they do not have to come up with all kinds of additional budget data in order to do that over a period of time where they do not have that budget data in hand anyhow. The coordination makes sense; the idea that under this bill they will have to do additional work to come up with additional budget material makes no sense.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALGREN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

My instinct is not to stand on requiring 10 years of budgets, but I think it important that we have a plan that has that kind of horizon in the future. And if there is some way that we can understand that the plan that is submitted anticipates what is to happen over this number of years, it would be helpful.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Califorina [Mr. PANETTA] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. PANETTA was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

□ 1745

Mr. WALGREN. If the gentleman will continue to yield, if there is some way that the plan could anticipate what is to happen over those 10 years.

For example, if in the fifth year out, we are going to do a 5-year national survey, that ought to be in the plan, and that ought to be anticipated, because it will not happen if in the fifth year we say, well, let us provide some money to do this plan. In the past we have done that and it has been 10 years before the survey has been completed.

So we need to look down that road. That is all I would like to emphasize, and I apologize for not being the most vassal legislative craftsman here. But I do not want to stand on budget, but I do think we need a plan.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, perhaps we can resolve it on the basis that, if indeed the information is available beyond a year and that these agencies, by virtue of OMB's requirements and others, may indeed be required to focus on a 5-year plan or beyond. If that information is available, then obviously we ought to be able to look at it over that period of time.

It does not demand any additional effort, but it basically is information that they would have.

My sense here is that we are arguing over, frankly, something that does not need to be argued over. Most of these agencies, in order to develop their annual budget, are going to look down the road. That, it seems to me, is part of the way they develop their annual budget and where they are heading. I think that is a common process.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is correct. I am not trying to say that we cannot coordinate that material. But the way the language in the bill is now structured, it seems to me that it does give instructions to the Secretaries to prepare additional material over and above. All I am trying to do is arrive at some compromise. I am willing to come with new language. I am willing to withdraw my amendment to come up with some compromise that assures me we have language in there that does not force them to go to that additional expense. It seems to me by including each year language in there at the beginning, we do arrive at that solution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] has expired.

(On request of Mr. WALKER, and by unanimous consent, Mr. PANETTA was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, if we could get the gentleman from Pennsylvania to agree to that, I will withdraw the amendment and propose another amendment to simply put that language in in that way. That takes care of my problem, and I think maintains precisely what the gentleman from California is saying he wants in the bill in terms of these coordinated budgets.

I would hope that maybe we could arrive at that kind of an accommodation because, otherwise, I will have to insist on my amendment. It seems to me then the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made my case for me that the gentleman does really intend that these projects go out 9 years, and that could be rather expensive for the Government.

Mr. PANETTA. My understanding is, for example, USDA looks 10 years down the road as it plans for its nationwide food consumption survey. That is a traditional activity by these agencies to try to project ahead.

So if that information is available, fine, and I think we ought to be able to look at it. What we are requiring here is the each-year budget, and I think that the gentleman's proposal seems to make some sense.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I say to the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, cannot we get some resolution to this? I think it is much ado about nothing. I think the gentleman makes a good point. There is some ambiguity in it.

We are not trying to prevent anyone from doing anything long range. We want a long-range plan, obviously. But I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania, my colleague on this side of the aisle, is trying to prevent all the extra man-hours that would be required to prepare now a budget plan for this coordinated effort for 1995. We want the coordinated effort which we do not now have. We are making great progress with this. Let us move ahead. We make the modest adjustment I suggested. If the gentleman would make the adjustment on the amendment, we could all be happy.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, let me understand just what the suggestion is the gentleman from New York made as to the interposing of this language.

Mr. BOEHLERT. If the gentleman will continue to yield, the new language would read, "include in the coordinated program each year an annual interagency budget." That is what we are trying to get for each fiscal year of the program. That is what we are trying to get.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] has again expired.

Mr. WALGREN. I ask unanimous consent the gentleman from California have 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I will not object, but I would suggest that the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his amendment and they go to the back of the Chamber and work this out. We have four or five other amendments that we can work on while they solve this problem.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There is no objection.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WALKER

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I propose, instead of the amendment just withdrawn, to include new language in that section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman offers a new amendment?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a new amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as read.

There was no objection.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALKER: Page 29, line 16, after "program" insert "each year."

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, by this amendment, in that section of the bill addressed by my previous amendment, after the word "program," I would add the words, "each year," before the word, "an."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman, just to avoid confusion, would say, "each fiscal year" before "an annual interagency budget," I think it would be very helpful, because it then would read: "* * * each fiscal year an annual interagency budget for each fiscal year of the program."

Mr. WALKER. I accept the gentleman's modification.

The modification offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] is as follows:

Insert the word "fiscal" after the word "each" in the amendment offered by Mr. WALKER.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER], as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BARTON OF TEXAS

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARTON of Texas: On page 31, SEC. 102. (b), strike line 6 and all that follows through line 12, and redesignate the following subsections accordingly.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, what this amendment does is delete a duplicative reporting requirement. In this same section, on page 30, at the top of the page, subsection 8, the Secretaries are required to contract with a scientific body to do the same thing that they are required over here on a 2-year basis.

□ 1755

This amendment would delete the requirement that they then have to analyze the data that is going to be submitted every 2 years on an annual basis. So what the purpose of this amendment is to do, instead of analyzing the same data 2 years in a row, eliminate the requirement that that data be analyzed every year.

It does not strike the requirement that the Secretary should submit an annual report to the Congress evaluating the progress of the coordinated program. It does eliminate the requirement that they have to analyze the biannual data on an annual basis.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there is not a duplication here as the gentleman from Texas has pointed out. Indeed, both sections are required if in fact we are going to get an adequate analysis of the information that is derived.

The section that the gentleman wishes to strike is a section that analyzes the dietary, nutritional, and related health status of the information that comes in. It is the analysis of the information that is collected. The charts, the various numbers, the designations.

The need is to interpret the information that is collected, and that is what is provided for on page 8. They are two very distinct and separate functions, and for that reason they were laid out here differently. There is not a duplication here; it is an effort not only gather the information and analyze it, but also to provide for its interpretation. Unless we provide for this, we are not going to be able to get any benefit from the information that does flow from these nutrition monitoring efforts.

For that reason, I would urge the Members to vote against the amendment.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Is it not the gentleman's understanding that the requirement on section 8 at the top of page 30 requires that that data that is going to be published every 2 years also be analyzed? The language is almost identical. And publish every 2 years or more frequently if appropriate a report on the dietary, nutritional, and health-related status of the people of the United States and the nutritional quality of the national food supply.

The only difference is where over on section 8 on page 30 you are requiring it on a biannual basis and it is contracted out to a scientific body. On page 31, section 3, you are requiring that the same data be analyzed on an annual basis by people that are working directly for the Federal Government.

Mr. PANETTA. If the gentleman will look at page 31, section 5, it states that, "On the annual basis it will include an executive summary of the report that is most recently published by the scientific body as provided for in subsection A8," so that it would appear as an annual report, a summary of that report, and it would be made available on that basis.

I do not see any contradiction here between the two sections or the provisions that have been laid out in the bill.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. If the gentleman will yield, my amendment does not delete section 5; I do not deal with that at all. Again, I am asking——

Mr. PANETTA. The problem that we have is that without the analysis done on the basis of the information that is derived, section 8 does not make any sense and, therefore, section 5 does not make any sense. The three are interrelated. You have got to gather and analyze the information, you have got to provide for its interpretation, and it has to be done on a continuing basis. That is the whole point of having these provisions.

We are not trying to duplicate anything here. Indeed, we are trying to make use of the information collected in the most effective way.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. If the gentleman will yield, I guess I am just confused, because it appears to me that you do not have to analyze what you contract out with and that is what these, what you are going to be doing over on the next page is analyze something that is going to be analyzed anyway every 2 years. You are going to analyze the same thing every year.

Mr. PANETTA. Again, my understanding is there are two very distinct activities here involved with the information-gathering process. One is the analyzing of it in terms of the information that flows in. The establishment of the charts, the numbers, the statistics that have been gathered by virtue of the surveys that have been accomplished.

The next step has to be interpreting that information. What does it mean? What are its implications in terms of nutrition impact? They are very distinct activities and that is why they are laid out here in very different sections. To knock out one would then impact on our ability to do any interpretation because you have destroyed the ability to analyze the information. The two have to go together.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. If the gentleman will yield, why does it have the sentence, "to interpret available data."? Why have that if they are not going to do that?

Mr. PANETTA. Again, I will repeat the fact that we are talking about two very distinct activities. The analyzing is not interpreting here. Analyzing basically means pulling together the information that has been gathered, developing the charts, developing the information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. PANETTA was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. PANETTA. Pulling together that information, developing the charts, developing the statistics, and basically accumulating what has been gathered by the various monitoring efforts. The interpretation of that becomes a scientific effort. It has to be provided to the American Society for Experimental Biology and the other Academy of Science organizations because they are the ones who can best then interpret that accumulation of information.

These are not the same activity; they are two very distinct activities. Thus, there is no duplication here.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I respect the analysis of the gentleman from California of this section. I must respectfully say that in spite of his eloquent explanation, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Health and Human Services, as of yesterday, did not agree with his analysis. For that reason, I would still ask my colleagues to adopt my amendment.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think anybody in this Chamber objects to an analysis of nutritional information so that the American public can better be advised as to whether or not what we are eating is really meeting the needs of the human system.

The irony of this whole process relating to this, yet a new program that is being proposed is that it is a duplication of what we are already doing. Would you believe that we have 95 staffers now working in the Human Nutrition Information Service. They have been at that job since 1981 when the agency was created by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Department of Health and Human Services as a result of a mandate passed by Congress in 1978.

The point I seek to make is just how much nutritional monitoring do we want to achieve? In the 1986 fiscal year we have appropriated $5 million for this effort and next year it is $6 million, the following year it is $8 million. That is provided in the Agriculture bill which we passed; the Food Security Act of 1985.

I would like to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. BARTON], for what he is after here in this amendment. He is merely suggesting that if we are going to analyze it every other year that should be enough. We do not have to analyze what we have done every other year every year. He wants to eliminate the every-year requirement, and I commend him for that and wish him well with this amendment.

As to the bill itself, I think the kindest thing that we in the House can do with this bill is bury it under the Capitol. That is the consideration I think it deserves. It is just another example of how the bureaucracy grows and grows and the taxpayers are stuck with the bill for all of this bureaucracy that sounds so good in terms of what it portends, but it will likely result in the production of reams of volumes of papers and analyses that will sit on a shelf somewhere and gather dust and never be read by anybody except the people who proofread the product at the printers when it was being published.

In case you are wondering about who you want to call if you want to check on the status of nutritional information in the Federal Government, here is a copy of the telephone directory for the Human Nutrition Information Service. The Director is Robert L. Rizek. Call him up. He is at 436–8457. Since it is after 5 o'clock, he has probably gone home, but next week if you want to call him and find out whether what you are eating is nutritionally proper, call him up. He will probably tell you and refer you to some of the reports that are in existence.

I note with interest that when this bill was on the Suspension Calendar, it had a money figure in it. As I recall, it was around $30 million, but I am not sure. Now that that money figure has been taken out, I suspect that the sponsors of the legislation believe that somehow if we hide the cost, the Members will be a little more inclined to approve yet another addition to the bureaucracy.

In closing, let me say that the kindest thing that we can do to this bill is to bury it in the bottom of the Capitol.

Mr. MACKAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I will not take 5 minutes, I will just speak from my experience and my acquaintance with the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] and others on that side. All I can say is, if the gentleman was on the subcommittees that had responsibility to do oversight on these agencies, he would not have had to call up the man, we had the man sitting there, and we could not get the man to give us a straight answer. We could not get him to tell us how much he was spending; we could not get him to tell us how his program tied together with anything else; and we could not get him to tell us when, after 8 years of being mandated by this Congress, after 8 years we could not get him to tell us when we were going to have a comprehensive plan.

Here is what we have. This is a prepublication copy. The real copy is going to come out in July. Let me tell you when this was due. This was due 2 years ago. You know why we got that? Because the bill is coming on the floor for debate.

All I can say is, with all due respect, the gentleman is attempting to make an ideological argument over a very practical problem. We have a bureaucratic nightmare. We are on your side of the issue, and somehow or other it is very difficult to convince the gentleman that we are trying to save money and not spend money.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACKAY. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I am just curious, was this person who declined to issue the information asked to come before a congressional committee and testify?

Mr. MACKAY. These persons have been asked and they have appeared, the heads of the agencies have appeared; I can show you the record from 3 years ago when I had the heads of two agencies that are responsible, and I said, "Which of your agencies is responsible?" I knew one of them was, and you know what? They did not know which one was responsible.

That is a disgrace, and that actually happened. We have it on the record.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I could not agree with my friend more, and I think that the responsible thing for us to do with that kind of performance from a member of the executive branch of Government is to bring each of them the retirement that they richly deserve and just exit them out of the budget process, and wish them well in their next employment, wherever that may happen to be.

Mr. MACKAY. I thank the gentleman for that comment, and frankly, that thought also crossed our minds.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON].

The amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PACKARD

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PACKARD: On page 32, SEC. 103. (a)(2), line 21, strike "resources were" and insert in lieu thereof" nutrition benefits are".

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, I simply was concerned in this small change that we would be asking for a system to be set up that would review the personal income and the personal spending habits of those that would be involved in programs, and I believe that we have reached an agreement that we are referring only to nutritional programs and short funding in those areas, that that is what we are talking about.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACKARD. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I appreciate his cooperation. We have discussed this matter. He has made the appropriate amendment. What we are basically focusing on here are the adequacy of benefits that are provided and how they impact on an adequate diet and on the nutrition of those who receive those benefits.

This is something that we have been looking at time and time again with the hearings that we have in the Nutrition Subcommittee, and for that reason this type of analysis is important.

The gentleman has made the appropriate amendment, I thank him for it, and the Committee on Agriculture certainly has no problem with the amendment and would accept it.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACKARD. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALGREN. On behalf of the Committee on Science and Technology, I certainly accept the amendment, and we appreciate the way that it has been presented.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlemen, both of them, for their cooperation, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PACKARD].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SMITH OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire: On page 44, SEC. 201, in line 20, strike "and" and all that follows through line 22 and insert in lieu thereof".".

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is quite simple. It eliminates approximately $100,000 in travel stipends for the advisory committee members.

I think that we should take a look at what we have done. I think that the issue here is not the merits of nutrition monitoring; I think we all accept the fact that nutrition monitoring is a very noble cause. What we are looking at here, however, is two existing programs, both in Agriculture and in HHS, which are supposed to be monitoring nutrition.

They are not doing it, and the question is, actually two questions: who will do the monitoring, and why are not those who are supposed to be doing it and being paid to do it, doing it?

I feel that if we are going to create an advisory committee consisting of the Director of Nutrition Research, employee of a State government, employee of a local government, a National Academy of Sciences member, private sector representative, somebody from the academic community, and somebody "from a public interest group" among others, if we are going to put these people on a committee to do somebody else's work, then why do we not take the money from those who are not doing the job and compensate them for mileage, if that is what we need to do.

I think that the bottom line here is that if you are going to serve on this committee, it is a bit of an honor, and sponsorships are available from local community groups, support from the committee members, State nutrition agency, academic institutions, business groups, any number of individuals who are available to help defray the costs, or, as I said earlier, taking it from the Agriculture and the HHS people who are not doing the job to begin with.

In addition, I want to point out that both in the current Senate tax bill as well as the House tax bill, we do not know yet which one we will get, but in both bills there is a 100-percent deduction for this type of mileage allowance. So we are really paying twice, the taxpayers are paying twice here, which I do not think is in the best interest of the taxpayers, and hopefully not in the spirit and intent of the makers of the bill.

Why also must committee meetings, advisory committee meetings, if we create this committee, be held in Washington, DC? If there are members on this committee with travel problems, perhaps we could move the meetings out there wherever they are who are having the travel problems, or better yet, perhaps we could appoint somebody to the committee who does not worry about a little travel money in his own particular situation.

I think that the issue here is that we are paying additional people mileage to do something that should be done by the appropriate agencies, and I would ask that my colleagues support me on this amendment because we can save approximately $100,000 each year, and looking at the outlays over 10 years, you are looking at at least $1 million in travel to pay somebody to do something that we are paying somebody to do already, and therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would call for my amendment to be approved.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I suspect that many Members on the floor who are listening to these amendments are wonder-ring as to what the real purpose of them is. This is not in any way to impugn the motives of the gentleman making the amendment.

We have here legislation which has been exhaustively examined in two committees, which has been before the House before and passed by a majority.

□ 1815

It is a good faith effort to save literally millions of dollars and to improve on our presently chaotic programs scattered throughout the Government of the United States.

The gentleman offering this amendment hopes, I guess, to perfect this legislation by what is sometimes a politically popular effort to strike out $50,000 for travel. The purpose of this travel fund, of course, is to pay for the expenses of non-Federal participants in the program who are asked to give us the benefit of their judgment, their wisdom, in order to improve this program and to better involve State and local agencies.

The gentleman in striking out these funds, I will not say that he deals a mortal blow to the program, he just has a chilling effect upon the participation of the very people who he would want to participate, the people from his State, from my State, from others who could give us a constructive viewpoint here.

Now, I ask the gentleman, in all honesty, is that really what he wants to do, or is he trying hopefully to draw out the consideration of this bill for so long that maybe the sponsors will give up and go home or something like that.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BROWN of California. I am happy to yield to my friend.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I think the issue here is that if you are going to compensate individuals for mileage, it is my understanding, and correct me if I am wrong, that these individuals are not being paid, is that correct?

Mr. BROWN of California. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. So if you are going to compensate them to travel to have these committee meetings to do somebody else's work, then why not take the money, fire somebody who is not doing the job and save the taxpayers the money and give them the mileage? That is all I am saying.

We can talk about duplication and talk about political motivation all we want, but in my State that is fiscal responsibility and good sensible management. If you have got somebody who is not doing the job managing and you put somebody else in to do the management, then get rid of the people who are not doing the management and compensate those who are.

Mr. BROWN of California. Well, I appreciate the gentleman's statement, but really, I am sure the gentleman does not think we are inviting people in to manage this program. We are inviting people in to help improve this program, to give us the kind of outside expertise and judgment that will reflect a broader constituency. That is not managing the program. That is helping the managers to relate their activities more clearly to the people that they serve.

I am struck, when I was first elected to Congress, I did not get any travel pay. I got one trip back to my district per year. I thought that was kind of shortsighted, because I cannot give the kind of representation to the people of my district with one trip per year and then making another dozen trips and not being paid for it.

The gentleman is asking in effect people who will come to Washington to represent the constituencies in the State to do it on their own money, and that is unrealistic, undesirable, and not good management.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. BROWN of California. I am happy to yield.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I could not agree more with my colleague.

I rise in strong opposition to the well-intentioned amendment. I have great respect for my colleague, the gentleman from New Hampshire, but we have discussed this.

What we want is a citizens advisory council, people who are knowledgeable in their fields, many of them currently working for local governments, and we all know that local governments are strapped for cash, and we are part of the problem.

Second, many of them are working not-for-profit agencies. They have great expertise. They want to make a contribution to their country. They would serve with no per diem, no compensation.

We are just asking for a modest investment on the part of the Federal Government to reimburse them for their actual travel expenses.

I do not think we should deny ourselves the expertise that is out there all across America, people who are working, making a modest income, making a great contribution at the local government level in the not-for-profit agencies.

I think that while the amendment is well-intentioned, I feel very strongly about it and I would urge my colleagues to oppose it.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his comments.

I ask for "no" vote on the amendment.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have the greatest respect for my colleagues on the other side of the aisle on this particular amendment. I would have some disagreement with the statement made that the purpose of this bill is to save money.

I would again point out that according to the estimates that I have, although no funds are authorized in this particular bill, the best estimates are that it is going to cost an additional $70 million on up to $182 million, so I do not think the purpose of the bill, at least it is not stated as such, is to save money.

With regard to this particular amendment, we had this same discussion in the subcommittee and in the committee about whether or not to allow travel expenses. At one point we also had an actual salary for some of the Members, and that was deleted. We did not delete the travel expense requirement, although in other advisory committees that our committee has set up we have deleted the travel expense requirement.

I would think that the people who are going to be appointed to this National Advisory Committee are of such stature, and it is such an honor to be appointed by the President or Congress to one of these committees, that they would be more than able to pay their own way to Washington, DC, for the committee meetings, or to wherever the meetings happen to be held.

Now, $100,000 is not a lot of money at the Federal level, but it is still Federal tax dollars and if we can save that money, I think it is worth doing; so I do support the amendment and urge my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I am more than happy to yield to my colleague.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, if I can recall that committee markup, there was strong bipartisan opposition after a thorough and spirited debate on the subject. We did address the subject of per diem which was in the original bill and we conceded that perhaps we were asking some public service and we would agree to eliminate the per diem, which we did; but in terms of the actual travel expenses, the point I made in the committee is a point I will make here. In many instances we are looking for some people who may be in upstate New York or in central Texas or New Hampshire, across this country, working in local governments, dedicated, committed, making a great contribution, maybe making the grand sum of $18,000 a year, with a family and three or four children, but they have something to offer to this Nation and to this advisory committee.

We would ask them to come to Washington and share with us their expertise. We would also ask them to pick up the tab for their travel to Washington.

I really think that is unrealistic. That is asking something that the people are just not prepared or in a position to give. They would if they could, especially the people working in a not-for-profit organization across the country. We have all been exposed to them. The commitment is there. Do not deny them.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I am happy to yield.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out in response to the gentleman from New York that I do not have a particular issue with compensating the fine Americans who would come in and tell the people who are running these agencies how to save money, because apparently they are not doing a very good job of it. My issue here is why add $100,000 to our budget to do that when we could take that money from other sources in those agencies that are not doing the job. That is the issue.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield to me? I understand it is still his time.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, let me say that when the day arrives when we in Washington think we have all the answers is the day I am going to walk away from this Federal Government. We do not even know all the questions. What we need for grassroots America is people to come to Washington who daily live with these programs and live with the people we are privileged to represent and give us their best advice.

We cannot trust the judgment, the exclusive judgment of all those fine people working in the executive branch, and I am not downgrading them. They are very learned people. Just in this Chamber there are great learned people. I have great respect for all my colleagues.

But guess what, I do not trust our collective judgment alone without the input from those people across America that we would draw from to serve on these advisory committees.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a comment. I could not agree more with my colleague, the gentleman from New York, about all the answers not being in Washington. I would point out, though, that I could spend every waking hour of every day in my office visiting people who have made the trip from Texas at their own expense to talk to me about pressing national issues.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BARTON of Texas was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I cannot in all honesty feel that the caliber of the people who are going to be appointed to these advisory committees would not be able to supply their own travel expenses.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON] has a comment to make, I am happy to yield to him.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to say that the gentlemen who are speaking on this by and large are from the Science and Technology Committee. I do not know what their experience there leads to in terms of an understanding whether or not the Science and Technology Committee is profligate, but I just want to assure the House that from the agriculture side of this issue, we have tried to be frugal. We are trying to see that efforts are coordinated, rather than duplicative. We want a proper input from Federal, State, and local officials on this.

I think in the language of the bill we have arrived there.

I do not take issue with the gentleman from the Science and Technology Committee. They have their own experience from their service on that committee, but I just want the House to know how frugal the Agriculture Committee has tried to be.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman from New York a few minutes ago made the point about bringing in people from all over America. I think we all agree with that, that that is something that is very useful.

The problem with most of these advisory commissions, however, becomes that we do not bring in the average citizen to advise the Government. We do not bring in the commonsense of America.

What we tend to bring in are people who are beholden to these programs. They have Federal grants that run the programs. They are people formerly with the agencies and therefore they bring their expertise back to Washington. We tend to bring in people who formerly served within programs that have a tie to what we are doing.

The experience with these commissions over the years is not that we get a lot of independent knowledge from commonsense America, but rather that we get a lot of people on these commissions who are the so-called experts and many of those experts are the very ones who brought on the problems that we are now asking the advisory commission to try to solve.

I think that if we could be assured that what we were going to get was a lot of good commonsense Americans coming in, that we probably could do without the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire and assure that those people got their travel expenses.

If what we are going to get is a lot of former bureaucrats coming back to town to tell us how they should have run it when they were here, but did not, then it seems to me that maybe the gentleman from New Hampshire has a pretty good amendment and maybe we ought to make those people pay their way back to Washington. We paid them too much to come to Washington in the first place.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I would point out that I agree with my colleagues, the gentleman from New York, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, on the commonsense issue.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. BOEHLERT, and by unanimous consent, Mr. BARTON of Texas was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, there are thousands, in fact, millions of people all across America out there offering advice to this Congress. The problem is that this Congress is not hearing, it is not listening. If we were listening to the thousands of Americans and millions of Americans out there on these deficits, we would not be having this kind of bureaucratic mess that we are creating right here with this kind of legislation.

I think there are people out there who would like to come in here and tell this Congress, this Government, how to run itself, and it is not doing a very good job of it. It is as simple as that and this is a perfect example of it.

You are paying people to travel in here who are going to correct problems, and rightfully so, that need to be corrected, for individuals who are being paid to do it.

□ 1830

I have no objection to that. What I object to is paying the people who are not doing it, and I think that is still the issue.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOEHLERT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to stress that we are not paying the people we are seeking to serve on this advisory commission. We are just reimbursing them for the actual travel expenses to and from any meetings incident to their service on the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON] is required to remain on his feet.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Just let me say this: In my previous life I was privileged to be a county executive in New York State. We had 1,600 people working for the county government, many of them experts in their fields. Many of them had a great deal to offer beyond Oneida County, NY. Many of them would have welcomed an opportunity to serve on an advisory council to give some advice and assistance to an agency of the Federal Government and would have been able to make major contributions.

The problem is that we did not have in our county budget the money to pay for their travel expenses and they did not have within their personal resources the money to pay the travel expenses.

I would suggest this, in reference to the comment made by our colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania: If we want to guarantee that we continue to have advisory panels like this, advisory councils like this, peopled only by people of substance and means, we would approve this amendment. But if we want to give opportunity to serve to people who have some special expertise but lack the resources, I would suggest that the amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SMITH].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BARTON OF TEXAS

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARTON of Texas: On page 42, SEC. 201, strike line 19 and all that follows through line 9 on page 43, and redesignate the following subsections accordingly.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, what this particular amendment does, in the advisory committee that is going to be set up if this legislation becomes law, as the legislation is currently structured, it states that the individuals who are appointed to the advisory council by the President shall include one member who is director of the Nutrition Research Unit, one member who is an employee of a State government, one member who is an employee of a local government, one member who is an appointed representative of the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Academy of Sciences.

My amendment strikes the requirements that those particular types of individuals shall be appointed. The President would still appoint seven members. They would have to be people who were eminent in the field of administrative dietetics, clinical dietetics, community nutrition research. It just gives the President the flexibility to appoint any individual who meets the general requirements. It prevents the advisory council from becoming an advocacy council.

For those reasons, I would urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this makeup of the council really is designed to enable the advisory council to serve with wisdom. We are not creating a body here that would be at variance with the President. The President appoints these individuals and, therefore, he certainly would use his wisdom and exercise his discretion in a way that would appoint good people to this advisory council.

The whole purpose of the program is to serve State and local governments, to respond to the specific needs of the kind of nutrition research units that are involved in this area. It is just a very important thing that the members of this council bring together the sensitivities from the sectors that they are specified to represent.

All the public witnesses who testified on this bill recommended that individuals from these particular areas make up that advisory council. It certainly needs to be an advocacy council for the direction of the program, but certainly with the proper restraint, because the individuals would be selected by a President who was choosing people who were constructive participants and had something to contribute.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to oppose the amendment on that basis.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALGREN. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that my amendment does not eliminate the requirement that the Presidential appointees be eminent in their field and represent broad geographic areas from the private sector, academia, and things like that.

So since we are not specific in the congressional appointees, why should we be specific in the Presidential appointees? It would still ask that they meet the same high standards of achievement.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, we really want State and local government to be realistically involved in this area. I think it is very important that someone be on that board, with the judgment of the President, who is intimately involved in State and local government. I think it would be self-defeating for a theoretical nutritionist to ask a State government to do something that perhaps the State government is substantially unable to do.

So that is why we bring onto this board people who are practically involved in the areas where the service is intended to go.

I would point out that if this board works properly, the benefit that they could bring to our system is immense. When you consider that we are spending $19 billion in food assistance programs, $70 billion in medical care programs, a substantial portion of which is involved in nutrition-related deficiencies, perhaps not a substantial portion, but much for the elderly, the leverage that wise action has is tremendous. So that is why it is so important that we have people with practical, actual involvement in these areas.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. If the gentleman would yield further, I appreciate the answer.

Mr. Chairman, I would point out that my amendment would not preclude that. It just would give the President flexibility not to be limited to individuals in those particular educational areas and occupational areas.

Mr. WALGREN. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I understand, but I would say that this is our responsibility to determine. We are the ones who are spending the taxpayers' money. We ought to set up a system that has our highest confidence, and this system, absent this requirement, would certainly not qualify for our confidence in the way in which we must invest it.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. If the gentleman would yield for one additional question, when the gentleman says "we," am I to assume the gentleman means we Members of Congress?

Mr. WALGREN. Yes. I believe this is a responsibility we should keep on this floor.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. All right. If that is the "we," then why does the gentleman not specify the appointees that the Congress actually designates on this advisory council?

Mr. WALGREN. There was a story about the sum total of the wisdom of Congress, and it was not very much, but where we can recognize a little bit of it, I think we ought to go in that direction, and this goes in that direction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to make an announcement.

The Chair desires to announce that we just had a conversation with the leader in the other body, which now is debating the last of a series of proposed amendments to the supplemental appropriation conference report.

Other attempts to amend have been rejected, and if the present amendment pending at this time should not be agreed to, then there would be nothing further for the House to have to do with regard to the passage of the conference report on the supplemental appropriations bill.

If, on the other hand, an amendment should be agreed to in the other body, it would be necessary, of course, for the House to take further action with regard to that conference committee report.

So following this action, it will be the purpose of the Chair to seek a recess for such time as may seem to be desirable, let us say until perhaps 8 o'clock or thereabouts, and at that time we could come back and see what it looked like, if that seems to be agreeable to the membership.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, many Members are asking whether there is any possibility of the budget conference report coming out. Is that not possible?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is possible and, of course, if it were possible for us to take care of that tonight, the Chair thinks we would want to do it, though the Chair believes that most Members would feel it unwise, if it could be avoided, to have two nights in succession in which we would be in past midnight.

Ms. OAKAR. If I may further ask, in the event that we finish the business tonight relative to the supplemental, and the budget conferees do not have any voice in unison, then should we assume there are no votes tomorrow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would be right, unless there were very strong evidence, strong compelling reason to believe that we would have a budget resolution to act upon tomorrow, in which case we would come in at 10 o'clock and try to be adjourned by noon or thereabouts. But unless there is strong compelling evidence to believe there is an agreement on a budget resolution, then the House would adjourn tonight and hang that conference report on a limb to await our return.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the recess authority the Chair is going to seek will be to recess until 8 o'clock so we are recessed until a time certain?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There will be a recess until 8 o'clock or thereabouts, that is correct.

Mr. WALKER. I think the Members would prefer to have a time certain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would take a unanimous-consent request, of course, of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania would surely be aware.

The Chair would at this time suggest a unanimous consent request that it be in order to have a recess for 1 hour, with bells to ring 15 minutes before the House reconvenes.

Without objection, that authority will be granted.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will not object, but I would like to respond to a concern that I heard mentioned as I was coming to the floor by the Speaker with regard to the budget conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I have been in conversation with the chairman of the Budget Committee of the other body. I am hopeful as a result of that conversation that the last problem between our two bodies with regard to the conference report may now be solved and thus, if it is, which I expect to find out in 5 to 10 minutes, we expect to convene the conference on the budget resolution within the next 30 minutes and thus we would be prepared, Mr. Speaker, to bring to the floor as a result of the cooperation of the minority side by unanimous consent, and the work of the ranking member, the budget conference report for fiscal year 1987, hopefully in an hour to an hour and a half.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Chair?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous matter on H.R. 2436, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 197, on June 25, 1986, I am recorded as voting "aye." I meant to record my vote as "no" rather than "aye."

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this statement appear in the permanent RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the authority just granted, the Chair declares the House in recess for approximately 1 hour.

Accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 25 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess to reconvene at approximately 8:25 p.m.

□ 2032

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired at 8 o'clock and 32 minutes p.m., the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. WRIGHT].

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4515) "An act making urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered, 10, 11, 15, 18, 20, 22, 23, 25, 28, 40, 42, 44, 45, 50, 54, 59, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 84, 87, 91, 93, 95, 96, 97, 98, 101, 107, 108, 109, 111, 112, 120, 122, 128, 131, 132, 134, 136, 143, 144, 154, 155, 162, 163, 168, 172, 176, 179, 180, 182, 184, 186, 187, 192, 216, and 218 to the above-entitled bill.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 175 with an amendment.

URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATONS, 1986

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, it is my duty, I think I should say, at this time to make motions, the effect of which are to kill the effort on the other side of the Capitol to add oil workers to come within the Trade Adjustment Assistance Act for workers. As chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I have had wide experience with many subjects; I have dealt with them this year. I take this time to call the attention of my colleagues on the floor and for the record to point out at this time we are buying $170 billion from foreign countries for which we are not paying, running in the red. We are $49 billion behind in what we are buying from Japan.

We have $1.6 billion we are spending to support our Military Forces in the Japanese area while they in turn are sending their products over here, for their safety.

We have $4.6 billion we are spending for our military in West Germany. When you go over there, they ask you to buy more trucks and hire their local people. I deal with agriculture. I have kept it, because it is hard to find anybody who has the time to work at it.

In 1974, 1975, and 1980 and for the last 5 years, we have held American agricultural products off world markets because the administration won't use the existing law to sell these products for what they will bring. We will soon have an appropriation bill that is going to call for $16 billion from the Treasury so farmers can sell below the cost of production. That is a result of the new law.

I listened to the debate on the other side of the Capitol and, goodness knows, something needs to be done. Fortunately, in the oil areas they have not had many of these bad years, but in the rest of this country they have had plenty of them; textiles, shoes and many others whose industries are failing and creating unemployment. We hear about trade. It is not trade when you buy, and they do not.

It is not trade when we quit producing and start buying on credit, which we are doing.

Now the problem before us today is that on the other side of the Capitol they have a provision which is subject to a point of order.

The other body is trying to relieve a serious situation in the oil industry. They are fortunate not to have had other bad years. They are feeling it for the first time in many years. I wish to state what my purpose here is, and I want to describe the overall situation so you will know that I do not like the job that I will have to do later of insisting on the House position.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN TO CONCUR IN SENATE AMENDMENT NO. 175

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 4515) making urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes, with the Senate amendment to the House amendment to the Senate amendment No. 175 and to concur therein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill and the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment to the House amendment to Senate amendment No. 175, as follows:

At the end of the amendment insert:

(A) such worker is covered by a certification made under subchapter A of such chapter only by reason of the amendment made by subsection (a) of this section, and

(B) the total or partial separation of such worker from adversely affected employment occurs after September 30, 1987.

Mr. FRENZEL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I have moved that the House concur in the Senate amendment to the House amendment to the Senate amendment No. 175.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that the amendment violates section 401(b)(1) of the Budget Act. Section 401(b)(1) prohibits consideration of any bill, resolution, or amendment which provides new spending authority which is to become effective before the first day of the fiscal year which begins during the calendar year in which the bill or resolution is reported.

The Senate amendment amends the Trade Act of 1974 to expand eligibility under the trade adjustment assistance program to cover workers and firms supplying essential parts or services to the oil and gas industry. The amendment would apply to petitions for certification which are filed or pending on or after September 30, 1986, and before October 1, 1987. The amendment would thereby provide new spending authority for worker weekly cash benefits effective in fiscal year 1986.

Since the effective date is before the first day of fiscal year 1987, the Senate amendment is a clear violation of section 401(b)(1) of the Budget Act and the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I consented to the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WRIGHT). The Chair will rule: The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order that the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi to concur in the Senate Amendment to the House amendment to the Senate amendment number 175 to H.R. 4515 violates section 401(b)(1) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974. That provision prohibits the consideration of a bill, or amendment, which provides new entitlement spending authority, as defined in section 401(c)(2)(C) of the Budget Act, which is to become effective before the first day of the fiscal year beginning in the calendar year in which the bill under question is reported.

The bill H.R. 4515 was reported in the 1986 calendar year. The Chair agrees with the argument of the gentleman from Minnesota that the Senate amendment in question provides new entitlement authority for adjustment assistance under the Trade Act of 1974, since it requires the Secretary of the Labor to certify a newly defined group of workers as eligible for trade adjustment assistance. Since the Senate amendment provides for such spending authority to apply to petitions filed or pending on or after September 30, 1986, before the beginning of fiscal year 1987, the Chair therefore sustains the point of order against the motion offered by the Gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, the point I make, if I may be permitted, is that in textiles and in shoes and in many other things in this country we have faced the same situation. The motion that I have to make here I understand is correct under the rules. I can express the hope that the other side of the Capitol will add these other things to it.

Therefore, I move at this time, Mr. Speaker, to disagree to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, has the Chair ruled on the point of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has ruled on the point of order and sustained the point of order of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thanks the Chair.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to disagree to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair intends to call special orders at this time and would like to announce to the membership that the conferees on the budget resolution are at this moment meeting and have reported hopeful indications that in a matter of some 45 minutes or thereabouts they might expect to have a conference report for the consideration of the House. Therefore the Chair will proceed with hearing special orders for the time being or until such time as we can get a clarification of the intentions of the conferees.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on the subject of the special order today by the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be permitted to extend their remarks and to include therein extraneous material on the subject of the special order speech today by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

COLA EQUALITY

(Mr. BLILEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce legislation with a dual purpose—to exempt all Federal annuity programs from Gramm/Rudman and to assure all these programs are given the same cost-of-living-adjustment. True, there is already legislation before this Congress to exempt retirement funds from Gramm/Rudman. However, these bills say nothing of how the retirement programs will be treated once they exempted. Take for example Civil Service Retirement. There has been no Gramm/Rudman for the past 3 years and yet this program has not received the same COLA's as Social Security. In fact military and Federal retirees have received only one full COLA in the past 3 years.

My legislation, "the Cost-of-Living-Adjustment Act of 1986" will mandate that all annuitants of Federal retirement programs will receive the same COLA. No inequities and no discrimination. The only way to do this is to tie all cost-of-living-adjustments under other retirement programs to the same "trigger". In this case that same trigger is the Social Security Trigger. And, by virtue of Social Security's exemption from Gramm/Rudman these other programs should be exempt as well.

The other programs which will be linked to the Social Security COLA provisions are: Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability fund under the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement Act of 1964 for certain employees (50 U.S.C. 403), the Civil Service Retirement and Disability fund chapter 85 of title 5, United States Code, Annuity payable under subchapter 5 of chapter 7 or title 31, United States Code, annuity payable from the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability fund under chapter 8 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 4041 to 4067), annuity payable from the Judicial Survivors' Annuities fund under section 376 of title 28, United States Code, retired and retainer pay payable to members and former members of the Army, Air Force, Navy, and Marine Corps, retired pay payable to commissioned officers of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, retired pay payable to members and former members of the Coast Guard, retired pay payable to commissioned officers of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201 et seq.) compensation payable to employees and former employees under chapter 81 of title 5, United States Code, annuities authorized by the Railroad Retirement Act of 1974 shall so increase each annuity computed under section 3(6) of such act (45 U.S.C. 2316 (67)).

The bill includes all those programs included in Gramm/Rudman except for those programs covering annuitants whose retirement programs are administered by the Federal Government but who did not actually work for the Government or the military. Also, my legislation does not cover retired Presidents. Of the living retired Presidents I don't know one who can't or won't forgo a little revenue for the good of the country.

My bill is prospective beginning with fiscal year 1987. Just like every other Member of this body I would like to go back to the beginning of COLA's in the seventies and restore all those COLA's foregone. Also, I would like to restore the $12 billion in cuts which came March 1 of the year and the COLA's along with it. Quite simply, we can't. We don't have the money.

Also, my bill does not exempt the administrative costs for these programs. In my heart of hearts I believe that if Congress limits moneys for administrative cost the savings will be made up in cutting back on wasteful practices and not by cutting salaries or necessary spending. It's funny how managers find ways of tightening their belts when it comes down to belt tightening or else.

This is not another in a series of knee-jerk reactions to get pet programs out of Gramm/Rudman. Years ago Congress decided that since retirees where on a fixed income they needed something to help them cope with inflation. Retirees have no other way to keep up with rising prices unless they have a COLA. Although Congress made this decision the commitment has been less than solid and many retirees outside the Social Security System have been denied the right to keep up. They have, in short, been discriminated against. And, as a postscript, Congress causes the inflation which devastates these retirees. Gramm/Rudman or no Gramm/Rudman discrimination needs to be stopped.

The budget resolutions of both Houses of Congress show that we can grant the COLA's for most programs in this bill and still live with Gramm/Rudman. I submit we can go one step further and fund all these programs and still live with Gramm/Rudman. Surely, we'll have to dip into other programs to make this happen. This is justified because we have dipped into these retirement programs many times to fund increases in other parts of the budget. As a supporter of Gramm/Rudman I feel bound to work with the appropriate committee to find a way to pay for this bill. I pledge to do that. I also pledge to continue to support fiscal responsibility which will eliminate the inflation which makes COLA's necessary.

In closing, I ask each Member to consider who this bill benefits before Members decide how to vote. Military and Federal retirees are the beneficiaries of this bill. These folks have done as much as anyone to keep this Nation free and prosperous. Mr. Speaker, let's not turn our backs on them now. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation.

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FLOOD CONTROL ACT OF 1936

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, floods occurred at the beginning of history as evidenced in the great river valleys of the United States, the Columbia, the Sabine, the Rio Grande, the Missouri, the Ohio, the Tennessee, the Wabash, and many, many others, large and small, led by the Mississippi, which drains 41 percent of the land area of Continental United States.

In the early years of our Nation, 1781 to 1788, during the days of the Articles of Confederation, each State faced the problems of the land area within its border, and of course with land so plentiful, when floods were too great, it was easier to wear out land and move west. At first each person had the responsibility to look after his own, and efforts were few, and ineffective.

With time, the development of land adjacent to streams with expensive buildings, factories, and other costly developments we had neighbors to join together, and then local taxing units were formed to meet flood problems.

Later as the Nation's population increased, and as the land was cleared for cultivation, it became apparent that it would take concerted efforts if the Nation were to hold its own; that flood control was a national problem including flood prevention in the watersheds where in many areas the water must be held back, if it was to be controlled in the flat lands.

Today, with the development of the physical wealth of our country, the value of structures, equipment factories, inventories and land having increased by 41 times since 1934, it has become absolutely imperative that every effort be made to protect that wealth. In view of reduction of our forests, the increasing amount of land being placed under concrete, highways, shopping centers, now it is accepted that all Americans have an interest in protecting all of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, this, the 50th Anniversary of the Flood Control Act of 1936, was signed into law by Franklin Delano Roosevelt on June 22, 1936, 50 years ago today.

At this point it is appropriate to look back and consider events that led up to passage of the Flood Control Act of 1936 and the benefits that have flowed to the American people from this important piece of legislation.

The Mississippi River floods of 1849 and 1850 prompted the first Federal flood control action when Congress appropriated money for two historic surveys of the Mississippi. Both were done by the Army Corps of Engineers—beginning the close association of the corps with Mississippi River flood control.

Back then, the corps believed levees alone could prevent floods along the Mississippi.

Disastrous floods in 1912 and 1913 along the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers raised the questions whether levees alone could be relied on or whether the Federal Government should provide more assistance to flood-prone areas.

In 1912, the Mississippi River was at flood stage for 60 days.

Four hundred and sixty-seven people were killed along the Ohio and flood damages were estimated at $147 million.

In 1917, for the first time, the Federal Government accepted limited responsibility for flood control in two sections of the country—the lower Mississippi and Sacramento River basins. The act also introduced the policy of local financial contributions for flood control.

Ten years later, the 1927 floods along the Mississippi convinced Congress and the corps that levees alone were not sufficient flood protection.

As a result of this flood, about 400 people died. Over 16 million acres were flooded; 41,000 buildings destroyed; and more than 700,000 driven from their homes.

That year, in 1927, Congress authorized the corps to survey the country's navigable streams in order to make plans for comprehensive development for navigation, water power, and flood control. Called 308 reports, these surveys provided Congress a basis for some emergency relief projects of the 1930's.

A year later, in 1928, a new act authorized a comprehensive plan for control of the Mississippi River and tributaries to include floodways, spillways, and channel improvements as well as continued work on the levees—thus ending the levees-only policy.

By 1935, Congress recognized a genuine nationwide need for increased Federal flood control assistance to include larger structures such as dams and reservoirs.

Congress also recognized a need for a work relief program. During the Depression, public works projects began looking very attractive as a means of employment.

The spring floods of 1936 also helped mold political and public opinion. The 1936 floods brought widespread disaster from Maine to Maryland.

In Pennsylvania, the hardest hit State, 84 people died and over 82,000 buildings were destroyed.

On June 22, 1936, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt signed the Flood Control Act of 1936. The act recognized for the first time that flood control on navigable waters or their tributaries is a proper activity of the Federal Government in cooperation with the States and in the interest of the general welfare.

Senator Royal Copeland of New York and Congressman Riley Wilson of Louisiana were the key people who guided the act through Congress.

This act authorized $320 million for 250 projects and a number of investigations and surveys. The Army Corps of Engineers would do most of the work.

The act also provided that the Soil Conservation Service of the Department of Agriculture would be responsible for conservation projects dealing with watershed run-off and soil erosion.

Since 1936, approximately 900 flood control projects have been built. This includes approximately 400 flood control dams. Between 300 and 400 flood control projects have more than one purpose—and include navigation, water supply, irrigation, recreation and hydropower.

In addition to flood control dams, the corps has built thousands of miles of levees, floodwalls, floodways, and improved channels.

Nonstructural measures are another solution to flood control. They include flood plain regulation, flood warning systems and floodproofing. A combination of nonstructural and structural measures have been used on the Charles River in Massachusetts. Opportunities are rare for purely nonstructural solutions to flood damage problems.

A particularly successful nonstructural project implemented by the corps is Indian Bend Wash in Scottsdale, AZ. It is a 7-mile greenbelt through the center of town that conveys flood waters to the Salt River. When not flooded, it is used as a recreation area complete with urban campground and golf course.

Cities such as New Orleans, built below the level of the neighboring Mississippi River, depend on structural flood control measures—such as levees and floodwalls.

Other cities along the Mississippi, Missouri and Ohio Rivers are nearly as dependent on levees and floodwalls. Such structural measures are an intrinsic part of their flood plain management program.

Flood control projects have provided relative security for those persons living in flood prone areas. The corps estimates an average of $10 billion in flood damages is prevented each year by flood control projects.

Flood control does not mean complete flood prevention, nor does it mean "zero risk." Nature is unpredictable. Occasional disasters will happen no matter what man does.

But disasters and irreversible damages continue to occur in still unprotected areas of country that we have demonstrated in the past 50 years that we have the capability to control. We are still at war to protect our inheritance; our land. Flooding and soil erosion continue to have a tremendous impact on our Nation's economy and on the safety and well-being of our citizens. The effects of urbanization and development compound the flooding problems. Through the construction of highways, buildings, and shopping centers, we are putting our land under concrete, destroying our forests and causing the water to flow into our streams and rivers much faster causing extreme hardships to the people who live in lower lying areas or at the end of the drainage systems. The potential average annual property damages from floods in the United States is estimated at about $4 billion annually. On the average, more than 300,000 people are evacuated from their homes or places of work annually, and about 185 lives are lost annually due to floods. One-sixth of all urban areas are in flood prone areas; over 200,000 square miles in our Nation are subject to flooding. According to some estimates, a 10-percent reduction in property damage could save our economy $200 to $400 million annually. The magnitude of the flood problem extends beyond these numbers when considering single events such as tropical storms and earthquakes with damages in the billions of dollars and the silent erosion of topsoil from the land of our Nation.

According to the World Watch Institute, by the year 2000 the amount of topsoil per person in the United States is projected to decline by 32 percent. Almost one half (44 percent) of the U.S. cropland is losing topsoil to affect productivity. Most of the loss (90 percent) is taking place on less than a quarter of the cropland. Unfortunately, the effects of erosion are often not visible until the situation has become irreversible. The predictable results will be starvation, vastly altered agricultural trade patterns and will ultimately affect the availability and use of all our water.

The current economy, however, is preventing us from making investments in our future. The Nation's real wealth is in its land and the productivity of its people. We cannot avoid paying the price at some point and that may be too late.

This kind of damage is not geographically isolated; for example, in the spring of 1983 some 41 States plus the Virgin Islands were plagued by floods. That year approximately $4.5 billion in flood losses were recorded by the National Weather Service. Louisiana and Mississippi alone sustained damages exceeding $600 million. In 1984 total flood damages were about $4.0 billion. Significant floods occurred in the northwest, midwest and southwest States. Arizona, for example, experienced the worst disaster of the century when over $200 million in flood damages occurred. Severe damages occurred last year in the middle Atlantic States with damage estimates at over $500 million and 40 lives lost. In February 1986, California experienced severe flooding problems; some 50,000 people were evacuated and an estimated 12,000 homes and 1,000 businesses were either damaged or destroyed. Currently, all the Great Lakes plus the Great Salt Lake have surpassed old records and continue to be dangerously high. Most of these lakes have set new monthly records for 8 or 9 straight months. Based on records dating back to 1900, most of these lakes stand at their all time record high levels.

Flood control remains one of the best means of gauging man's success in reconciling his desire to improve our standard of living. We have got the capability and the readiness. We must protect our land and our property from floods for it is our country on which all else depends.

Mr. Speaker, man will continue to dream of mastering the rivers and protecting the environment that periodically threaten his home and his productivity. Possessing that dream, perhaps, is one thing that defines humanity—we must do our best to fulfill that dream, else we will become like China and India—and other worn out areas of the world.

NICARAGUA: BAD POLICY BASED ON MISINFORMATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. CROCKETT, is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker yesterday this body took what I think was a dangerous and wrongheaded step to support the military activities of forces seeking to overthrow the legitimate government of our neighbor, Nicaragua.

I am troubled by this action, and by the distortions of truth and lack of information this vote was predicated on.

Too often, we in the Congress and the American people are denied information that would help us make informed choices. The State Department, for diplomatic reasons, and the media, for its own reasons, withholds or colors information on vital issues like Nicaragua, leaving us with little basis on which to find a rational policy.

For this reason, I am a strong supporter of congressional travel, allowing Members the opportunity to experience first hand the conditions and events that shape the lives of other peoples and the course of world history. Meeting face to face with the representatives of other governments, whether abroad or here in Washington, can help give perspective to our deliberations.

Yesterday, the House voted to give $100 million to the socalled Contras, a ragtag band of mercenaries, apparently led by drug dealers, who are trying to topple the Government of Nicaragua—a country we recognize, and whose embassy we protect here in Washington not far from the Capitol building itself. And yet how many Members of Congress, and how many of the American people, have taken the time and effort to learn and understand the Nicaraguan point of view from Nicaraguans themselves?

I recently had the privilege of attending a conference of lawyers, at which the Nicaraguan Minister-Counsellor, Mr. Francisco Campbell, a blackman, spoke. I was struck by his eloquent presentation of his government's position. I was also struck by the dissimilarity between his perception of the situation in his country, and the reports reaching the American people through the State Department and the mass media.

I would like, through the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to offer my colleagues and the readers of this important digest, the opportunity to read for themselves the remarks of Mr. Campbell:

SPEECH BY FRANCISCO CAMPBELL, MINISTER COUNSELLOR, EMBASSY OF NICARAGUA, JUNE 1986

The relations between our two countries are at a decisive cross-road. Positions and actions taken in the next few days could well determine whether our nations will become submerged in a most tragic and painful war or, grasping the opportunity for peace within our reach, avoid the nightmare of death and suffering that our two peoples clearly do not want.

Nicaragua and the Contadora countries have labored long and hard to promote a peaceful resolution to the conflict in Central America and are convinced that peace can be achieved if the U.S. decides to support negotiations. Unfortunately, the actions of the administration suggest a lack of political will to work toward peace. In fact, a Defense Department document recently made public states that the signing of a Contadora peace accord would inevitably lead to direct involvement of U.S. combat troops in a war against Nicaragua. This, to say the least, is a strange line of reasoning from an administration that says it supports the Contadora peace process.

The argument used to justify and sustain the illegal and unjust U.S. war against Nicaragua are based on false premises, which are presented in ways that distort reality to make it conform to predetermined ideological bias. Its fundamental assumption is that the Nicaraguan revolution is by nature hostile to the people of the United States and hence, a threat to the national security of the U.S.

There is no merit whatsoever to the contention that the Nicaraguan revolution is a threat to the security of the United States. On the other hand it is worth noting that no mention is made of Nicaragua's right to national security, for in the minds of U.S. strategist small countries such as Nicaragua apparently have no such right. To them this is reserved for major powers only.

Yet, the concept of national security is intimately linked to the principles of self-determination and independence and therefore, a legitimate concern of all nations, be they large or small. Problems develop, however, when one state carries this concept to extremes that impinge on the rights and security interest of another. When this happens, the issue ceases to be a question of national security and becomes simply the desire of one state to impose its will on another.

The crisis in Central America and more specifically the conflict between Nicaragua and the United States, illustrates the intrinsic threat that one State's unbridled interpretation of the concept of national security represents to the fundamental right to self-determination of another. On one hand is Nicaragua, a poor country with a population of less than three million people struggling to overcome a legacy of foreign domination, including forty-five years of U.S. supported Somoza dictatorship. On the other, is a U.S. administration that refuses to accept the fact that the Nicaraguan revolution, in part, is a direct result of the alliance of successive U.S. administrations with oppressive regimes that systematically exploited the majority of Nicaraguans, namely, the peasants and workers.

Since the revolution itself represents the rejection of an unacceptable past, it is clear that profound structural transformations are necessary to redress injustices and to build a new and more just society. The freedom to implement these transformations is a fundamental right. The right of self-determination.

This right also has an external expression. In the case of Nicaragua it is to be found in our foreign policy of nonalignment which to us is a matter principle, essential to our survival. Nicaragua seeks to establish commercial and political relations with all countries. We need and want good relations with the United States and the West in all areas: political, cultural and economic. In 1984, less than 17% of our foreign trade was with Socialist countries, the rest, 83%, was with the United States, Western Europe, Japan and Latin America.

However, our efforts to maintain commercial and economic ties are met with U.S. hostility and aggression, including the economic embargo imposed by the administration on Nicaragua in May of last year.

The initial excuse for aggression against Nicaragua was the alleged flow of arms to El Salvador. This argument has been virtually discarded because despite more than four years of covert operations and expenditure of millions of dollars on the most sophisticated surveillance equipment, the administration has yet to produce any convincing evidence to substantiate the charge that Nicaragua is giving material aid to guerrillas in El Salvador.

Moreover, the Government of Nicaragua challenged the administration to appear before the world court to make such a case. The fact that the administration has chosen to boycott the court and the rule of law is proof that it was no evidence to support its charges.

The case submitted by Nicaragua on April 9, 1984 accuses the United States of violating the most fundamental principles of international law; by directing and supporting an army of mercenaries known as the Contras, by financing and promoting their acts of terror against Nicaraguan civilians, and by carrying out direct attacks through the mining of our harbours, bombing of our oil pipelines and storage facilities and other hostile acts.

In a matter of days the world court will pronounce judgement on whether it is the United States or Nicaragua that is guilty of sponsoring and directing terrorism in Central America. It will also determine whether it is the United States or Nicaragua that is violating the Charter of the United Nations and the charter of the Organization of American States by using military force to subvert the political independence and territorial integrity of another state. Nicaragua hopes that a favorable ruling by the court will convince the administration to stop its aggression and work towards peace.

The U.S. Adminsitration knows that peace can be achieved in Central America and it can be achieved now—immediately. All that has to be done is for each of the interested parties—including the United States—to agree to do what international law already obligates them to do—avoid the use of force, or the threat of the use of force and resolve differences through peaceful means. Nicaragua has been and is prepared to sign and comply with an agreement that includes the following points:

One, no Central American state—that is to say neither Nicaragua nor its neighbors—would provide material support of any kind to guerrilla groups seeking to overthrow any government in the region.

Two, no Central American state would allow any guerrilla groups to maintain bases or headquarters on its soil or use its territory to attack any state in the region.

Three, no Central American state would attempt to export its political or economic system to any other state.

Four, no Central American state would allow any foreign power to establish a base, or station troops or weapons, in its territory.

Five, no Central American state would acquire or import offensive weapons, and all the states of the region would immediately begin discussions aimed at reducing armaments and troop levels and sending home all foreign military advisers.

Nicaragua has actively participated in the Contadora process since it began in 1983 and is prepared to sign the regional agreement if all U.S. aggression against Nicaragua is suspended and the remaining issues resolved in the context of simultaneous steps called for by the Contadora countries. These remaining issues are related to foreign military maneuvers and commitments in regards to armaments.

To expedite the negotiations, Nicaragua, on May 15 of this year, presented a serious, comprehensive proposal to resolve the outstanding issues mentioned above. Our proposal which is equitable and fair, deserves a careful analysis by all the governments involved because, on the one hand, it provides for the basic national security requirements of each Central American state and, on the other, would establish clear limitations with respect to acquisition of offensive weapons. The Nicaraguan proposal would reduce, limit, regulate or forbid the following:

(1) All type of military aircraft.
(2) All type of military helicopters.
(3) Military airports.
(4) War tanks.
(5) Heavy mortars (over 120mm).
(6) Self-propelled anti-aircraft cannons.
(7) Multiple rocket launchers over 120mm.
(8) Artillery of over 160mm.
(9) Self-propelled artillery.
(10) Surface-to-surface rocket launchers placed on warships.
(11) Warships over 40 meters in length or more than 100 metric tons.
(12) International military meneuvers.
(13) Foreign military bases.
(14) Foreign military advisers.

On the question of military maneuvers, Nicaragua's proposal would prohibit all international military exercises in the Central American region. National military exercises, thst is to say military exercises conducted by the armed forces of a given country on its own territory, would be allowed, provided they are held thirty miles from borders with neighboring states and that those states be advised of the date and duration of the exercises. Observers from neighboring states should be invited.

We hope the other Central American countries, after careful examination of our proposal, will finally decide to abandon obstructionist posturing and take concrete steps towards an agreement.

Nicaragua, for its part, will continue to participate in the additional rounds of negotiations to conclude all pending matters, in the same constructive spirit that has always characterized our participation in the Contadora process.

The Latin American countries are convinced that the Contadora talks offer the best possibility for peace in Central America and have stated that continuation of present U.S. policy and renewal of aid to the Contras would represent a significant escalation of U.S. involvement and lock the U.S. into military options which will reduce the possibility of a negotiated solution. It opens the door to the ultimate military solution—direct U.S. combat action in Nicaragua, an eventuality bound to be painful and tragic to the people of the United States and the people of Nicaragua.

This tragedy can be avoided if the U.S. administration decides to heed the June 7, 1986 communique of the Contadora countries and the support group who once again called on the U.S. to suspend all aid to the Contras and end its attempt to interject the Central American conflict into the framework of East-West confrontation.

The desire of the Nicaraguan people and government is to achieve not only peaceful and normal relations with the United States, but friendly relations. We will continue our efforts towards that goal.

Latin America, Western Europe, Japan, Canada, the non-aligned countries, most of them friends of the United States, have called on the administration to negotiate its differences with Nicaragua. Influential members of the U.S. Congress have done the same. The North American people, according to the polls, are opposed to U.S. policy towards Nicaragua.

We believe that the administration should reflect on the reasons behind this generalized opposition to its policy of aid to the Contras and join the forces that are searching for peace through dialogue and negotiations.

Truth and justice are on the side of Nicaragua. This, despite the suffering and sacrifice we are forced to endure our spirit remains undaunted, for into the future we see our Nation standing tall among the free peoples of the world, proud to recount the history of the Nicaraguans who today are defending the independence, sovereignty and dignity of the Nation.

TRIBUTE TO GEORGIA NATIONAL HISTORY DAY WINNERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to acknowledge and recognize to my colleagues in the House of Representatives, several outstanding young people from the Third Congressional District of Georgia who were participants in the National History Day Finalist Competition held at the University of Maryland.

Laura Shepherd, Allison Ma'luf, Nell Ma'luf, and Ruth Ann Smrekar were the students from the Troup County school system of Lagrange who placed second at the State History Day competition held in Georgia.

Danny Knight, a Troup High School sophomore, also won State honors for the second time in the second place category. This distinguished young man is one of the select few who will attend the Governors's honors program which is a highly competitive and outstanding achievement to attain in Georgia.

I am exceedingly proud of these gifted and talented young people who have been inspired and guided by the dedication and enthusiasm of their respective parents and teachers. With the recent criticism of our Nation's educational system, I am proud to point to these exceptional products of Georgia's schools. This is evident in their determination and aspirations of excellence. It is these characteristics which resulted in Ruth Ann Smrekar, Allison Ma'luf and Nell Ma'luf receiving medals as the outstanding State entry during the national competition with their interpretation of the signing of the Magna Carta. These students from West Side Junior High School were named best of Georgia's 28 nonplacing entries. I am especially pleased that Jennifer Bunyea from Fort Benning, GA, won first place in the State of Georgia with an essay entitled "The Personal Conflict of a Confederate Soldier During the Civil War." This young lady captured the struggles and triumphs of a man dealing with his conscious decisions of right and wrong, his responsibilities to himself and to this Nation.

As Members of Congress who share those same considerations today, we must make decisions on the issues of tax reform, the national deficit, Contra aid, and apartheid in South Africa. We have the obligation of representing to the entire world, our ideals of democracy and humanitarianism.

My colleagues, I urge you to take a moment, if you will, to read this excellent essay by Jennifer Bunyea. I know that in reading it myself, it has given me the added determination to meet the challenges of the issues at hand with decisive decisionmaking and positive solutions. Because of this essay by Jennifer, my fellow colleagues, I challenge each one of you to be a dedicated "soldier" who protects, defends, and benefits this Nation and the world.

THE PERSONAL CONFLICTS OF A CONFEDERATE SOLDIER DURING THE CIVIL WAR

(By Jennifer Bunyea, Grade 8, Junior Division, Don C. Faith Middle School, Fort Benning, GA)

Throughout history, soldiers have faced conflicts not only by facing the enemy, but by trying to survive day by day. Soldiers fighting for the Confederacy during the Civil War were no exception. J. Morgan Smith was a typical man who joined the Confederate Army to fight in a war he believed in until many personal conflicts arose that caused him to change his beliefs.

Smith joined the Mobile Cadets in 1860 upon coming home from the University of Georgia where he had not yet completed his education. On August 19, 1863 he married Kate Duncan. It was through his numerous letters to his beloved Kate that Smith was able to chronicle the changes he experienced as he fought for the Confederacy during the Civil War.

The Confederate soldiers suffered many hardships and conquered many conflicts to fight for the South and the ideas they believed in. Some of these hardships were results of mud, cold, and rain. The soldiers suffered some hardships from the mud. Marching was difficult because their boots would sink in the mud and make the soldiers march slowly. When the wind blew, mud would fly and hit them in the face.

The soldiers also suffered discomforts from the cold. Their clothing was not very thick and the freezing wind penetrated it. The soldiers did not have any sources of heat and their only comfort from the cold was a bed. Smith, too, suffered from the cold. He wrote letters to his wife, Kate, which revealed the agony of this freezing weather. He stated, "It is snowing very hard. My hands are cold and I have no other table to write upon except my knee." In yet another letter Smith combined his discomfort with the serious feelings of commitment he felt for the Southern cause:

"Tis a cold, chilly, rainy day. The wind whistles wildly by our little cabin, and as the rain patters upon its roof and sometimes upon the floor it forcibly reminds me of my present hardships—my past pleasures. But still I am not unhappy. Nay, I rather love these toils and hardships; for the more we endure, the more troubles and vexations that we have to encounter while we battle for freedom and our just rights, will make the cup of Liberty—when it is gained—taste the sweeter and will make us love our glorious country better, aye, better still."

In addition, the soldiers also suffered discomforts from the rain when marching. The rain made everything wet that the soldiers were carrying. The rain was even more uncomfortable than the cold weather.

There were three main things that defeated soldiers during the Civil War; illness, starvation, and death. Every day the soldiers fought all three in addition to the Union enemy. Disease was spread very quickly during the Civil War. Often times it was disease rather than bullets which killed able-bodied men. The diseases could not be treated adequately because there were not enough facilities to treat all the sick men. In addition, the sanitary conditions were not good. Many times the solidiers would get very sick and have extremely high fevers from marching in the cold.

In October of 1863 Smith developed a very serious illness. His congestion of the brain, commonly called brain fever, kept Smith off the lines for approximately one month. Because of his commitment to the Confederate cause, Smith found out where his regiment was and headed to camp as soon as he was well enough to travel.

Starvation, too, caused many soldiers to become sick and die. "Meat is a rarity we seldom indulge in. At breakfast our fare is green corn and corn bread; dinner, corn bread and green corn; supper, corn bread. Water too is scarcer than fine wines used to be." Malnutrition was wide-spread and many soldiers became sick. Some soldiers even resorted to stealing food.

Death was a conflict that caused J. Morgan Smith, and indeed most soldiers, to be gloomy and sad throughout the war. Thousands of men died on the battlefields during the Civil War and some of them Smith knew. As the war progressed Smith noted, "I never believed that any one could become so careless of death as we have all become." Many of the men were greatly demoralized and lost confidence in their success.

Although Smith did get depressed, he hoped he would never die and leave Kate a widow. Neither did he believe in giving up. Smith wrote to Kate in 1862, "If I fall I will carry your image with me and like Napoleon of old my last thought will be of her I love."

Many of the conflicts soldiers faced were caused by their consciences. The soldiers' consciences told them why they were fighting the war and what their beliefs were. Soldiers constantly found themselves mentally debating whether the Confederate cause was right or wrong. Many times a soldier in the Confederacy would have to fight against his brother in the Union. This caused great psychological conflict because the men wondered whether they were doing the right thing by fighting against their brothers.

Some Confederate soldiers wondered if they were fighting for the right side. Smith related in a letter to Kate a that friend of his, a preacher, joined the Confederate Army.

"But in fighting for us he felt he was doing wrong—that it was against his conscience. He endeavored to make his escape to the Yankees but was caught by our pickets and brought back. He is to be court martialed and in all probability will be shot."

It was believed that the preacher was then shot. This man paid the price of his life because he reacted to the conflict within his conscience when it told him that what he was doing was wrong.

J. Morgan Smith did not believe in giving up, but he did not want to be away from his wife. This became the major conflict in his life. He believed in the cause that he was fighting for until he was married in 1863. This caused many problems because he could not be at home to protect his beloved Kate if the Yankees were to come and raid the town. Smith stated, "I don't care much if they take everything so they will not harm or touch my precious Katie."

Loneliness was one of the major conflicts in J. Morgan Smith's life. It caused him to not want to fight, to be weary of the war, and to wish that he was dead. In September of 1864 Smith wrote to Kate:

"Oh, how willingly would I consent to live on corn bread crust if it could be sweetened by gazing on your dear face as I ate it. I sometimes get so gloomy and sad I almost wish I was dead, for life is nothing to me if I am to be separated from my heart's idol."

During the Civil War the soldiers moved around often and stayed in many different camps. For many soldiers it was hard breaking camp. They had to quickly pack up all of their items and say farewell to everything they had come to know. Camp would usually be a bustle while the soldiers were trying to get ready.

This added to the conflict in Smith's life because he wished to stay in a camp close to Kate. Unfortunately, the constant movement of his company prevented it. When Smith first became a Confederate soldier he was very happy about any of his orders because he was not married. But after two years of getting new orders, constant movement, and then his marriage to a woman he loved deeply, Smith wrote, "I cease to be excited now at any order and pay as little attention to the whistling of a bullet as I used to the breaking of a stick beneath my foot."

J. Morgan Smith wrote of his loneliness to Kate Duncan throughout the time he served as a Confederate soldier. He wrote many letters to her. "When writing to you I forget all around me and of course everything that tends to make me melancholy passes from my mind." Whenever he thought of her he wrote a letter to her—whether, in the tranches with shells continually exploding all around him, on the train to a new destination, or in the bare, uncomfortable camps.

Smith loved to receive letters from Kate. He wrote to her:

"Write soon if not disagreeable to you for you have no idea how much a letter from a friend serves to diminish the unbearable monotony of camp life. . . . But now the anticipation of receiving your letters will dispel the gloom of the future and make the present more cheerful."

Her letters brightened his day by telling him how she was doing and what was happening in those "dark days of sorrow and death." He always appreciated hearing about his old friends and her brother John with whom he became good friends.

J. Morgan Smith bore all the sufferings of the Civil War only by hooping that one day he would be reunited with his Kate. Smith wrote:

"I begin to realize now the glorious privilege of living in the same house with those we love. . . . To sleep beneath the shelter of the same roof, to meet morn, noon and evening around the same board; to converse familiarly by the same fire side; to share the same sorrows and pleasures is my ideal of true, earthly happiness."

Many men were bitter that they had to leave their loved ones to become soldiers. Smith did not feel that way when he entered the Confederate Army. In 1862 he wrote to Kate:

"If I fall it will be on Southern soil, under a Southern flag and fighting for Southern honor and Southern independence. If I conquer your heart will be gladdened by knowing that I fought bravely and gallantly."

Through all the hardships, though, he was not unhappy because he had Kate, whom he loved more than his own life and treasured like a precious jewel. Smith resolved that if they were ever to be finally reunited, he would never "go out of the house unless forced to do so."

Smith had tried many times to get an application for a leave of absence—that chance to go see Kate and his old friends in Summerfield. But he was never granted his leave. He felt life was nothing without being able to see her and hear her voice. Since he was not able to be near her, he "looked forward to the future with sadness and to the past with regret." While stationed in Atlanta, Smith even tried to transfer to Talledega to be near Kate. But he was not to be granted the transfer he so deeply wanted. It was not until Lee's surrender at Appomattox that Smith would finally be on his way home to his beloved Kate.

Today in the 1980's we have realized through Smith's numerous letters to his dear wife, Kate, that life for soldiers in the Confederate Army was really no different than today. Those soldiers faced many physical, psychological, and emotional conflicts. Smith faced all of the conflicts gallantly. But, ultimately, Smith had to compromise. He gave up the life with Kate that he wanted so badly in order to support the Southern cause he believed in so deeply.

INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS CAN BE SAVED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KLECZKA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, the bad news is that individual retirement accounts are under attack.

The good news is that this House can save them.

The attack on IRA's comes from the other body.

It has approved a tax bill which disallows the deduction for IRA contributions by most potential participants.

While the other body's tax bill has many fine features, it is way off base on IRA's. Now is not the time to discourage retirement savings by millions of Americans.

The House bill, which generally retains current law on IRA's, is right on the money.

It does what most Americans would have Congress do about IRA's. It leaves them alone.

If the Senate provisions prevail, IRA's as we know them will cease to exist.

It doesn't have to happen.

I am pleased to report that 54 Members of this House have joined me in sending a letter to House tax bill conferees which strongly urges that the House position on IRA's be upheld and that the Senate proposal to gut IRA's be rejected.

We can win this one if we stick to our guns. I urge the House conferees to reject the Senate proposals on IRA's.

THE SATELLITE HOME VIEWER ACT OF 1986

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, today I join with three respected members of my subcommittee, Congressman MIKE SYNAR, Congressman RICK BOUCHER, and Congressman CARLOS MOORHEAD, as well as Congressman TIM WIRTH, in introducing the Satellite Home Viewer Act of 1986. This legislation amends the Copyright Act of 1976 to provide for the temporary compulsory licensing of the secondary transmission by satellite carriers of superstations for private viewing by Earth station [TVRO] owners.

In brief, the proposed legislation adds a new section 119 to the Copyright Act, creating a system by which scrambled superstation signals can be transmitted by common carriers, through distributors, to Earth station owners. The bill balances the rights of copyright owners, by ensuring payment for use of their property rights, with the rights of satellite dish owners, by assuring availability at reasonable rates of retransmitted television signals. The bill is novel in its approach: It creates a compulsory licensing system during a 4-year period with copyright royalty rates established by a mathematical formula; during a second 4-year period, rates are set by negotiation and binding arbitration. After 8 years, the entire legislative package is terminated by a sunset provision. The parties undoubtedly will report back to Congress on the success or failure of this two-phase plan. In the meantime, an exciting new communication technology—satellite Earth stations—will be allowed to develop assuming, of course, that the parameters of the copyright law are respected.

The legislation only addresses the issue of the retransmission of superstation signals by common carriers and the delivery of these signals—in a scrambled or encrypted state—to Earth station owners.

The legislation is the outgrowth of a hearing held in November 1985 by my subcommittee—the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice, which has jurisdiction over copyright law—on "Copyright Issues Arising From New Communications Technologies." Building upon the firm foundation set by that hearing, I wrote to the Register of Copyrights—Ralph Oman—asking that he analyze the application of the Copyright Act on scrambling and on the prospective sale or leasing of descrambling devices to satellite dish owners.

The Copyright Act currently provides an exemption from liability for secondary transmissions of copyrighted works for passive carriers where the carrier "has no direct or indirect control over the content or selection of the primary transmission, or over the particular recipients of the secondary transmission * * *." Also, the carrier's activities with regard to the secondary transmission must "consist solely of providing wires, cables, or other communications channels for the use of others * * *."

In his response—dated March 17, 1986—to me, Mr. Oman set forth his preliminary judgment that the sale or licensing of descrambling devices to satellite Earth station owners by common carrier falls outside the purview of the copyright exemption granted passive carriers for secondary transmissions of copyrighted works, particularly when the carrier itself scrambles the signal.

"The exemption failing," Mr. Oman concluded, "the resale carrier requires the consent of the copyright owner of the underlying programming."

A recent letter, dated May 1, 1986, from Alfred C. Sikes, Assistant Secretary for Communication and Information, U.S. Department of Commerce, seconded the Register's conclusion about scrambling, descrambling, and sale of scrambled signals.

Although the issues may sound legalistic and esoteric, they can be distilled to the following proposition: under present copyright law, common carriers cannot lease or sell descrambling devices and then sell scrambled superstation signals to Earth station owners. Since the combination of these functions is far more active than the passive function of providing wires, cables, and other communications channels, the carriers would lose their unique status in the copyright law if they engaged in the described activities.

At least one common carrier—Southern Satellite which delivers WTBS—has already cogently presented this position to the Subcommittee on Telecommunications, Consumer Protection and Finance of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce.

* * * if Southern Satellite delivered WTBS to the backyard dish user there is no provision in the law for a copyright royalty payment to the copyright owner. Although it could be argued that since Southern Satellite is a common carrier and since the TVRO dish owner uses the signal for purely private viewing, there is no copyright liability. However, that position runs directly contrary to the philosophy of § 111 of the Copyright Act and as a result we believe that it is a very tenuous position.

I thank Congressman TIM WIRTH, chairman of the Subcommittee on Telecommunications, for initially bringing that testimony to my attention.

In drafting curative legislation, my subcommittee worked closely not only with the three current common carriers—Southern Satellite, United Video, and Eastern Microwave—and with active superstations [WTBS] but also with representatives of the movie industry and the Earth station industry. The subcommittee also has consulted with interested parties in both the cable television and broadcasting industries. Last, the Copyright Office has been of great assistance in the drafting process.

It is my strong desire that the bill we have introduced today will spark debate and encourage all affected parties to work toward passage of a public law prior to the end of the 99th Congress.

The task of preparing the bill has been time-consuming and difficult. The proposed legislation reflects the same collision course of intellectual property law and technological change that was recently highlighted in a recent Office of Technology Assessment report on "Intellectual Property Rights in an Age of Electronics and Information" (1986). That report flashes a yellow light; it sounds a note of caution to those who would rush headlong toward legislation. The OTA report warns that the delineation of new rights in a changing technological environment is not an easy task. I believe that the Satellite Home Viewer Act of 1986 does proceed with caution through the yellow light and an intersection of many interested parties.

The proposal has not been subjected to public debate. And it has not undergone congressional hearings in the competition of ideas. Since hearings will not be held until after the July 4 recess, I hope that individuals and organizations interested by the bill will continue to work together to refine its provisions.

For example, there has been interest expressed by some parties that the number of superstation signals that might benefit from this legislation should be restricted. Another concern has been expressed that only distributors—and not common carriers—should be authorized to sell scrambled signals.

Since I have not had a chance to discuss pertinent issues with some individuals and organizations, I look forward to receiving comments from them. I would be especially interested in hearing views on the temporary compulsory licensing provisions of the bill, on the length of time for the licensing system to flourish, on the negotiation and binding arbitration provisions, and finally on the initial interface with cable television.

I urge my colleagues to join with me, Congressman SYNAR, Congressman BOUCHER, and Congressman MOORHEAD. Members who desire to cosponsor or want further information, should address their inquiries to the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice—X53926.

Thank you, in advance, for your interest in and support for the Satellite Home Viewer Act of 1986.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce today, along with my colleagues, Congressmen KASTENMEIER and SYNAR, the Satellite Home Viewer Act of 1986. This bill should go a long way in helping to achieve the goal of the Telecommunications Subcommittee, which I chair, to assure access by satellite dish owners to programming at competitive rates. I want to commend the efforts of Messrs. KASTENMEIER and SYNAR in working with me and the various affected interests to craft this legislation.

The subcommittee has been conducting an intensive examination of the satellite dish issue. As part of this effort, it became apparent that access to so-called "superstation" signals—such as Ted Turner's WTBS and Tribune's WGN and WPIX—might not be available to dish owners once these services were scrambled, because of legal impediments in the Copyright Act. Thus, as these services commence scrambling, the Nation's 2 million dish owners will not be able to receive these popular services unless the copyright law is amended to allow scrambled superstation signals to be marketed to the backyard dish owner.

While scrambling is an important way to assure programmers receive compensation for their property, scrambling of signals in a way which blocks access to programming by dish owners is not good public policy. That is why passage of this bill is a very important part of our efforts to solve the problems which now face the satellite dish consumer.

While the Telecommunications Subcommittee continues to focus on the principal communications issue of assuring the availability of program packages as a key way of lowering the price of satellite services to dish owners, I am very gratified that under the leadership of Congressman KASTENMEIER, the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties, and the Administration of Justice, is attempting to resolve the copyright aspects of the satellite dish issue.

While I believe it may be necessary to make a few changes to this legislation, the bill provides a very constructive basis for assuring continued access by dish owners to superstation signals.

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join Representative KASTENMEIER, chairman of the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice, in introducing the Satellite Home Viewer Act of 1986.

This legislation is needed because as superstation signals are scrambled, current copyright law will prevent these signals from being sold to home dish owners.

There are three satellite carriers which relay broadcast distant signals—superstations—to cable systems nationwide. The cable systems generally sell these signals to viewers as part of cable programming packages. Cable viewers pay for the cable service and the cable systems pay a copyright fee for the use of the programming.

The three satellite carriers are exempt from copyright liability for transmission of these signals as long as they exercise "* * * no direct or indirect control over the content or selection of the primary transmission or over the particular recipients of the secondary transmission * * *." 17 U.S.C. 111(a)(3).

The satellite carriers intend to scramble distant signals in the near future. They are concerned that they are losing some of their market because home Earth station owners can pick up the satellite signals directly. Earth station owners are concerned that scrambling will make progamming inaccessible. The satellite carriers want to sell directly to Earth station viewers, but recent interpretations of title 17 suggest that they would lose their exemption from copyright liability if they attempted to do so.

The Satellite Home Viewer Act of 1986 creates a compulsory license for distant broadcast signals from satellite carriers, which will guarantee the right of Earth station owners to receive these signals. The bill also clarifies the legal status of satellite carriers to sell distant signals.

The satellite carriers may sell distant signals to Earth station owners through a distributor, which could be an Earth station dealer, a cable operator, or any other business which has access to a minimum number of subscribers. The bill creates a cause of action for copyright infringement if a satellite carrier discriminates against any distributor.

Satellite carriers will be liable for a copyright royalty fee of 12 cents, per signal, per month for each home dish subscriber. This fee will be paid to the Copyright Office, which will divide the money among those programmers whose work is included in the programs that are retransmitted by satellite carrier. Any satellite carrier may negotiate a voluntary rate with the copyright owners. This rate would supplant the statutory rate.

The 12-cent royalty fee established by this bill expires on December 31, 1990. At that time, the rate is replaced with either a voluntary rate, agreed to by the satellite carriers and the copyright owners, or a rate reached through binding arbitration. The legislation establishes the procedure through which a fee is established by an arbitration panel.

The Register of Copyrights has the authority to reject the rate established by the arbitration panel if that rate clearly is inconsistent with the criteria established in the bill. The Register must then establish within 30 days an alternative royalty fee consistent with those criteria. Any decision made by the Register with respect to a determination made by the arbitration panel may be appealed to Federal court.

The act expires on December 31, 1994.

A number of issues remain to be resolved as this bill is considered by the Judiciary Committee. First, it must be determined whether satellite carriers should be allowed to sell directly to home dish owners. Most satellite carriers have expressed no interest in selling programming directly, and intend instead to market through distributors. Distributors will be able to package a variety of signals, which will result in increased competition in the retailing of signals for home dish viewing. It is unclear whether there is any need to allow satellite signals to sell individual distant signals. Such language may undermine the passive exemption that satellite common carriers enjoy under the copyright law.

Second, it will be necessary to determine the appropriate date to sunset this legislation. The home dish industry is in an infant stage, and it is clear that we should not create a permanent structure for the delivery and payment of distant signals for home dish viewing. We believe that 8 years will be sufficient to allow the home dish industry to develop. At that time, Congress will be required to reconsider this issue and determine the extent, if any, of Government involvement that is needed in this area.

This legislation is the result of extensive negotiations with the satellite carriers, copyright owners, home dish representatives, and others. It represents a good compromise of numerous competing interests, and I am hopeful that it will be enacted into law during this session of Congress. It is important that Congress ensure the availability of superstation signals for home dish viewing. This bill accomplishes that goal, while also establishing the framework for the development of healthy competition in this industry.

ACID RAIN LEGISLATION H.R. 4567, ROUNDLY CRITICIZED AT HEARINGS BY ENERGY CONSERVATION POWER SUBCOMMITTEE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, like my colleagues, I received a letter from Mr. Richard Ayres, chairman of the National Clean Air Coalition who urged me to:

Please contact Committee Chairman JOHN D. DINGELL and ranking member JAMES BROYHILL to urge them to immediately mark up H.R. 4567. Please cosponsor H.R. 4567 if you have not already done so.

Mr. Ayres properly noted that H.R. 4567 was "passed" by a vote of 16–9 on May 20, 1986 by the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment of our committee. But he failed to note that the bill was substantially amended in that subcommittee. He also did not mention that on June 19 and 20, 1986, the Subcommittee on Energy Conservation and Power of our committee with expertise in electric utility matters and chaired by our distinguished colleague from Massachusetts, ED MARKEY, held hearings on the bill. Those hearings were quite comprehensive and revealing.

Mr. Ayres also states:

This bill combines nationwide air pollution controls with a national financing plan designed to ease the burden of cleanup costs on the most affected states. States would have the flexibility to establish their own cleanup strategies to reduce total nationwide sulfur emissions by 9 million tons annually. Contrary to utility industry estimates, the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment estimates that the average residential electric consumer would have to pay only 2 to 3 percent ($1 to $1.50) more per month to clean up acid rain—which is about the price of buying one or two Sunday newspapers.

Mr. Ayres, however, did not mention that the Tennessee Valley Authority [TVA], while supporting the need for acid rain legislation, strongly objected to the provisions of the amended H.R. 4567. TVA called the so-called national financing plan—extolled by Mr. Ayres—as "unworkable." TVA said:

H.R. 4567 is a complex bill: The meaning and potential effects of many of its provisions are uncertain;

H.R. 4567 unnecessarily reduces flexibility and increases compliance costs for TVA on the order of $100 million annually;

TVA is particularly concerned that the use of averaged, State-wide emission rates as the compliance benchmark, while more desirable than individual unit emission limitations, would preclude achieving reductions through such measures as conservation and the use of alternative energy sources;

Under H.R. 4567, States with large amounts of oil- and gas-fired generation would be put in a more favored position than those States with large amounts of coal-fired generation;

The timing of some H.R. 4567's requirements pertaining to phase II would be largely unworkable.

Under the bill, capital costs of about $2 billion and annual costs for amortization, operation and maintenance, and low-sulfur coal premium cost, ranging from $575 million to $660 million, would be incurred; and

The increase in TVA's average residential, industrial, and commercial rates resulting from the bil is roughly estimated to be 12 to 14 percent which would be in addition to the $300 million in annual costs, that TVA is presently incurring for SO_2 reductions under the Clean Air Act.

Mr. Ayres also did not mention that at the June 19 and 20 hearings, the American Public Power Association, the National Rural Electric Cooperatives Association, and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission [FERC] all testified that the bill's new provisions trampled heavily on the unregulated municipals and cooperatives in unprecedented fashion and was inconsistent with the provisions of the Federal Power Act and the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978.

Mr. Ayres did not mention that several State public utility Commission Members from Indiana, West Virginia, Alabama, Wisconsin, and Rhode Island were critical of the amended bill and several called it an intrusion on States' rights. Indeed, the Chairman of the Indiana Commission said:

Section 187(d) of H.R. 4567—This new subsection gives us a great deal of concern. This subsection requires the Governor of the State to assure that electric utility rate increases attributable to compliance under section 181 are substantially equivalent for residential electric utility ratepayers throughout the State. Present Indiana law (IC 8-1-2-4) requires that ratepayers can be charged only for facilities which are used and useful to the benefit of those ratepayers. Therefore, the ratepayers of one utility cannot pay for the cost attributable to rendering service to the ratepayers of another utility. Therefore, the Governor of Indiana could not provide the assurance required by subsection 187(d)(1).

The Rhode Island Commissioner was particularly critical of a provision that precludes any utility from sharing in the subsidy benefits—even though its ratepayers contributed money to the subsidy—if the utility challenges in any way the "validity or application" of any provision of the bill dealing with this emission program and wins or loses. He said it is an unfair provision and inconsistent with our system of justice and fairness.

Accompanying Mr. Ayres' letter, is a list of the National Clean Air Coalition member organizations, which includes the American Lung Association [ALA]. However, he failed to mention that on May 23, 1986, the ALA also wrote to me about this bill.

In that letter, the ALA did not endorse H.R. 4567, urge me to support it, or to schedule a markup. Instead, ALA urged strengthening of the current National Ambient Air Quality Standard [NAAQS] for sulfur dioxide "in order to insure protection against adverse health effects in the United States." The ALA also stressed:

The ALA continues to support this mechanism. Many members of the ALA's medical section, the American Thoracic Society, conduct the principal research which provides the basis for setting standards. ALA firmly believes that when considering mechanisms to protect sensitive populations—in the case of sulfur dioxide it is asthmatics and persons with hypersensitivity—the NAAQS program is an essential mechanism. H.R. 4567 would not reduce the need for adoption of a short-term standard for sulfur oxides.

Most importantly, the ALA's legislative agenda and priority for the Clean Air Act appears to differ from that of Mr. Ayres. The ALA letter states:

Review of the Clean Air Act and Need for Changes Beyond the Scope of H.R. 4567.

ALA has been concerned for some time that Congress has not addressed the reauthorization of the Clean Air Act from a comprehensive point of view. To maintain a balanced, effective air pollution control program, the Committee should consider a comprehensive review and reauthorization of the Clean Air Act. We believe that there are several provisions of the Act with significant public health benefits which should receive the attention of Congress. First and foremost is the nonattainment program. The Clean Air Act contains a series of deadlines for the attainment of the NAAQS, the last being December 31, 1987. Currently, EPA projects that between 32-45 areas of the country will not meet the deadline for ozone. We believe that Congress should review the nonattainment program requirements and provide for a program for current nonattainment areas to ensure that these areas are required to develop adequate programs to attain the NAAQS as rapidly as possible. Over 80 million people reside in nonattainment areas, with approximately 20 percent considered to be in sensitive populations as defined in the NAAQS provisions. We understand that the EPA is developing a program, "Reasonable Extra Efforts Program," to address the current nonattainment problems. EPA's approach fails to insure that these problems will be resolved promptly and consistently across the country. Accordingly, this public health problem should be dealt with legislatively and not administratively as EPA is planning to do.

A second area of concern is the need for changes in section 112 for the control of hazardous air pollutants. The mechanism currently in the Act has not worked as Congress had intended. Substantial delays in the listing and standard development process have plagued this program. The problems have been well identified in previous House and Senate hearings. Rather than accepting EPA's very limited approach to addressing this public health problem, Congress should, as part of a comprehensive reauthorization activity, revise this program to provide for a more timely process for listing and standard development.

I note that none of these matters are addressed in H.R. 4567.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Office of Technology Assessment witness at the Markey hearings testified that the annual bill for electric utility ratepayers—residential, industrial, and commercial—in the United States for SO_2 controls only would range between $2.7 to $3.6 billion, 1985 dollars over 20 years—with a default cost of $4.2 billion per year. That is no small change.

OTA also showed that under phase I of the bill, 14 States—Alabama, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, New Hampshire, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, West Virginia, and Wisconsin—get "hammered" by 1993, while all the other States are unaffected, except by the subsidy, until 1997, even though many, like Florida, New York, Michigan, Massachusetts, and Minnesota, also contribute to the acid rain problem today.

Mr. Speaker, my sentiments about this bill and its future progress are stated in my June 24 letter to the Governor of Indiana as follows:

It is clearly my desire to work with Chairmen WAXMAN and MARKEY and Ranking Minority Members MADIGAN and MOORHEAD and the other Members of the Committee, including our distinguished Indiana Members, PHIL SHARP and DAN COATS, to fashion a fair and reasonable bill that protects jobs and does not pit region against region. In this regard, I share the views of Congressman SWIFT who stated last week at the excellent and helpful hearings held by Chairman MARKEY that acid rain is a problem that should be dealt with, but also this must be achieved without causing economic distress, especially for the 14 states heavily affected in phase I of H.R. 4567, most of which are in the Midwest and the South.

One of the real sticking points is, of course, the "national cost sharing" provisions of the bill. The sponsors agree that such cost sharing is needed. But the "compromise" contains so many strings and affects so many Federal and state laws and long-held ratemaking policies and practices, that it has caused many, including Tennessee Valley Authority, American Public Power Association, and the Electric Cooperatives to declare it "unworkable" and to actively oppose the bill.

Because our emission levels are already low, the only effect Michigan and many other states will have under phase I (other than the impacts on our auto-truck industry which I and others on the committee cannot support), is to contribute money to the national subsidy fund. But I cannot vote to commit my state's ratepayers to an unworkable and complicated scheme that does not protect jobs. Like many states in the West, including Washington, Michigan is not enamored with making any contribution. But, as Congressman SWIFT observed, this is a national, not a regional, problem and it is not in the national interest to impose heavy costs on the Midwest or the South simply because they do not have cheaper hydro power or Canadian power or alternative sources and they have an abundance of high sulfur coal and many old power plant units.

There needs to be a real balance, not only in cost sharing, but also in adopting measures that will not "hammer" a few states before they have an opportunity to use new retrofit technologies where appropriate. More time is needed to help fashion the least cost approach without serious effects on jobs. There is no "magic" in 1993 or 1997, but both dates appear to ensure that a utility's choices will be scrubbers or coal or fuel switching. Greater equity is needed in the first phase. Recognition of technology problems in regard to NOx controls for utilities that now use cyclone methods is needed, and, like Wisconsin, there must be recognition that emergencies and other events occur in utility operations.

Hopefully, all of us working together in a spirit of accommodation and national interest will be able to fashion a fair and reasonable bill that builds on H.R. 4567, that is a true compromise, and that will enjoy more than just a majority of the Committee Members, including those from Indiana and other states in the Midwest and the South. That is my objective. I hope it is that of all others on the Committee. The Markey hearings last week may, in fact, have been the catalyst that will move us toward reaching that objective with greater ease. Indeed, unless we achieve that objective, resistance to the legislation will abound.

TRIBUTE TO STEVE PFISTER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, behind the scenes of any successful organization, there are a great many people who are not usually seen, who do not take the limelight, who are workers in the force or in the trenches, and the House of Representatives certainly is no exception to that rule.

There comes a time, however, especially when we have young, ambitious, very capable workers who support the activities of Members here and our functions, they have the opportunity to accept employment someplace else and make more money. This has been a proving ground for a great many people of this caliber.

Tonight, hopefully, this will be the last night of the session before the Fourth of July home district work period. We have a young man on the Republican side who will be leaving July 1 to accept a job in the private sector, a young man who came to us a few years ago and who had limited Government experience, but has done a tremendous job in supporting the Republicans and has worked in our cloak room for the past 3 years. This is Steve Pfister.

Steve is going to be most difficult to replace. We have a replacement already selected for Steve. Steve does leave not only a legacy here of a fine job in supporting Republican Members, but also the Democratic Members. We all necessarily sometimes have to get advice about what is in particular legislation. This is a resource that Members must depend upon, since Members are active in committee work and their office work and have to come to the floor in a hurry.

We are going to miss Steve very much. We do wish Steve much success as he moves into the private sector.

It is not going to be easy to replace Steve, but we have selected today Miss Joelle Hall, who has been working here as a bill clerk for quite some time, and Joelle will move into the position. Steve has filled.

Steve is, I think, here in the Chamber someplace. We do wish Steve much success, and we thank him for the years of dedicaton, for the extra effort and the number of hours that he has been away from his family. He is going to be a new father later this year, so lots of exciting things are happening for Steve Pfister.

So the Republican minority here, the Republican Members, who have taken Steve for granted, we do thank him very much for his service and wish him much success.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me, and for helping to remind the body of the dedicated service Steve Pfister has given to the minority over a period now of several years.

As the gentleman from Indiana has stated, he really is one of those people who works behind the scenes and who allows all of us to get our job done in a rather hectic atmosphere. The people who work in the cloak rooms for both parties are truly an invaluable aid to our getting our work done.

Steve has certainly been someone who has been relied upon by many, many Members as they come through here. I join the gentleman in congratulating him and wishing him well.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. I thank the gentleman for his kind remarks.

Everyone here certainly appreciates Steve.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, for the past 5 years Steve Pfister has served the Republican members of the House with great ability as assistant floor manager. His friendliness and competent work on our behalf has meant a great deal to our own work on behalf of our constituents and our country.

He and his lovely wife, Julie, are about to be proud parents and, simultaneously, Steve is leaving us for greener pastures with the National Retail Merchants Association.

Steve has served the Congress with honor and distinction, and I know I speak for all the Members in wishing Steve and Julie God's blessings upon their family and success in all they undertake.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in expressing our real appreciation to Steve Pfister, our assistant Republican floor manager, for the many ways he has been of help to us on the House floor, and to extend our best wishes upon his new career.

Steve's thoughtfulness and consideration have helped all of us perform our work in the House more efficiently and effectively. His vast knowledge of House procedure and his conscientious handling of the many details that are involved in the smooth functioning of the House have made him an invaluable aid to all of us.

Mr. Speaker, Steve's many talents will surely be missed by all of us. However, we all wish him well in the coming years.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on my special order today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR CHAIR TO DECLARE RECESSES ON TODAY

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Chair be permitted to declare recesses for any time this evening up to 9:45 p.m.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

EXPAND THE AGRICULTURE EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, tonight I would like to speak very briefly on the need to expand the agricultural export enhancement program.

The U.S. agriculture exports are at their lowest level in several years, 26 percent behind last year. There seems to be a growing inconsistency between USDA rhetoric and actions to promote agriculture exports. The main tool which the Reagan administration is relying upon to spur exports are the lowering of commodity loan rates and export promotion. The 1985 farm bill gives USDA the authority to lower loan rates and the necessary tools to expand our export markets through the export enhancement program, also known as the Export PIK Program.

However, there has been a far less ambiguous attitude by the USDA to apply our export programs and the export PIK. Rather than use export PIK across the board to include all customers of the United States, especially such good traditional customers like the Soviet Union and Nigeria, to name just two of the larger importers of U.S. grain, export PIK has instead been used only on a targeted basis to take away markets from our major competitors, and it has been done with very mixed results at times and, in other cases, with very detrimental results.

The Nigerians ask some hard questions that I think are impossible to answer appropriately. They ask why we, as good U.S. customers, paying cash on the barrelhead, have to pay more, in effect, for the grain we import from the United States than the countries of North Africa where we are using the export enhancement program or the Export PIK Program to take away those markets from European competitors.

I do not think there is a good answer to that. In the process, we are alienating the Nigerians, very good grain customers for the United States.

The Soviet Union, on the other hand, has long hinted that if the United States would offer their grain on the same terms it is offering to other countries under export PIK, they would buy more grain from the United States. While we have succeeded in taking back some of the lost markets in Algeria, Turkey and Egypt, we have offended and lost markets in other areas of the world.

From the Soviet perspective, Export PIK sets the world price, so if they do not qualify for Export PIK, they are then forced to pay a premium price for U.S. grain according to their logic, and I suggest to you that logic is correct.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in pushing the administration to expand Export PIK or the Export Enhancement Program for across-the-board coverage for all of our grain customers. The pending House trade bill in one of the provisions that is good in it for agriculture, would require such action and the 1985 farm bill gives the USDA authority to do so.

Let us get the administration to move on our surplus grain problems now. Here is one way to do it. Let us expand the Export PIK Program to make it available to our traditional customers as well.

SALUTE TO CHARLIE ROSE AND BILL THOMAS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] will be recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to address this packed House to call attention to some especially meritorious service provided to the House by some of its Members.

Members may recall that our House telephone system is a very expensive one, and that it was getting to the limits of its ability and actually becoming obsolete in its ability to serve this House. About the time these facts came to light, the telephone systems of the United States were deregulated by court order. That meant that the House had to develop a new telephone system under a new, comprehensive contract with one of a number of entities anxious to provide services to the House.

The committee charged with this responsibility was the House Administration Committee under the leadership of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO]. Chairman ANNUNZIO and his committee designated the chairman of an appropriate subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROSE], and his ranking member, the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS], to handle all the planning and contracting for the new system.

These gentlemen began their investigation of our telephone system. They spent literally hundreds of hours giving close attention to the system and trying to determine what was the best contract for the House. Had we proceeded on our old spending track for the next 10 years in the future, the House's cost would have been somewhere in the midfifties of millions of dollars; actually about $56 million. Now that is a little bit of a fake number, because we would not have, in any case, continued under the old track. We had to change that track because of deregulation.

However, due to the diligence and extraordinary ability of the two gentleman, Mr. ROSE and Mr. THOMAS of California, we are about to sign a contract with a contractor for a service system which we believe will do a good deal more for us than our current system, and which will be expandable into the services and technologies of the future and which will preserve our abilities to call our various districts as we need to call them.

It will do so at a total price, over 10 years, which will be less than half of the baseline price that it would have cost this House had we continued under the old system.

Almost more important than that, the House has, over the years, seen its telephone records be subpoenaed in such a way that the House has been unaware that its personal records have been turned over to various agencies of Government.

Once we get our new system into operation, we will own the data. We will not have to respond to subpoenas unless we choose to, and our telephone data will be our private information as I believe it should be. There is very little more privileged information than the telephone calls which we make to our constituents.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. ROSE and Mr. THOMAS of California have undertaken this responsibility as a third or fourth or fifth corollary obligation. Both of them have important committee assignments on more than one committee, and yet they labored month after month after month, and together they have developed the new contract.

At the direction of the House Administration Committee, these two gentlemen yesterday directed the Clerk of the House to sign a contract for the new system. I think this is an extraordinary example of effective service by individual Members of the House who labor long and hard for the House, and who do so without forgetting the interests of our taxpaying constituents.

I salute Congressman CHARLIE ROSE and Congressman BILL THOMAS for this splendid achievement. I hope that Members of the House who also believe that their constitution has been extraordinary will stop them in the halls and applaud their work.

CHARLIE ROSE and BILL THOMAS, your colleagues salute your achievements for us and for our constituents. Well done, and many thanks!

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. CON. RES. 120, CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET, FISCAL YEAR 1987

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania submitted the following conference report and statement on the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 120) setting forth the congressional budget for the U.S. Government for the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989:

CONFERENCE REPORT (S. CON. RES. 120)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 120) setting forth the congressional budget for the United States Government for the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree on a conference report because the conference decisions have changed certain budget figures outside the scope of the conference. As set forth in the accompanying Joint Explanatory Statement, the conferees do propose a congressional budget incorporated in a further amendment for the consideration of the two Houses.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 120) setting forth the congressional budget for the United States Government for the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989, report that the conferees have been unable to agree. This is a technical disagreement, necessitated by the fact that in some instances the conference decisions include figures which (for purely technical reasons) would fall outside the range between the corresponding House and Senate provisions.

It is the intention of the conferees that the following amendment will be considered in the House and in the Senate.

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate submit the folllowing joint statement in explanation of the action agreed upon by the managers:

The substitute language which is to be offered (and which should be considered the language of the concurrent resolution as recommended in the conference report for purposes of section 302(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974)—hereinafter in this statement referred to as the "conference substitute"—is as follows:

That the Congress hereby determines and declares that the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1987 is established and the appropriate budgetary levels for fiscal years 1988 and 1989 are set forth.

(a) The following levels and amounts are set forth for purposes of determining, in accordance with section 301(i) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, as amended by the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, whether the maximum deficit amount for a fiscal year has been exceeded, and as set forth in this concurrent resolution shall be considered to be mathematically consistent with the other amounts and levels set forth in this concurrent resolution:

(1) The recommended levels of Federal revenues are as follows:
Fiscal year 1987: $852,400,000,000.
Fiscal year 1988: $929,750,000,000.
Fiscal year 1989: $1,001,100,000,000.

(2) The appropriate levels of total new budget authority are as follows:
